Mr. GUEVARA. No; those are matters completely disassociated from the question I am now discussing. I am basing my arguments upon the safety of the culture and civilization of the Filipinos, built up during the last 300 years.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUEVARA. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. The Philippine Islands formerly did a large coconut-oil business with the United States, did they not?

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes.

Mr. KENNEY. Does the Delegate from the Philippine Islands happen to know how much that business has fallen off during the last year?

Mr. GUEVARA. I suppose about 25 percent.

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KOPPLEMANN). Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from the Philippine Islands?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUEVARA. President McKinley, in the speech delivered at the Eleventh Annual Banquet of the Home Market Club, Boston, Mass., February 16, 1899, said in the exposition of the motives of the occupation of the Philippines:

> The evolution of events which no man could control has brought these problems upon us. Certain it is that they have not come through any fault on our part, but as a high obligation, and we meet them with clear conscience and unselfish purpose, and with good heart resolve to undertake their solution.

He continued, saying:

> The Philippines, like Cuba and Puerto Rico, were intrusted to our hands by the war, and to that great trust, under the providence of God and in the name of human progress and civilization, we are committed. It is a trust we have not sought; it is a trust from which we will not flinch.

Will the American people flinch from the trust that they voluntarily assumed?

Within a few months the Philippine commonwealth will be inaugurated and a home rule will be established therein. The success of this commonwealth will entirely depend upon the help that the United States chooses to lend. It can only be successful, and therefore the aims and purposes of the Tydings-McDuffie law accomplished, if the American people, considering the mutual advantage that will result from the continuation of the existing free-trade relations, will forget the demands of sectional selfish interests and consider the weal of the United States.

May I be permitted to assure this House again that the Filipino people are determined to stand by the United States in any emergency that may arise in the future? God forbid that such an emergency may ever arise. But the course of human events is something that is beyond the control of any nation.

In concluding I wish to call the attention of this House to the bill introduced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE], H. R. 3482, the passage of which is of vital importance at this time. I appeal particularly to the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McSWAIN], and the members of the committee to consider its urgency and recommend that the bill be passed at the earliest possible date.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUEVARA. I yield.

Mr. WELCH. What is the purpose of the bill to which the gentleman has referred?

Mr. GUEVARA. The effect of the bill is to include the Philippine Islands as one of those countries which the United States may aid in matters of national defense.

Mr. WELCH. Since when did the gentleman change his views with reference to Philippine independence?

Mr. GUEVARA. I have not changed my opinion at all. I may say to the gentleman from California that my opinion goes along with the conditions and circumstances prevailing all over the world.

Mr. WELCH. But the gentleman was in favor of absolute independence at the time the Philippine-independence bill was before Congress.

Mr. GUEVARA. Of course; and so were the American people. I have not changed my mind; I have not changed my opinion, but I have to look to the future. I do want Philippine independence for the Filipino people, but not for the benefit of some other nation. I do not want Philippine independence to be a reason for some nation to gobble up the Philippines, and I know the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] does not want that, either.

Mr. WELCH. Did the gentleman not state, in answer to a question, that the Philippines would be better off under an American protectorate?

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes.

Mr. WELCH. How can they have complete independence while still retaining American protection?

Mr. GUEVARA. Why, it is much better than placing the Philippines under a neutralization treaty. A neutralization treaty should be negotiated by the President of the United States as provided for in the Tydings-McDuffie law to guarantee the independence of the Philippine Islands. After having seen the Kellogg Pact violated, after having seen the treaty creating the League of Nations violated, and after having seen other treaties violated, I am afraid that it will not work. The safety of the Philippine Islands rests upon being under an American protectorate.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUEVARA. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. I assume the gentleman wishes to see the same relationship established between the United States and the Philippines as now exists between the United States and Cuba?

Mr. GUEVARA. Yes; exactly. The same relationship as before the repeal of the Platt amendment.

Mr. WELCH. The representatives of the Philippine Islands did not ask for that. They were here pleading for complete independence.

Mr. GUEVARA. I assure the gentleman from California that if reversing my opinion and my stand will mean security for the Philippine Islands I will not hesitate to reverse my stand or my opinion.

Mr. WELCH. I desire to state that I have no quarrel with the gentleman with reference to his change of opinion or policy.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GUEVARA. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Would the gentleman place in the RECORD, if the facts are available, a statement showing the holdings of residents of different countries in the industries of the Philippine Islands?

Mr. GUEVARA. I shall be pleased to.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a statement concerning the Philippine sugar industry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Delegate from the Philippine Islands?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Speaker, the sugar industry, the premier industry in the Philippine Islands, in which $250,000,000 of private and government capital is invested, is at present finding itself in dire straits as a result of the operation of the Jones-Costigan Act.

During the past crop the Philippine Islands produced a total of 1,578,953 short tons of sugar, but under the Jones-Costigan Act the Philippine Islands were allowed to export to the United States only 1,015,186 short tons of sugar, leaving, after providing for local consumption, a surplus of around 475,000 tons, which amount was carried forward to this year's quota.

The Secretary of Agriculture has fixed the quota for the Philippine Islands for this year at 991,308 short tons, or a reduction of approximately 24,000 tons, compared with last year's quota; so that with the surplus of 475,000 short tons carried over from last year's crop, the Philippine Islands this year could only export to the United States approximately 500,000 short tons of sugar, or one-third of the crop produced last year. The effect of this enormous reduction in the production of our main industry is now causing great hardships and difficulties among our people, since some 2,000,000 people depend for their livelihood upon this industry and from which our government derives as much as 60 percent of its revenue.

Yet in spite of all these hardships and difficulties our people have not obstructed the administration in carrying out its sugar program as embodied in the Jones-Costigan Act, and have at all times cooperated with officials of the administration in bringing about the objective adjustments of the administration's sugar program in the Philippine Islands. The Philippine Legislature at its last session enacted a limitation law, thereby putting into effect the purposes and aims of the Jones-Costigan Act in the Philippine Islands.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the sugar industry of the Philippine Islands, by virtue of the operation of the Jones-Costigan Act, is already facing great hardships, even before the enforcement of the provisions of the independence act, known as the "McDuffie-Tydings Act."

Under the McDuffie-Tydings Act, section 6–A, the Philippine Islands were allowed to import into the United States free of duty, during the transition period, 800,000 long tons of unrefined sugar and 50,000 long tons of refined sugar, equivalent to 955,920 short tons of raw sugar.

As I well recall, during the hearings and debates on this legislation this limitation was fixed on the basis of what the author of the Hare-Hawes-Cutting bill termed as the "status quo" of the industry in the Philippine Islands. But I wish to refer in this connection to the observation of the author of the bill in this House, Hon. Butler B. Hare, who, in a letter to Hon. Harry B. Hawes under date of December 6, 1932, concluded:

> The theory upon which the limitation is predicated is to take as a basis for limitations the estimated importations to the United States from the Philippines for the crop year immediately preceding that in which the limitations are first to be imposed. * * *
> In other words, if we are going to take the "status quo" or "existing investments" as the basis for fixing the limitation, I think, instead of taking the export figures of 1931 as a basis for the limitations on sugar, we should take, as near as possible, the export figures at the time the limitations go into effect, because many of the planters, as I have stated, have already made their investments in better seed and in some cases provided a system of irrigation, which will result in the indicated production by the time the proposed legislation can be made effective. In that event, the limitations on sugar, as already suggested, should be at least 1,050,000 tons raw and 50,000 tons refined.
> It is with a keen sense of our obligation to be absolutely fair to the people of the Philippine Islands that I have felt it my duty to submit in some detail these facts and impressions for your sympathetic consideration, and I hope you will not consider it improper for me to suggest that an amendment to the bill in the Senate increasing the limitation on raw-sugar imports from the Philippines to 1,050,000 long tons would make this provision more in harmony with the facts obtained as a result of my study in the islands than the limitation now provided. It may not be amiss to state in this connection that these views regarding the necessity for increasing the amount of sugar limitations confirm representations made before our committee by the Resident Commissioners and the Philippine commission in Washington when the House bill was being considered last spring.

May I state the fact that this observation of former Congressman Hare was confirmed in the stabilization agreement agreed upon by all the sugar producers under the American flag in September 1933, in which the Philippine Islands were given a quota of 1,100,000 short tons of sugar, and again by the recommendation of the President, in his message to Congress on February 8, 1934, in which, considering the actual consumption in the United States, he suggested a quota for the Philippine Islands of 1,037,000 short tons.

Mr. Speaker, heretofore the American people have been told only of the one side of the American-Philippine economic question. Much emphasis has been stressed upon the competition of Philippine products imported into the United States. Records and facts were given to Congress and to committee hearings showing little or no foundation to these claims I have already referred to in the case of importation of coconut oil. In the case of sugar, even absorbing all the sugar produced in the areas under the American flag, the United States will still have to go to foreign countries, particularly to Cuba, to meet its sugar requirements, clearly proving the fact that the sugar industry in the Philippine Islands, even under maximum production of its present development, would not displace a single pound of sugar produced in the United States.

Turning to the other side of the American-Philippine economic question, during the 36 years of American sovereignty in the Philippine Islands, through the benevolent guidance of the United States in improving our health and sanitation and our social and economic conditions, we have today increased our standard of living 300 percent over the surrounding people in that part of the globe. As a result we have increased our purchasing power abroad, particularly for American products, which under the free-trade relationship between the United States and the Philippines, established in 1909, have been protected in the Philippine market against competition of foreign products.

During the 10-year period before the United States came to the Philippines we only purchased from the United States merchandise valued at $3,000,000, or 3 percent of our total imports abroad. During the last 10-year period we have purchased from this country $684,000,000 worth of merchandise, or 61 percent of our total purchases abroad.

To show the growth of the Philippine market for American products, I wish to invite the attention of the Members of this body to the following statistics compiled from the official reports of the insular collector of customs in the Philippine Islands, which clearly show the significance of the Philippine market to the American producers of farm and industrial products.

In this connection, I wish to refer to a portion of the speech made the other day before this body by the gentleman from New York, Hon. HAMILTON FISH, in which he stated:

> Up to this time the Philippines has been our greatest market for our textile goods. A year or so ago we did about 75 percent of all the textile business there. Japan has succeeded within the last year with its mass production and cheap labor costs in driving us out and wrecking our exports. Japan is now doing about 75 percent, and we are rapidly losing this market.
> Unless something is done soon, there will be 35,000 more unemployed in the textile industry within a short time and approximately an equal number in the cotton fields, on the railroads, and in connection with shipping and other industries affected, due to the loss of our legitimate and natural markets in the Philippines and Latin America.

I also wish to refer to the following editorial of the Washington Herald, under date of January 17, 1935, which deplored the ruination of the Philippine market for American products:

STRANGLING UNITED STATES TRADE

According to a Manila dispatch, the American textile trade with the Philippine Islands "has been virtually ruined within a year because of insufficient insular tariffs", protecting United States trade with the Philippines against foreign competition.

The blame for this insufficiency cannot justly be saddled upon the Philippine Legislature for the following reasons:

Trade between continental United States and the Philippines is on a reciprocal basis. In consequence this trade has increased until the Philippines now rank ninth or tenth among the foreign purchasers of American products.

With a view to increasing Philippine purchases of American goods and in order to make the existing reciprocity fairer to the United States, the Philippine Legislature has long been urged to increase the insular tariffs against outside nations on cotton textiles, artificial silk, paper, and several other American products.

This the Legislature was about to do at the last session, in spite of an impudent protest from the Japanese consul general at Manila.

The protest of this alien meddler did not frighten the members of the Philippine Legislature. It only aroused their resentment.

But soon after this protest was made the Philippine Legislature was surprised to receive a request from Washington that the proposed tariff legislation be postponed until next year.

Under the circumstances it is not surprising to hear that American textile trade with the Philippines has been almost wiped out.

This is what will happen to all American trade with the Philippines unless President Roosevelt reverses the policy of his subordinates and encourages and supports the Philippine Legislature in its desire to strengthen its commercial ties with the country to which the Philippine people owe the blessings of liberty.

Mr. Speaker, the Filipino people are anxious to cooperate and to do their duty in the protection of American products in the Philippine Islands. They have given proof of their good faith by showing their willingness to amend their tariff law in order to increase the protection of American products in the Philippine Islands against foreign competition, but owing to circumstances beyond their control they were prevented from carrying out their desires.

Mr. Speaker, the Philippines is a rapidly growing country. We have today 14,000,000 people; 10 or 20 years hence we will have 20,000,000 or 30,000,000, all of whom will have been brought up under American customs and standards and who will constitute certainly a potential market for American products in that part of the globe.

The difficulty, not to say impossibility, of accurately determining foreign investments in the Philippine Islands has been encountered by everyone who attempted to prepare such a statement.

This difficulty is well illustrated by the following quotation from a very recent letter to the members of the congressional committee now visiting the Philippine Islands. This letter was written by Judge John W. Haussermann, president of the Benguet Consolidated Mining Co. and the Balatoc Mining Co. Judge Haussermann has been in the Philippine Islands since 1898. He says this with reference to the mining industry in the Philippine Islands:

The present paid-up investment in mining in the Philippines exceeds ₱15,000,000 and has an actual market value of almost ₱200,000,000. Most of this is American capital, either directly invested from the United States or, more largely, invested in the Philippines by Americans. The development of mining in the Philippines has been primarily an American enterprise, dependent upon the initiative and tenacity of Americans resident here. Filipinos are now very properly coming into the field, both in their own companies and in cooperation with American enterprises. They cannot as yet, however, sustain the capital expenditure necessary to bring into correct production the mineral resources of the islands.

On the basis of this investment, the Philippine mining industry has developed a producing source of wealth. The 1933 output of gold was valued at ₱16,190,995, and the 1934 output is estimated at ₱22,000,000, a close rival of Alaska. There is every reason to believe that, with political and economic stability assured, this figure will steadily grow.

With this understanding of the liability of such statements to error there follows a statement submitted to the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs in February 1932, by Mr. E. B. Bruce, and also certain other estimates submitted to that committee at that time.

The statement referred to is as follows:

Capital investments in Philippine Islands, exclusive of investments by governmental agencies (in United States currency)

AMERICAN INVESTMENTS IN THE PHILIPPINES

An exact statement of American investments in the Philippines cannot be made, but estimates thereof are quoted below from various official sources. It was officially reported in 1924 that the ownership of real property in the Philippine Islands, as determined from tax assessments, was as follows:

| Filipinos | $697,000,000 |
| Chinese | 26,000,000 |
| Americans | 29,000,000 |
| Spaniards | 29,000,000 |
| "Other foreigners" | 11,000,000 |

In 1928 the following estimate of investments by Americans and others in Philippine securities and industries was made by the director of the bureau of commerce and industry, Manila:

Certain principal investments of Americans, Filipinos, and others in the Philippine Islands [1]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on a matter I think each Member is interested in.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to occupy too much of the time of the House at this moment. The only thing I want to do is to call attention to the situation prevailing in the States of the Northwest in regard to relief, and I think this is of enough importance to demand that I be given the opportunity which I have been given to present the situation to the House.

Mr. Speaker, North Dakota, as you know, is a State of 680,000 people, a State whose population is so small that their Congressmen have to be elected at large, and she has only two Representatives at that. During the past 55 years in our State we have produced wheat enough to feed everybody in our State, and for a great many years 50,000,000 more people. For a great many years we have raised enough beef in our State to feed everyone in our State and 30,000,000 more. We have never asked for relief before; but during the last 3 years we have experienced the greatest drought our country ever knew.

There is nothing to compare with it since away back in the early sixties, and you gentlemen sitting in this House cannot realize the situation in North and South Dakota today because of this drought. You can drive hundreds of miles and never see any more grass on the soil than there is on one of your highways in the State of Maryland.

We have asked for relief for the first time in 53 years. In this drought period we have asked for relief, and the situation I want to present to the House is that there is something wrong about the way the relief matter is handled. I do not charge it to the administration. I charge it to the way in which relief has been attempted to be handled heretofore. It is being handled direct from Washington in our State, and I understand in other States as well.

We have hay piled up as high as the dome of this building in every town of North Dakota, purchased by the Government and shipped in from Canada and elsewhere, and yet we are losing our cattle at the rate of 2,000 head per week because we cannot get the feed. I am asking the Democrats here, the majority, to come in and help get that feed, and I think I have this right.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Will the gentleman tell us just what method is being employed in distributing this drought relief?

Mr. BURDICK. I will come to that a little later, but may I say to the gentlemen on this side of the House that there is no politics in what I am saying at all, because in the last Presidential election in the State of North Dakota two men headed the fight for Franklin D. Roosevelt, and those two were Republicans. The same two are now Members of this House, namely, the Honorable WILLIAM LEMKE and myself.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that we have an Emergency Farm Credit Administration, of which Governor Myers is the head and W. Forbes Morgan is Deputy Governor, with regulations providing that every owner of livestock may apply for and receive so much per head in order to help carry over his livestock during this winter. If the gentleman's constituents in North Dakota will apply for the relief to which they are entitled, under the law, they may get it. The gentleman speaks about North Dakota's having 680,000 people. I used to represent the old jumbo district in Texas that had in it almost 600,000 people, and it alone embraced 59 counties running east and west, 556 miles from Mineral Wells to El Paso, and running 400 miles north and south from Lubbock to Rock Springs in Edwards County.

Mr. BURDICK. I may answer both gentlemen at once. Here is what I find wrong with relief: Before we can get any feed for our livestock in North Dakota we must have our cattle mortgaged. If our cattle are not mortgaged, we do not get the feed. Some of our people live 175 miles from any place where they can get a mortgage; and when they do get down there where they may be able to get it, they are either turned down or else they are required to take 10 percent stock in some agricultural finance corporation.

Mr. BLANTON. I will guarantee to the gentleman from North Dakota that if he will place the proper kind of an application before Governor Myers, showing the necessity for financing feed for livestock to tide him over this winter, he will get it in every instance and will not be turned down.

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman kindly ask the gentleman from Texas to take a short, brief trip out into Wisconsin and consult with the feed-relief agencies out there, ascertain what they are doing, and then come back and tell us what he finds?

Mr. BLANTON. Down in my district, which is partly a livestock district, whenever I find that the people I represent are not taken care of with regard to feed loans, I take the matter up for them myself and see to it that they are given proper attention and consideration. I am sure the gentleman from North Dakota is just as energetic as I am in looking after his constituents. All he has to do is to go before Governor Myers down here and place a proper case before him, where a livestock owner needs assistance in order to carry his livestock over this winter, and the fact that the owner has no lien against him will help that much more.

Mr. SHORT. If we lived in Texas, we could do likewise.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman should suggest to the gentleman from Texas that when Progressive Members from Wisconsin go to the Agricultural Department, as we have been doing ever since we got here, perhaps the gentleman can show us some Texas Democratic way in which we can get action.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, the very head of the Agricultural Department to which the gentleman has referred was an Iowa Republican until he was made Secretary of Agriculture. He was made a Democrat merely by putting a Democratic administration stamp on him. He was taken out of the Republican fold out in Iowa, and surely he ought to be looking after his former Republican friends and constituents out there and out in North Dakota.

Mr. HULL. I may say to the gentleman that the starving cows of Wisconsin are in no way responsible for the Secretary of Agriculture's becoming a Democrat.

Mr. BURDICK. May I answer the rest of the gentleman's question previously propounded?

The second reason we cannot get feed when our cattle are starving is the fact that we must secure nondisturbance agreements. If a machine company has a mortgage on a drill, we are required to get a release of that mortgage when they have not any mortgage on the livestock at all. Other mortgages will not release, and the result is the cattle are starving in the very sight of worlds of feed, which will be hauled out and dumped next spring.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. FULLER. Does the gentleman state that there is a world of feed for cattle in the State of North Dakota?

Mr. BURDICK. Every town is full of feed, but shipped into the State by and owned by the Government.

Mr. FULLER. Why did the Government buy more cattle in the State of North Dakota than in any other State in the Union and pay more for the cattle?

Mr. BURDICK. Because there was no feed and no water to take care of them.

Mr. FULLER. But you have it available now?

Mr. BURDICK. No.

Mr. FULLER. The Government bought more cattle in North Dakota and paid higher prices than in any other place in the Union. There were a hundred thousand of them sent down to Arkansas.

Mr. BURDICK. We had 2,200,000 head of cattle when they started to buy.

Mr. FULLER. And they got a better price for them by 2 to 1 than any other place in the country.

Mr. BURDICK. It was not a question of price; it was a question of taking them out of there to keep them from dying.

Mr. FULLER. And that was because you said you did not have any feed for them, while now you say you have feed for them.

Mr. BURDICK. No; I did not say that. I said the Government has the feed—all shipped in, and the farmers cannot get it.

Mr. FULLER. You said you had plenty of hay for them.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. The gentleman spoke about the cattle not being fed. What about the people in the gentleman's State? Are they being well fed?

Mr. BURDICK. I have something on that matter right here, where a family of nine in our State is getting $2.50 per week for the entire family.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. May I say to the gentleman that I believe every word he is saying is true, and I want to make the statement that from the district that I represent, the Thirty-fourth Congressional District of Pennsylvania, I have many letters in my office from people maintaining they cannot get relief from the agencies in that district, and it is true, too.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Dakota may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I yield anything but the principle I am talking on, but I want to answer the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. FORD of California. The gentleman made the statement that there was absolutely plenty of feed in North Dakota.

Mr. BURDICK. Yes; in the possession of the Government.

Mr. FORD of California. But you could not get it unless the cattle were mortgaged, and then you said you could not get a loan if there was a man who had a mortgage on a drill unless he would release it. Would the cattle have to be released if there was a mortgage on them?

Mr. BURDICK. If there was any mortgage ahead of that grain lien, it would have to be released also.

Mr. FORD of California. Why could they not get a loan if they had no mortgage?

Mr. BURDICK. I should like to know that, too.

Mr. FORD of California. I am told that is not the case.

Mr. BURDICK. In answer to the gentleman from Texas, I want to say that I have been to all these departments. I have shown them at least 300 examples like the ones I have here today, and they have promised to investigate, and I believe they are investigating; but while they are investigating and while my resolution is before your committees, the cattle are dying. This is an emergency matter that needs attention now, and the only reason I appear before you is to let you know that this is an emergency situation. I could tell you a lot about relief for human beings in my State if I had the time.

Mr. FULLER. Has the gentleman introduced any bill dealing with this particular matter?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Mr. FULLER. Has the gentleman ever been down to the Department to try to contact them and explain the matter to them?

Mr. BURDICK. I have.

Mr. FULLER. And the gentleman wants us to look after the particular interests of his State?

Mr. BURDICK. No; I am speaking for the entire Northwest, and the reason for it is that the Department heads tell me they need clarification of the law before they can put a plan into operation that will allow them to grant feed without getting these releases and also put into operation a plan that will grant feed where the property is not mortgaged. They want this investigation, and they want some clarification of the law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman affiliates with the Republican Party that has been in power, with a few exceptional years, for the last 40 years. During all the droughts and hard winters and dying livestock never until last year was there the particular set-up that would grant Government relief to stockmen who had cattle dying, and I believe that within the last 2 years the present administration has provided more public funds to take care of dying cattle all over the United States than all the Republican administrations put together ever granted during the last 50 years.

Mr. BURDICK. There is not any argument on that. The great drought has not existed for 40 years.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman criticizing the administration for having granted needed relief?

Mr. BURDICK. No; that is the reason I was for them, because I believed they would take care of this relief situation, or any emergency that might arise.

Mr. BLANTON. I think my friend from North Dakota will find plenty of machinery, plenty of money, and plenty of means to grant relief to all stockmen in the United States, whether they live in North Dakota, or Texas, or anywhere else, if he will make proper application and show the proper facts to exist. And if there is not plenty of money now available, we will shortly pass a bill that will make more money available.

Mr. BURDICK. I trust the gentleman from Texas will help me do that very thing.

Mr. BLANTON. I will go to any department here any time to help the gentleman, if he thinks I can be of any service to him.

Mr. BURDICK. If I have succeeded this afternoon in calling this matter of emergency to your attention, I do not care how it has been done; and if that is accomplished, I shall have done all that I intended to do when I got up here.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURDICK. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that this past week I had several cases referred to me by the county extension men and the county clerks in the district I represent, the Eighth District of Michigan. I took these cases to three different departments, and they refused to act on them and said there was no law authorizing them to give relief in that district of Michigan. They said that the Eighth District of Michigan is secondary drought-stricken territory. They stated that if the cattle were already mortgaged there was no way they could extend credit to the people who owned those cattle in order to give relief with which to buy feed in a territory where the snow fell about the 10th of December and it has been snowing and sleeting and freezing ever since.

Mr. BURDICK. That is all true.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It does not make any difference what we have provided heretofore, if there is no machinery and no funds available today when the cattle are starving. I think that is the question the gentleman is discussing now.

Mr. BURDICK. Let me answer by saying that the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration had given directions that when seed was furnished in 1934 it would not be necessary for the farmers to mortgage their 1934 crops for all previous advances of seed; but in spite of that, and in spite of the admonition of the Governor, those in charge of the work in the Northwest did demand that the farmers give a mortgage on all past seed advances, and I want to assure my friend from Texas that information is going out now telling them that if you give them seed in 1935 the farmers must give a mortgage for all prior advances of seed.

It is not a question of finding fault with the administration; it is a question of finding fault with the way it is administered out in the Northwestern States. The State administration should be responsible for the actual distribution and not the national administration.

Mr. BURDICK. Unless the situation were urgent, I would not ask permission to address the House at this time, as I am a new Member and fully recognize the custom that new Members should be seen and not heard. This situation that has developed in my State, however, compels me to break that custom and inform this House on a matter that is vital to the well-being of thousands of farmers in my State, South Dakota, and elsewhere.

During the past 2½ years we have suffered the greatest drought known in our history. Nothing approaching it since the early sixties has ever been known. While a small area of the State extending 15 miles west of the Red River and extending along that river for 100 miles did produce, in 1935, 20,000,000 bushels of wheat, the State at large produced nothing. No one from this distance can possibly conceive of the havoc produced by this unprecedented drought. Our lakes and sloughs have dried up, our well water supply has receded several feet, and in two-thirds of the State it has been left as barren of vegetation as the public highways. With cattle numbering over 2,000,000, we have been compelled to reduce them to less than a million, and we are still thinning the ranks of our cattle by a process that threatens to reduce them another half million by spring.

During this drought is the first time the people of North Dakota have ever asked for help. It will rain again, as it always has rained, and we will be able to care for ourselves. Just now we ask for help, and I resent the attitude of a few administrators who say North Dakota has fared pretty well and should be thankful for what it has received. But the cold facts remain that under the plan of distribution of relief in North Dakota, our livestock is starving at the rate of 2,000 head per week. Every station in North Dakota is piled up high with hay and straw shipped in by the Government and owned by the Government, but the starving livestock perish in the very sight of plenty. Why is this situation allowed to continue?

There are several reasons: First, under the rules set up by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, no farmer can get feed for his livestock if his property is clear of a mortgage. He is told, "Go and mortgage your stock and get your own feed." There is no place he can secure a mortgage loan within 100 miles, in thousands of cases; and when he gets to where the loan agency is, he is turned down or made to purchase stock in the financial agency which is designed to loan him money. Interest is taken out in advance and all inspection and abstract fees. The small balance he can receive does not go very far in buying wheat straw at $10.50 per ton, oat straw at $11.50 per ton, hay at $20 per ton, and alfalfa at $22.50 per ton, and in most cases the alfalfa is a bundle of stems without leaves and is worthless as feed.

The second rule adopted by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration is that no feed will be furnished a farmer until he gets nondisturbance agreements from his mortgagees. Machine companies who have no mortgage, except on machinery, and no mortgage on the livestock, must be settled with, and a release is obtained. They will not release, in many cases, unless they receive some payment—and the former has nothing—or unless the farmer will surrender the machinery in which the farmer has an equity and which machinery he deeds. Other mortgagees will not release their mortgage on the livestock, and, as a result, the cattle and horses starve and are hourly starving to death in North Dakota.

In a resolution introduced in this Congress (H. J. Res. 86), referred to the Committee on Rules, I have asked for a change in the method of distribution of relief in North Dakota, which I trust this House will consider at the earliest possible moment; but the question on which I address you now is too urgent to permit of any delay. This Congress has the power to make rules of distribution that will extend relief now and not allow it to be delivered later when it is too late. I therefore appeal to the Membership of this House to take action.

What will happen if this relief is denied, at a time of year when the temperature stands at 20 below zero, in wind-swept, totally arid country, with starving cattle and suffering human beings? I want the Members of this House to remember that in the last extremity, when all prayers and petitions for relief remain unanswered, the people of the Northwest will turn to a law not passed by legislatures or by Congress, a law that in final emergencies transcends all law, namely, the law of self-preservation. They will and are now taking feed from the possession of the Government to keep alive whatever of flickering life remains in their cattle. They will brush aside red tape.

Surely the Members of this Congress do not want our people to become law violators. We are law-abiding. We have confidence in our Government and are unalterably opposed to those who seek its destruction. We are not wild jackasses of the plains, but true Americans, and our forefathers fought in the Revolutionary War. Let this Congress assure these people that their confidence in our Government is not misplaced and that through this body they can receive without delay the protection which they as citizens of this great country so richly deserve in this great drought crisis.

Here is another example of relief administration in North Dakota. This is a letter which I wrote today in answer to a pathetic appeal from a North Dakota farmer:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 21, 1935.

JACOB C. GROSSMAN,
Dodge, N. Dak.

DEAR MR. GROSSMAN: I was completely dumfounded to get your letter of the 15th and to learn what the emergency crop-loan office in Watford City is trying to do. There can be no doubt about this demand, as you enclosed the mimeographed demand made upon you.

They say:

"You have received your wheat-allotment check, and my records do not show that you have made any payments on your seed loan for this year.

"It is very important that you make a substantial payment on your seed loan at this time in order to preserve your credit with the Government. This will be an important factor in securing future loans.

"Call at my office or make payments to me at Watford City, N. Dak. Make remittances payable to Governor, Farm Relief Administration.

"Yours very truly.

"Call at Killdeer office, emergency crop loan office, field supervisor, Watford City, N. Dak."

In another letter they say:

"The Government is now renewing the old seed loans by taking crop mortgage on 1935 crops, and are asking borrowers to get waivers from the land owners so we may have a first lien on the crop. This is being done at this time in order to clear the records, as no doubt the majority of those owing seed loans will again apply in the spring of 1935." (The portion in italics was underscored in red ink on the original demand.)

"Yours very truly,

"EMERGENCY FEED & SEED LOAN OFFICE,
"Steele, N. Dak."

You ask first what my advice is as to whether you shall pay the seed loans out of your allotment. When this act was passed, it was fully understood that no advances were to be taken out. I therefore advise you to use your allotment checks to feed your family and pay bills to merchants who have trusted you with food while you were waiting for this check.

I never dreamed that any such policy would ever be permitted by this Government. Just to think that, feeding you with one hand (allotments and relief), the same Government wants to take it away from you the next moment to liquidate advances made for seed!

I say to you that it is a disgrace to common decency for the emergency feed and seed administration in North Dakota to demand of you the only money you have on which to live. They know you are living in a drought area where the prairie is as barren as a public highway. If their representative were there now he would see dead horses strewn across the prairie; he would see families of nine living on $2.50 per week relief from the Government; he would see hay and straw stacked up as high as the largest stores, and at the same time cattle dying in that area in the very sight of feed; yet, they ask you, under these circumstances, to make a payment on your old debt for seed. They deliberately intend to coerce and blackmail you into giving a mortgage by saying that "those now owing seed loans will again apply in the spring of 1935."

I am going to bring this whole matter to the attention of Congress just as soon as I can get the floor to do so.

Yours very truly,

USHER L. BURDICK.

WILLIAM I. TRAEGER

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret to announce the death of a former Member of this House, the Hon. William I. Traeger.

Mr. Traeger was a Member from the fifteenth district of California of the Seventy-third Congress. In view of the fact he had devoted his entire life to civic activities and civic affairs, I feel that his passing at this time is very deeply to be mourned.

LOANS TO FARMERS IN DROUGHT-STRICKEN AREAS

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill H. R. 3247, to meet the conditions created by the 1934 drought, and to provide for loans to farmers in drought- and storm-stricken areas and for other purposes, with amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BLANTON. I think we ought to have the bill read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill to meet the conditions created by the 1934 drought, and to provide for loans to farmers in drought- and storm-stricken areas, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, hereinafter in this act referred to as the "Governor", is hereby authorized to make loans to farmers in the United States (including Alaska, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico) during the year 1935 for fallowing and for the production and/or harvesting of crops, and, to the extent of not exceeding $1,000,000, for feed for livestock. Such loans shall be made and collected through such agencies, upon such terms and conditions, and subject to such regulations, as the Governor shall prescribe.

SEC. 2. (a) There shall be required as security for any such loan a first lien, or an agreement to give a first lien, upon all crops of which the production, harvesting, and/or marketing is to be financed, in whole or in part, with the proceeds of such loan; or, in case of any loan for the purchase or production of feed for livestock, a first lien upon the livestock to be fed. Fees for recording, filing, and/or registering shall not exceed 50 cents per loan which shall be paid by the borrower, and may be deducted from the proceeds of the loan. Each loan shall bear interest at the rate of 5½ percent per annum. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act and collecting loans made under other acts of the same general character, including loans made by the Governor with funds appropriated by the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, the Governor may use the facilities and services of the Farm Credit Administration and any institution operating under its supervision, or of any officer or officers thereof, and may pay for such services and the use of such facilities from the funds made available for the payment of necessary administrative expenses; and such institutions are hereby expressly empowered to enter into agreements with the Governor for the accomplishment of such purposes.

(b) The amount which may be loaned to any borrower pursuant to this act shall not exceed $250 unless, in the opinion of the Governor, the circumstances surrounding the loan are such as to warrant a larger amount, in which event the borrower shall be entitled to a loan not in excess of $500: Provided, however, That in any area certified by the President of the United States to the Governor as a distressed emergency area, the Governor may make loans without regard to the foregoing limitations as to amounts, under such regulations and with such maturities as he may prescribe therefor.

(c) No loan shall be made under this act to any applicant who shall not have first established to the satisfaction of the proper officer or employee of the Farm Credit Administration, under such regulations as the Governor may prescribe: (1) That such applicant is unable to procure from other sources a loan in an amount reasonably adequate to meet his needs for the purposes for which loans may be made under this act; and (2) that such applicant is cooperating directly in the crop-production-control program of the Agricultural Adustment Administration or is not proposing to increase his production of agricultural commodities in a manner detrimental to the success of such program.

SEC. 3. (a) The moneys authorized to be loaned by the Governor under this act are declared to be impressed with a trust to accomplish the purposes provided for by this act (namely, for fallowing and for the production and/or harvesting of crops, and for feed for livestock), which trust shall continue until the moneys loaned pursuant to this act have been used by the borrower for such purposes. It shall be unlawful for any borrower to use said trust fund or any part thereof for any other purposes, or willfully to fail to plant, cultivate, or harvest the crops described in his application, or willfully to fail to use said trust fund for the purposes therein stated; and any use of said trust fund by the borrower for other purposes, or any failure to plant, cultivate, or harvest the aforementioned crops, or any failure to use said trust fund for the purposes stated in his application, shall be prima facie evidence of an intent of the borrower to defraud the United States.

(b) It shall be unlawful for any person to make any material false representation for the purpose of obtaining, or assisting another to obtain, a loan under the provisions of this act; or willfully to dispose of, or assist in disposing of, except for the account of the Governor, any crops or other property upon which there exists a lien securing a loan made under the provisions of this act.

(c) It shall be unlawful for any person to charge a fee for the purpose of preparing or assisting in the preparation of any papers of an applicant for a loan under the provisions of this act.

(d) Any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

SEC. 4. The Governor shall have power, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, to employ and fix the compensation and duties of such agents, officers, and employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; but the compensation of such officers and employees shall correspond, so far as the Governor deems practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

SEC. 5. (a) For the purpose of enabling the Governor to carry out the provisions of this act, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated a fund not to exceed $40,000,000, which shall be made up as follows: All unobligated balances of appropriations and funds available thereunder to enable the Secretary of Agriculture or the Governor to make advances or loans under the following acts and resolutions, and all repayments of such advances and loans and interest: March 3, 1921 (41 Stat. 1347); March 20, 1922 (42 Stat. 467); April 26, 1924 (43 Stat. 110); February 28, 1927 (44 Stat. 1251); February 25, 1929 (45 Stat. 1306), as amended May 17, 1929 (46 Stat. 3); March 3, 1930 (46 Stat. 78, 79); December 20, 1930 (46 Stat. 1032), as amended February 14, 1931 (46 Stat. 1160); February 23, 1931 (46 Stat. 1276); March 3, 1932 (47 Stat. 60); February 4, 1933 (47 Stat. 795); February 23, 1934 (48 Stat. 354); and June 19, 1934 (48 Stat. 1021).

(b) The moneys made available under subsection (a), and all collections of both principal and interest on loans made under this act, may be used by the Governor for making loans under this act and for all necessary administrative expenses in making and collecting such loans.

(c) Expenditures for printing and binding necessary in carrying out the provisions of this act may be made without regard to the provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. Is there any member of the majority or minority of the committee opposed to the bill?

Mr. HOPE. I demand a second. I am not opposed to the bill, but I do not understand that is a prerequisite.

Mr. MOTT. I am opposed to one provision of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not a member of the committee. There being no member of the committee opposed to the bill demanding a second, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas to demand a second.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for debate be extended 20 minutes, to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], and I ask that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. BLANTON. I intended to yield most of my time to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. JONES. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered and that the time of the debate be extended 20 minutes, to be controlled by the gentleman from Kansas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas, that the time of debate be extended 20 minutes and that a second be considered as ordered?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I think that everyone who is familiar with the facts will realize that this is one of the most effective and most necessary of measures under the circumstances. We thought that it would be unnecessary to continue this program, but everyone knows that throughout a great stretch of the farming and livestock areas of the United States there has been the worst drought in all of our history.

I believe it is important, therefore, that we pass a measure of this kind. It provides a type of credit that is absolutely essential and yet is not available otherwise to the people who will make use of it. Under the bill I think we have established proper safeguards in such a way that other provisions of credit will be used wherever they can be used. Last year we used only $28,000,000 in the regular crop loans, but later an additional $10,000,000 was used for feed loans, thus making $38,000,000 used in this way. We have cut down these loans through the production-credit organizations and other features of the farm-credit program in such a way that we have reduced by about one-half the amount of these loans, but we are down to rockbottom so far as the amounts are concerned.

There is enough in the unexpended balance and in the collections from previous loans and the interest thereon to make up the provisions of this bill. I think, therefore, that it is a bill that should be passed, and that some of the credit is necessary at an early date. I think it should be passed at an early date and made available as soon as possible. That is the reason I take this course to secure its early passage?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. I am wondering if the committee gave due consideration to the amount allocated in this bill for feed, and to meet the situation described by the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. JONES. It is twice as large as was used last year under this bill. It is the same amount made available, but the main feed loans provisions were in the allocation for relief, and they were met on a different basis, and I presume that provision will be made, such as may be essential for that purpose. There was a demand for only half as much as was made available for this purpose in last year's bill.

I reserve the remainder of my time until I hear what the opposition has to say.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. In looking over the Treasury report that came to the office on Saturday last, I found where this relief corporation now has a balance of something like $204,000,000.

Mr. JONES. Not in this fund or in this authorization.

Mr. SNELL. What is that money to be used for?

Mr. JONES. The Farm Credit Administration covers the land banks, the Production Credit Corporation, the cooperative banks, and the intermediate-credit banks. I am not sure what the particular fund to which the gentleman refers will be used for.

Mr. SNELL. And there is nothing available at the present time for these loans?

Mr. JONES. No; last year's act was a 1-year act.

Mr. SNELL. It seems to me there is another question that ought to be taken into consideration in making these loans, and that is what is going to be the policy of the Agricultural Department during the coming year. Here we are lending money to people to increase crop production. Is not that the purpose?

Mr. JONES. Not at all. We require that they cooperate with the adjustment program all along the line; otherwise they cannot secure credit.

Mr. SNELL. But it is to make crops?

Mr. JONES. It is to furnish the essential money to make crops in accordance with the adjustment program.

Mr. SNELL. While we are doing this now, should we turn around with the next month and appropriate money to hire somebody in another State to increase his crop because we have increased crops in these particular States?

Mr. JONES. Oh, the gentleman understands——

Mr. SNELL. I do not understand; and I am asking the gentleman for information.

Mr. JONES. Then the gentleman should understand that a man who has designed his crop in accordance with the adjustment program must have the essential credit to carry on for that purpose, and this dovetails with it and helps him to carry on. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot yield further.

Mr. SNELL. Just one more question.

Mr. JONES. I yield for one more question if the gentleman desires.

Mr. SNELL. I shall give the gentleman some time over here. We have been making these loans now for a period of 12 or 14 years.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. And the conditions in those sections where the loans are made are no better now than they were when we started.

Mr. JONES. In some sections they are no better, but in other sections they are better and they are better now than they were at a certain time. Formerly we have made a hundred million dollars available for the purposes indicated here.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the gentleman to say it was of more importance to do it this year than before, and that last year when you asked for this seed loan, you did not expect to ask for it again.

Mr. JONES. I said it was made necessary by conditions that were worse last year than were ever seen.

Mr. SNELL. I cannot understand why we should lend money to increase crops and on the other hand the next day appropriate money to reduce crops.

Mr. JONES. If a man has been accustomed to growing a hundred acres of wheat, it is necessary for him to get credit even if he plans to grow only 50 acres of wheat.

Mr. SNELL. Why not cut down here, and not pay some other fellow later on to cut down?

Mr. JONES. That would necessitate putting these people on relief, and if the gentleman had had as many people look him in the eye and tell him that these little $50 or $75 loans had kept them and their families off relief and had seen the sparkle in their eyes when they said that, he would know that that spirit is worth preserving in America.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman says after making these loans they are worse off than before.

Mr. JONES. No; I did not say that, although the gentleman tries to make me say so.

Mr. SNELL. I understood from the gentleman's opening remarks that it was more important to make these loans this year than before.

Mr. JONES. I am sorry; the gentleman misunderstood me. I will have to reserve the remainder of my time. Later on, if I have any more time, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. REED of New York. I am compelled to go to committee meeting at 2 o'clock. I should like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. JONES. I am very sorry, but I must reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER of Tennessee). The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of all of the provisions of this bill except section 4.

But section 4 of this bill is a vicious, wasteful, inexcusable, and unwarranted provision that ought not ever to be in any bill we pass in this House, and as long as I stay here I never shall vote for another bill that carries a provision like section 4 in it. Eighteen years of experience in this House has taught me that it is unwise to do so.

Turn to section 4 and read it. It gives this Governor of the Farm Credit Administration carte blanche authority to employ the men he wants to and fix their salaries. Oh, there is a little provision there which says that where he deems it practicable he shall follow the salaries fixed by the Classification Act of 1923, but if he does not deem it practicable he will have the right to fix salaries as he chooses.

Let me read you this section 4, to which I object:

SEC. 4. The Governor shall have power, without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to the employment and compensation of officers and employees of the United States, to employ and fix the compensation and duties of such agents, officers, and employees as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; but the compensation of such officers and employees shall correspond, so far as the Governor deems practicable, to the rates established by the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

Can you not see that beyond any doubt whatsoever the above language of section 4 gives Governor Myers, of the Farm Credit Administration, absolute authority to employ who he chooses, to employ just as many new employees as he chooses, and to pay them whatever salaries he chooses?

Can you not see that the reference to the Classification Act might as well not be in the bill, for unless he deems it practicable he does not have to pay any attention to it? Of course he will not deem it practicable. He will want to do just what all other bureau chiefs want to do, and have done, fix the amount of salaries himself.

And the worst of it all is that we cannot change this bill in any particular. It is up under a motion to suspend all rules. We cannot amend it in any particular. We have to accept it just as this bureau chief prepared it. We have to swallow it whole. If 400 Members of this House wanted to strike out this section 4 we could not do it under the rules. The only way any of us could stop the passage of section 4 would be to kill the bill, and none of us want to kill it, because we are all in favor of the other provisions of the bill.

Are you gentlemen willing to turn another $40,000,000 over to General Myers and allow him to select his own employees and just as many new employees as he chooses and pay them all just as big a salary as he chooses? That is what this bill does. I am not willing to do it.

He has absolute carte-blanche authority to fix all of their salaries at any amount he sees fit. I am not going to vote for any more bills like that. I have learned the unwisdom of it. I am not going to vote for any more bills that will let a bunch of bureau chiefs, scattered over this country, waste the people's money. This $40,000,000 will be tax money wrung from the pockets of your constituents.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a minute. I will if I have the time when I finish. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Well, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am sorry I cannot yield until I finish. I am making a Democratic speech now, criticizing a bad provision in an otherwise good Democratic measure, and I am not going to let any Republican intersperse my remarks with any campaign political data. [Laughter.]

As I said the other day, if there is any just criticism to be made about anything in this Democratic administration, it behooves the Democratic Members, of my party, to make the criticism, and we do not want any meddlesome Republicans to have anything to do with it. [Laughter.]

This is a bad practice, to allow bureau chiefs to fix salaries and to name any number of employees without limitation, and my friend from Texas [Mr. JONES] usually is such a wise legislator, and he has been so valuable to his country, I am surprised that he would let this bureau put this unwise provision over on his committee again.

Up to the 3d of January last year I had 19 counties in my district. The Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, of Iowa, had a county agent in each of those 19 counties, and he fixed their salaries at $200 each. Notwithstanding that every one of them was getting a certain amount of pay from the county, and received the $200 per month from the Government in addition to the extra pay from the county.

Mr. DIRKSEN. They were not Republicans, were they?

Mr. BLANTON. Unfortunately, some of them are. Henry Wallace, having been a lifelong Republican himself, is not adverse to appointing Republican employees. But I do not approve of it. And I do not believe that the other Congressmen from Texas approve of his appointing any Republican county agents in our districts at $200 a month salary. I have seen measure after measure passed here when they could not be amended, creating a special bureau or commission to spend money out of the Public Treasury and give them carte-blanche authority to select their own personnel, without limitation as to number, and fix salaries, without any restriction, and I have objected to it always, and I have been voted down and the bills have been passed; and then you have seen salaries of $10,000, $12,000, and $15,000 a year paid to some men who back home could not earn $100 a month. I am going to fight against such practice. There are too many heads of families in my district now without jobs and who are not able to earn anything.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

During the recent hearings before the subcommittee on the District of Columbia, I showed under this Classification Act mentioned in this bill, which Governor Myers can go by if he wants to and not go by if he does not want to, that you had little employees here in the District of Columbia, who used to get $1,400 and $1,600 a year, who overnight, under that act back in 1923, were raised to six, seven, eight, and nine thousand dollars. How much longer are you going to stand for that?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. How much longer are you going to stand for that? Outrageous salaries can be paid and are now being paid under that Classification Act of 1923.

I know that under suspension of the rules you have to vote this bill up or down. You will vote it up, because you cannot afford to kill a measure like this that gives to the stockmen of this country the right to get enough money to buy feed to save their cattle from dying. I am with the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK]. He has got a right to protect his cattle up there, and I will help him every time I can; but I am tired of voting for provisions in good bills that give a few little bureau chiefs the right to select a great big personnel, with $40,000,000 to spend, and let them fix the salaries without restrictions, when it is our duty to stop it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I promised first to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. May I observe that section 4 is the identical language in the celebrated home owners' loan bill of 1933?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; and that is the bad and dangerous language that you Republicans taught our Democratic bureau chiefs to put in the bills. You have been teaching them that for the last 12 years. [Laughter.] I have been fighting it and trying to stop it.

That was the language you put in this Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act that Jesse Jones, from my State, is the head of now. You had that language put in it, and I then strenuously objected to it, and called attention to the fact that you would have great big salaries paid under it, and you Republicans said, "Oh, no", and then in less than 6 months I got up on this floor and showed you where they had appointed numerous high-salaried employees, and had one man they were paying $16,000 a year under that act.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas has called attention to section 4 with proper emphasis, in my judgment; and a few moments ago he remarked that no Member could afford to vote against this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Because you have got to vote it up or down and cannot amend it in any particular. You cannot afford to kill it. I wish it could be killed and could be brought back without this provision in it, and then all of us could vote for it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I call the gentleman's attention to another provision of this bill and ask him if he regards it as a fair and square method of dealing with the livestock men? I call attention to paragraph (c), on page 3, that no one of these loans shall be made to a stockman whose cattle are starving, mind you, unless that stockman signs a contract to abide by the orders of the Agricultural Administration from that point on for an indefinite period, with respect to the future production of his cattle.

Mr. BLANTON. I think that is absolutely fair, I will say to my friend.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is that not asking the stockman to put his head in a noose?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not think the Government will ever take advantage of the stockmen under this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Having signed a contract, is he not bound by it?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but he should be willing to sign it. Regardless of that, I do not believe the Government would ever take advantage of them. My friend the gentleman from New York is one of the leaders on his side of the House and has performed distinguished service to his Nation. If he were lending his own money, he would not lend it on cattle unless he had the right to require certain safeguards. Why, some of the banks even go so far as to say how they should be pastured and fed and where they should be pastured and fed and where they should be marketed. This provision he refers to, section 3, is reasonable.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman permit me to use half a minute? I promised to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. My purpose in getting this time is to ask a question. For the first time since I can remember there is a very serious drought situation in the western and northern part of New York. These are dairy sections. The drought has become so acute there since last year that portions of many herds of highly bred cattle have had to be sacrificed. They are now trying to carry the stock over this winter. There is less than a ton of hay per cow in those districts. Cornell University has found that those areas, embracing eight counties, are in the drought section of the country, but, under the ruling of the Department of Agriculture, I understand that the drought area was found to be west of the Mississippi River. Now, under the terms of this bill, will any relief be afforded the drought areas of New York?

Mr. JONES. This bill is country-wide. It is quite probable that the greater part of the money will be lent where the drought has been the heaviest, but the provisions of the bill are country-wide. The provision of the bill that was under discussion a minute ago would apply. There is in existence at the present time under a different classification an act making available relief loans for feed for cattle in desperate condition. That is a separate and distinct measure. This measure, however, will cover the country in its entirety. But, as I say, a greater amount will be loaned in the areas where the drought was most severe.

Mr. REED of New York. There is a fund now being administered for this purpose, I understand?

Mr. JONES. Yes; that is different from this bill.

Mr. REED of New York. I understand this applies if Government officials find a drought condition in any part of the country.

Mr. JONES. I understand so.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, in considering this bill I want to point out the fact that feed prices have advanced from 200 to 300 percent in the last year. I am in favor of a bill of this nature. I think it is very necessary that we have some such relief at this time. I think, however, that $1,000,000 is entirely inadequate, because a year ago we had much easier conditions, prices of feed were much less than they are today. This language is contained in paragraph (b) of page 3 of the bill:

> That in any area certified by the President of the United States to the Governor as a distressed emergency area, the Governor may make loans without regard to the foregoing limitations as to amounts under such regulations and with such maturities as he may prescribe therefor.

There are certain areas which are not construed as primary drought-stricken areas. They are construed as secondary areas, or they are not classified at all.

The farmers in all drought-stricken areas, both primary and secondary, should be provided for in the broad interpretation and administration of the act. I do not know how we can make the act more effective unless we can increase the amount to $3,000,000, $4,000,000, or even to $5,000,000.

The bill is not perfect; but having been brought up under a suspension of the rules, there are no amendments permissible. Owing to the emergency which exists and regardless of the fact that the bill carries such a small appropriation for feed for livestock, in order to expedite the passage of the bill and thus speed up making the funds available for the farmers, even as the bill stands I shall vote for it, trusting that in some other manner more means will be provided for additional relief to the unfortunate farmers who have not the money with which to provide feed for their livestock.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GEHRMANN].

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I certainly am in accord with the bill as proposed; but it does not provide sufficient funds to buy feed for cattle in the stricken areas which need feed and need it badly. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] that the amount of money provided by this bill is inadequate. The probable result will be that those areas which are not now designated as primary drought areas will be left out. In that case of my own district, nearly the entire district, is not designated as a primary drought area. Only a few days ago we met with the administration and tried to iron this out, but so far we have not been very successful. It seems that a survey was made some time last summer, but conditions have changed entirely since the survey was made, and those districts that were not so seriously affected in the early summer had absolutely no emergency crops because of the continuance of the lack of rain, while other sections in the primary drought area had rains and harvested fair emergency crops. Many farmers in my district are absolutely without any more feed for their livestock, and something must be done immediately to save those cattle from starvation. I have received many resolutions from county boards which happen to be in that belt. I also have a stack of petitions from farm organizations and communications from county agents, as well as other business groups, calling my attention to the seriousness of the feed situation.

Those farmers are destitute and have no feed left in their barns and no credit left to buy with. The relief administration demands negotiable notes before it will give feed to those farmers. The majority of those farmers needing feed are already mortgaged for all they are worth, in addition to several years' feed loans, back interest, taxes, and so forth. The Relief Administration, or at least some of those administering relief, tell the farmers to get rid of their cattle. It seems that they are desirous of forcing those farm families on the permanent relief role, because when you force them to get rid of their foundation herds they will have no income for several years to come, if they should be allowed to remain in their homesteads.

We hope and have every reason to believe that we will have a normal season this year, because of the abundance of snow now covering the fields. We have normally an abundance of the finest pasture in my district, and the farmers would be enabled to pay back some of their obligations if they could keep their dairy cows and take the income from them during the summer without any feed expense. That would give them a new lease on life. But if you make the farmer get rid of his cows at this time of the year, when at least half of the feeding season is behind him, you will most certainly force him into bankruptcy and onto the permanent relief rolls. The farmer must have the needed feed without the Government's insisting on any kind of negotiable or secured paper, and must have it without any more delay or red tape.

Another provision in the ruling of the Relief Administration that is incorrect is the provision that the maximum allowed to any farmer per month is $24.99. That will buy just about 1 ton of hay in my district. How many dairy cows can a farmer feed in 1 month on a ton of hay? Not more than two or three. The maximum should at least be doubled and common sense used in granting the farmer's needs.

I realize fully that feed is very scarce and expensive this year, but the only way, as stated before, is to allow the destitute farmer to keep his foundation dairy herd, so that with more favorable weather conditions and better prices he may see a ray of hope of somehow working out of the deplorable condition he finds himself in today.

The dairy farmers especially have been entirely ignored and forgotten. They are forced to pay the processing taxes to most of the other branches of the agricultural industry but are denied the possibility of raising their foundation herd when the barn feeding season is now half over and after they have submitted to elimination of a large percentage of their herds by tubercular tests and the Bang's disease test that in many instances takes the entire herd.

We will be so short of both dairy and beef cattle that we shall be building up the finest market for Argentine and New Zealand farmers, and those of our farmers that still have their herds will have to face that kind of cheap-production competition, while a large percentage will be forced into competition with the millions of unemployed and on relief, just because of the short-sightedness of the Relief Administration.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this bill, which authorizes an appropriation of $40,000,000 so that emergency crop loans may be made in 1935, is, in my judgment, a matter of great importance.

The loans made last year were of great benefit to those farmers who were unable to secure credit elsewhere and enabled many small farmers to make a living from their crops who otherwise would have been unable to do so, and who would have been upon the relief rolls.

I have cooperated with my colleague from Texas [Mr. JONES], Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, urging early consideration of this measure, and I congratulate him and the committee on their action in presenting it at this time, for heretofore the legislation authorizing such loans has been delayed until it was too late for some farmers to secure the necessary credit in making their crops.

The larger farmers are benefited by other legislation and are able to secure loans from the banks and other governmental agencies, but this measure is designed primarily to help the small farmer who cannot secure credit elsewhere.

Owing to the devastating drought last year, the need for these loans is even greater than in 1934, for many farmers were unable to make any feed whatever, and few, if any, in my section made sufficient feed with which to carry on their crop operations.

The report of the committee states that 65 percent of these loans heretofore made have been paid, and I doubt whether the percentage of repayment has been that high in any of the other loans made by the Government. This shows the great need for the loans, and the farmers have shown their appreciation by prompt repayment. Over 90 percent of these loans made in my district have been repaid.

Mr. Charles W. Sherrill, regional manager in charge of the organization making these loans in Texas, has done a splendid work, and he and his organization are to be congratulated thereon.

As in 1934, the crop loans will be made to the farmers without any security except a lien upon the crop to be grown, but loans for feed of cattle will require a lien upon the cattle to be fed.

The rate of interest to be charged for the loans will be 5½ percent per annum. The amount appropriated for these loans in 1934 was $35,000,000. The present bill carries an authorization of $40,000,000.

A large number of letters have been received by me from farmers urging the passage of this legislation, and the letters are not inspired but come from individual farmers who deeply realize the need thereof.

Today I received a letter from a farmer in Limestone County advising that he had started preparing his land for cultivating a crop but was unable to go any farther until he could get a crop loan, and that he had a large family and needed help, but that unless he could get a loan such as he secured last year he would be unable to make a crop and would have no means whatever for the support of himself and his family. Thousands of other farmers in my district are in the same condition.

Surely the Government can render no finer service than to extend this aid to finance worthy and deserving farmers who are trying so hard to make a living, and no one who understands the agricultural conditions would for one moment think of opposing a measure like this.

Other relief legislation which we have passed and will pass at this session may be experimental, but the relief afforded by this bill has already been demonstrated to be practical, effective, and indispensable for the small farmers in the United States. It is imperative that this bill become a law at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, during the dry spell last year I had occasion to travel some 7,000 miles in 7 weeks within the borders of my State. I could travel 250 miles a day and not see any more grass than may be seen on the floor of this Chamber today. Because the farmer had no feed and in many cases no water, I saw the cattle and the hogs taken off the farms and shipped to the city for slaughter. This included their milk cows. Even the chickens were sent to market. My friends, it is beyond me to picture in words the conditions that really existed in rural Missouri.

God only knows how those farmers are existing today. They had no gardens, no fruit, and existed upon canned goods during the summer. Think of farmers buying canned goods in June, July, and August and you have some little idea of conditions. They have absolutely nothing to start on this year, and the Congress must come to their assistance. I contend that until the farmer has his buying power restored we in the cities cannot expect to sell what our factories turn out.

My only regret is that this bill does not carry a larger amount. The farmers in the dry territory are starting all over. They must get cattle, hogs, and even chickens. If they have been able to save their work stock, they must be existing upon straw as they had no money to buy oats or hay.

If the farmers would have had their normal yield of corn this year, they would be richer in my State by $150,000,000. Think of the sum the farmers of Missouri alone lost by this unprecedented dry spell.

I commend the chairman of the committee and the committee for bringing in this bill and passing it at the present time, and I know that the appropriation authorized by the measure will be speedily provided for, so that the loans may be made in plenty of time for the farmers to buy feed for what little cattle they have left and also plan next year's crop. This is an emergency greater, I think, than any we have faced in recent years. Let there be no time lost in assisting those who need our help at the moment.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] such time as he may desire.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion this bill is possibly as important a piece of legislation from the standpoint of real benefit as any that will come before this House. It furnishes an opportunity and an avenue of credit to a class of people that otherwise could not be reached save through the relief roll and permits them to stay off the relief roll.

This measure calls upon the borrower to establish only one qualification, and I refer particularly to a question presented by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] with reference to the fact that he claimed this bill provided that no man could receive credit without putting his head in a noose, and referred particularly to the cattlemen. As one of that group, I favor for real consideration merely a careful reading of the language of the bill.

Under the present emergency legislation, adopted by this Congress and presented to the President, there have been in all agricultural lines certain very definite evidences of a need for control. The only thing that is asked is that a borrower under this bill will not take advantage of his neighbor. If he is not cooperating in the crop-reduction plan, all he must show is that he does not by borrowing this money intend to increase his production of any controlled commodity.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. Does not the bill give the authority making the loan the right to make such regulations as he sees fit? And at the present time are not all of these loans made on a contract which provides just as suggested by the gentleman from New York, namely, the man submits not only to control this year but to such rules and regulations as shall be made in the future by the department controlling and regulating not only the cattle but the dairy industry?

Mr. KLEBERG. May I say to the gentleman from Michigan that in my district where the loans were made last year that was not the case. All the borrower had to do was to establish the fact, if he was not cooperating under actual acreage or crop reduction, that he did not propose to increase his production.

Mr. MICHENER. They brought me some of the contracts at home, and I read them. There is a provision in fine print that the borrower of the money agrees in the future to such rules and regulations as shall be made by the Department of Agriculture controlling the thing covered by the mortgage.

Mr. KLEBERG. I do not desire to take much time. I interrupt only for the purpose of asking the gentleman to read carefully the regulation referred to, and he will find in the last analysis that the only reservation is there shall be no increase of production by the party applying for the loan.

Mr. MICHENER. I refer to the contract which is out at the present time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, nearly every day since Congress convened I have received letters from farmers of my district stating that they had no money with which to purchase seed; that neither the banks nor the Farm Credit Administration will loan them money; and that unless some provision is made for seed loans the crops cannot be planted.

I am tempted to observe in passing that the existence of a condition of this kind, especially in districts like my own which are not in the drought area, does not tend to confirm the boast of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration that its crop-curtailment program has restored the purchasing power of the farmer. Nothing could more effectively demonstrate that the farmer still has no purchasing power than the fact that hundreds of thousands of them are unable, after 3 years of A. A. A. administration, even to purchase seed with which to plant their crops.

I appreciate the prompt action of the committee in recognizing this situation and in reporting out this bill making available $40,000,000 for seed loans; but I want to state to the committee what it undoubtedly knows if it has made a real investigation of the matter, and that is that the bill is not adequate to meet this emergency.

Also, while I approve of the prompt action of the committee on getting a seed-loan bill before us, I do not at all approve of some of the provisions and restrictions that have been put in this bill, and I object most emphatically to the bill's being brought up under suspension of the rules, which prevents any amendment to it here and which, consequently, precludes the House from giving these farmers any further relief than that decided upon by the committee.

I shall be obliged to vote for this bill, of course, because I know it is the only bill on this subject we will have a chance to vote on at this session, and not because I think it meets the legitimate needs of the farmers who are faced with the necessity of either borrowing money to buy seed or of going out of business, which in turn means going on the relief rolls. I shall vote for the bill, therefore, in spite of the fact that, in my opinion, it is both inadequate and in some respects discriminatory.

In the first place, $40,000,000 will not furnish the money necessary for this seed-purchase financing, and, in the second place, there is no necessity for making these loans carry an interest rate of 5½ percent, which the bill provides.

The experience of the Government in making seed loans to farmers has been highly satisfactory. They have proved to be among the very best loans the Government has made. The money has invariably been repaid. Why, then, limit the amount to $40,000,000 when we all know that amount will not be sufficient and when we know that it is safely possible to make a sufficient amount available?

Again, why charge the farmer 5½ percent on these loans, when a less burdensome rate would suffice to pay the cost of financing? It cannot be urged that a lower rate of interest would be detrimental to banks and other loaning agencies. Banks and other loaning agencies are not making such loans to any extent. Besides, under this, as well as other seed-loan laws, the loans are limited to those particular farmers who have been unable to secure seed loans from banks or other lenders. Loans under this bill cannot compete with private business. It is my contention, therefore, that the bill could safely and properly provide, and should provide, more money for this admittedly necessary purpose and that it should be provided at a lower rate of interest.

Another objection to the committee bill is the dictatorial and discriminatory provision under subsection 2 of paragraph C of section 2, which limits these seed loans to those farmers, and those only, who will agree to sign the A. A. A. crop-reduction contracts, who, in event it should become necessary to increase agricultural production next year, will agree to increase it only to the extent the Secretary of Agriculture wants it to be increased. That these are the plain provisions of this subsection no one can possibly deny. The language precludes entirely any other construction.

Why such a restriction and limitation in a relief bill which is supposed to help all farmers who are in financial distress? Why this discrimination? Why include as eligible for this relief only those farmers whose political and economic views on agricultural control meet with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture? Are the only worthy farmers in this country those who adhere 100 percent to the crop-reduction program of the A. A. A.? Are the only farmers deserving of aid those who are willing in writing to put themselves under the dominance of the Agricultural Department?

Please understand that I am not arguing here that the A. A. A. program is wrong. That is beside the point I am endeavoring to make. I am aware that some persons who are supposed to be experts in agriculture are of the opinion that the A. A. A. program is the proper solution to our farm difficulties. I am also aware, on the other hand, that there are just as many experts who are opposed to it, and that the latter, incidentally, include many very high authorities in the field of agriculture.

But whether right or wrong, the A. A. A. crop-curtailment program has heretofore been at least a voluntary program; one which the farmer has been entirely free either to accept or to reject. That was one of the principal arguments made for it when the act was passed. In cotton only has the administration's crop-control plan been made compulsory by law. But this bill, so far as applicants for seed loans are concerned, makes the administration's crop-control plan compulsory in the production of every farm commodity because it denies financial relief in the way of seed loans to all farmers who refuse to adhere to that plan and to cooperate with it.

Since hundreds of thousands of farmers, including those who believe that compulsory crop production is wrong, must now either get these loans or go on the relief rolls, and since the only way they can get a seed loan is to agree in writing to allow the A. A. A. to control the amount of their production, it will be readily seen that, as to farmers in actual need and who cannot obtain seed-loan money from private sources, this bill virtually repeals the voluntary provisions of the Government's crop-control program and makes adherence to it compulsory.

Now let me say, Mr. Speaker, that there was no need whatever for this bill to be brought in under suspension of the rules. There is no reason in the world, even now, why it cannot be considered under an open rule that will allow us to offer amendments to it. The element of time cannot be properly pleaded by the majority organization for it so happens that on this day the House has absolutely nothing of importance on its calendar. Such amendments as Members desire to offer, including those I have here suggested, could be offered under the usual 5-minute rule and this bill, with such amendments as might be adopted, could easily reach a vote before adjournment today.

We could, if the majority organization would allow us, make this relief bill an adequate bill, a fair bill, and a bill treating all deserving farmers alike, regardless of whether or not they see eye to eye with the Secretary of Agriculture on the question of crop control.

Now, why are we prevented from doing this? We are prevented from doing this solely because the Agriculture Department does not want the bill amended. The Agriculture Department does not want the bill amended because it wants to continue and to increase its power and its domination over our whole farm population. It wants compulsory crop control in every branch of farm production, just as it now has it in cotton. It has taken the first step toward this goal in the pending bill by the simple and cunning device of withholding necessary seed loans from farmers until they agree to raise their crops and operate their farms in accordance with the administration's curtailment plan.

I stated at the outset that in view of the emergency confronting the farmers I would vote for this bill in spite of its defects and even in spite of its discriminatory provisions, because it is the only bill on this subject which the majority organzation will permit the House to vote on. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration, which seems to dominate every action of the Agriculture Committee of the House, has said, in effect, that the farmer can have this particular seed-loan bill just as it is written, or nothing.

The committee, with its proxy from the A. A. A., in turn dominates the House majority on agricultural legislation, and it says to the majority party here, "The farmer can have this bill or nothing." The majority party in its turn says to the minority, "The farmer can have this or nothing." Therefore this or nothing is what the farmer will get. This, of course, is gag-rule legislation carried to the *n*th degree; but that is a thing which invariably happens whenever one party has a 3-to-1 majority in the House of Representatives.

Well, Mr. Speaker, inadequate as this bill is and dictatorial as it is, it is admittedly better than nothing, and as between this and nothing there is obviously no room for choice. The farmers should know, however, why a better bill has not been permitted to pass the House, and it is to this end chiefly that I have addressed myself.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON].

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise primarily for the purpose of directing one or two questions to the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

I see that the appropriation made in this bill is $40,000,000. Will the chairman please tell the House how much money was made available for seed loans under legislation enacted last year?

Mr. JONES. Forty million dollars was made available and $38,000,000 was used under that bill.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does not the chairman of the committee believe, in view of the unprecedented drought that has existed during the past year in the Middle West and the country generally, that a much larger sum will be needed to meet the requirements this year than a year ago?

Mr. JONES. The gentleman understands that a good many funds were used under the relief provisions of other measures. The Department estimates that this will cover all of the applications for loans of this particular type.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, I am glad the committee has acted with promptness in bringing this bill before the House for consideration, but I regret that the measure comes up under suspension of the rules and is therefore not subject to amendment. It is my conviction that the sum made available by a bill pending in another body—$100,000,000—is not excessive. It should be borne in mind that the greatest drought in the history of the country has so taxed the resources and the credit of many farmers, who a year ago could obtain money through the regular channels, that they cannot hope this year to borrow from the banks. There is only one place these farmers can go, and that is to the United States Government. If we fail to provide enough, there may be hundreds of thousands of acres left fallow, whose owners, instead of being self-supporting citizens, will have to ask for relief.

I am not one of those who are willing to throw public funds around with reckless abandon; but I submit that it is not economy to be niggardly with money for seed loans, to be secured by a first lien on crops, at a time when we allow the public credit to be used by relief agencies to raise funds for laying out golf courses and building ski runways. I submit that it is better to provide farmers with seed for growing crops than to give them employment next fall for frivolous and fruitless made-work projects.

The trouble with so many of the appropriations we make in the name of relief is that the funds do not reach the people who need help. So much of the money sticks to the fingers of those who get the fat contracts, to the owners of labor-saving, job-killing machines, to those who manufacture or haul materials, that only a little is left for the people who really need relief. Here is an opportunity to do something for men in distress, to provide a sum every cent of which will actually relieve. While throwing billions into a fatuous P. W. A. program, the futility of which as a reemployment device was demonstrated in Great Britain years ago, we skimp and trim in order to save a paltry $60,000,000. Why do we do it? To save more money for courthouses, post offices, town halls, and Roman baths?

Tomorrow we shall be asked for $4,000,000,000, to be expended without restrictions or reservations, to continue the farce. We spent $2,000,000,000 last year and gave 475,000 men work, if we may believe the figures of the Department of Labor. Presumably, with $4,000,000,000 we shall be able, if we succeed to the same degree, to employ 950,000—less than one-tenth of the Nation's unemployed.

I tell you that if large areas go unseeded next year—as they will if the funds we vote fail to meet the needs—the luckless farmers who are victims of our thrift may add as many to the ranks of those who need jobs as the $4,000,000,000 will put to work.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I rise simply to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this important bill. It is now 2:20 in the afternoon. The House has no other business for the afternoon. This is one of the most important matters that will come before the Congress. It is brought up without any notice and under suspension of the rules, where the only thing anybody can do is to make a speech for back home. He cannot offer an amendment. I am therefore going to ask the splendid chairman of the committee, who always has been interested in the farmer at heart, in view of these circumstances and under these conditions, that he be generous and permit, by unanimous consent the reading of this bill in the usual way for amendment to the end that the House may be permitted to offer such amendments as in the judgment of the House are for the best interests of the farmer.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman grant the request?

Mr. JONES. If the gentleman will give me time, I will give him my position.

Mr. MICHENER. I do not want the position, I want the privilege to amend.

Mr. JONES. Then the gentleman does not want me to reply.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR].

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I indulge the hope that this Congress will unanimously pass this measure. I represent one of the great agricultural districts of this Nation, and I know how essential these loans have been to the people in my district and in my State. This is the only way we have been able to take care of the small farmer who for 5 years has had no other possible way of getting capital to continue his business and take care of his family. The merit of this loan and the objection to same have been time and again discussed before this House, and the objection to the passage of this bill today is without merit; it is purely political in its nature and should have no place in the discussion of a measure so vital to the welfare of the American farmer.

These loans have been most successful in North Carolina, and I am pleased to say to the Congress today that my State has paid back about 99 percent of the loans that have been made there. Our farmers want them again. It makes them feel secure. They do not have to go and beg people or banks for money to make their crops to take care of their families. They feel they can go to the Government and on easy terms obtain money, and they have heretofore been fortunate enough to pay back these loans. These loans have stimulated the pride of the American farmer and done much to convince him of the honest endeavor of Congress to help him as he struggles to bring back prosperity to this country.

I know of no privilege or no power extended to the farmer in this country that has aided him or helped him more than these crop loans and the other loans described in this bill.

I hope the Congress will unanimously extend this right to the poor small farmer, who is the real farmer that produces a large percentage of the wealth of this Nation, in order that he may again get this loan and take care of his crop and of his industry.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the courtesy of the gentleman from Texas in yielding me this time. I also appreciate the circumstances under which the committee and its chairman have brought in this bill in its present form. I believe further that it is utterly inadequate, in view of the conditions that prevail throughout the Northwest. It carries $1,000,000 for feed for livestock, and yet in my own district and the other Wisconsin districts in the drought section there are over 1,000,000 dairy cows for which the farmers are unable to provide feed.

Farmers are selling valuable dairy cows as low as $8 and $10 a head, because they have nothing to feed them. More than a million cows in Minnesota and the Dakotas are without a sufficient supply of feedstuffs. This bill provides only $1,000,000 to take care of two millions or two and one-half millions of dairy cows, not to mention many thousands of other livestock.

The regulations governing feed loans also serve to prevent the farmers from obtaining necessary feed for their dairy herds.

I hope the committee will bring in another bill providing a larger fund, and also providing new regulations, which will enable the dairy farmers to obtain feed for their stock without so much redtape and so many restrictions. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a great deal of talk about the money for feed included in this bill. This is not the major purpose of this bill. Its purpose is not to provide feed for distressed livestock. That work is carried on under the direction of the F. E. R. A. I am in the cattle and stock business myself, and a million dollars would not be a drop in the bucket if that was undertaken in this bill.

You will notice that the bill says that the lien will be a first lien on the cattle. It will constitute the first lien on this cattle, and anyone that owns cattle and owns them clear can go to any private institution—any bank—and borrow money to feed his stock. There are some private banking institutions that still function. The Government has not entirely taken over the financial structure of the Nation.

The real purpose of this bill is to provide seed loans for people who cannot get seed in any other manner. The seed-loan set-up has been in existence for several years, and has functioned very well. Many farmers who otherwise would have had to let their land lie idle, sell their stock, and move to town to be on charity have been able to stay on the farm because of crops raised from loans in previous years.

I urge the immediate passage of this bill, because in my State the time to plant oats is near at hand, and this need for seed oats must be met in the next 30 or 40 days, or many farmers will not be able to plant this important crop. [Applause.]

Mr. HULL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. HULL. I call the gentleman's attention to line 9, "One million dollars for feed for livestock." I also would like to ask the gentleman where these banks are situated that will loan money for feed on livestock?

Mr. FERGUSON. The Government has set up all over the United States financial structures for loaning money on cattle. First, the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation loaned several hundred million. They are being succeeded now by the Production Credit Corporation, which will loan money to any man on his cattle under the same provisions as required under this act.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to myself. There appears to be some confusion about the purpose of this bill, especially as it relates to feed loans, and I am glad that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERGUSON] made the explanation he did, which is entirely correct, in that this bill is not primarily supposed to make provision for feed loans. All of the feed loans and cattle loans made last year, with the exception of about half a million dollars, were made under the provisions of other relief acts. This is primarily a crop-loan bill, to provide funds for buying seed, fertilizer, gasoline for tractors, and feed for work stock. It, of course, must be regarded as a relief measure, as an emergency measure, and I do not believe that any of the relief measures which have been passed during the period of this depression have resulted in as much real benefit and in as little cost to the Government as these seed loans. If gentlemen will refer to the table which is contained in the report on the bill, they will find that of all the seed loans that have been made since 1921 down to date 65.8 percent have been repaid. I venture to say that when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation winds up its business, and when some of these other Government lending agencies wind up their business, the percentage will not be any larger than that. There is a greater need this year for these loans than has existed at any time before, especially in the Middle West, because the most devastating drought in all the history of the Mississippi Valley occurred last year, and, as has been related here by those who have preceded me, an entire stretch of country, hundreds of miles in either direction, was laid waste and became as desolate as if a prairie fire had burned across it.

It is to the farmers in that section who mainly, because of the drought, have not the wherewithal to go ahead and put in a crop, but who have the land and the machinery and the knowledge of farming, that it is proposed to lend this money. If they do not receive these loans to enable them to go ahead with their farming operations they will undoubtedly become subjects for relief, and it will cost this Government many times the amount which will be consumed in these loans even if we were to assume that not a penny is going to be repaid.

I am not one of those who objects to the provision in this bill that a farmer who secures one of these loans must cooperate with the crop-adjustment program of the Government. I think I would be opposed to the bill if it did not contain that provision, because it is not fair to the farmers who are voluntarily cooperating in the adjustment program for another department of the Government to lend money to those who will not lend them cooperation and who by their failure to do so wreck and ruin the efforts of those farmers who are willing to work together in a general program.

Criticism has been made here this afternoon that under this bill we are encouraging farmers to grow crops whereas, under other legislation, we are paying farmers to destroy crops or to reduce them. Superficially it might seem this was inconsistent. Actually, however, it is not. The present crop-production-control program is not necessarily a reduction program. Rather it is a plan to adjust production and demand. This may involve decreased production in some years and increased production in others. Certainly it is not contemplated at any time that there should be a reduction by forcing thousands of farmers entirely out of business, and yet that is just what will happen in the drought area this year if these loans are not available. If the loans were not made it might conceivably happen that there would develop an actual shortage of food products. These loans furnish insurance against that contingency and at the same time will enable thousands of farmers to remain on their land as producers instead of going on relief.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon also.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, if there ever was an emergency bill demanding immediate enactment, this is it. I should like to change some things in the bill myself. When it was considered before the Agricultural Committee I suggested changes. I should like to see them made now, but the necessity of the hour demands quick action upon the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. We have plenty of time and we can open the bill up if the chairman will permit and make the amendments the gentleman desires here now. The bill will become a law as quickly as if it is rushed through without an opportunity for amendment.

Mr. PIERCE. I am not managing the passage of the bill. That is the business of the chairman. I refuse to yield further. We are justified in passing this under any sort of rule, because there are literally thousands of farmers throughout this Nation who are depending upon the enactment of this legislation before they can plant their fields. The crop season is on now. Here it is nearly the last of January. The bill has to go through the Senate. It should be passed at this time, right now. That is why I justify the action of the House in passing the bill at this time without amendment and under the conditions as it is brought up. It is absolutely necessary that it be enacted at once. The amount of money that has been lost in these loans is infinitesimal, as compared with the amount of good the seed-loan legislation has done, as anyone can see by looking at the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. COFFEE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to call the attention of the House to the necessity for speed in enacting this legislation. Unless we can provide these loans soon, the farmers will have no use for the money. I know on previous occasions when legislation of this kind was enacted at such a late date the farmers were penalized because it was impossible for them to reap the benefit from the loans that they should have had they been made available to them sooner.

I simply want to stress to the members of the House the fact that I am receiving many letters every day urging that some action be taken immediately to provide seed loans because in my own State of Nebraska, where the drought was especially severe this past year, in many cases 90 percent of the farmers are going to be in need of these loans. It is impossible for them to finance their requirements through any other governmental agency or through private banks.

I hope the House will see that this bill is enacted quickly to relieve the distress that is bound to result from any unnecessary delay in putting through this very important relief measure.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining 2 minutes of my time.

I am for every provision of this bill except section 4. As it is before us, we cannot change the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t." It cannot be amended and has to be passed as it is, but I have raised this question about section 4 with the hope that when this bill goes to the Senate of the United States the Senate will properly amend section 4, safeguarding it with limitations and restrictions.

It is our duty to fix salaries. It is our duty to say how many employees may be selected and put on the pay roll. It is not the duty of some bureau chief, like Governor Myers. He may not fix them as we would want them fixed.

I can remember when this House passed the bill that created the Farm Board and permitted the Board members to draw $12,000. Mr. Legge was chairman of the Board, and while he drew $12,000 himself, he approved salaries up to $50,000 and $75,000.

He approved arrangements that permitted Mr. Creekmore to draw from the farmers of the United States a salary of $75,000, the same salary that your President in the White House draws. He approved, permitting another man, Mr. Milnor, to draw a $50,000 salary. That kind of a salary is unearned, and we ought not to stand for it. We are delegating the power of Congress whenever we give a board member like Governor Myers the authority to select personnel without limit and carte-blanche authority to fix salaries without limit. It is not good legislation. It is not good statesmanship to do it. I am against it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] seems to be excited about section 4. I wish to call his attention to the fact that this provision is in all similar bills.

Mr. BLANTON. And we ought to stop it. We ought not to allow the provisions of section 4 to be placed in any more bills. I am going to try to stop it.

Mr. JONES. The House passed the Classification Act. The Committee on Agriculture does not have jurisdiction of those acts. Possibly some changes should be made, but certainly it is not the province of the Committee on Agriculture, in a bill like this, to undertake to correct any defects that may exist in the Classification Act, of which the committee has no jurisdiction.

The gentleman knows that under the Classification Act no large salaries can be paid.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but if Governor Myers deems it impracticable he can ignore the Classification Act and fix the salaries just as he chooses.

Mr. JONES. Now, the gentleman refers to some salaries which he alleges were paid under the old Farm Board. I helped bury the old Farm Board and do not have any apologies for it, and I do not see why that has any bearing on the thing we have before us today. There will be no such salaries paid under this bill. They are going to be paid in accordance with the Classification Act, which sets limits on these salaries.

Besides, this is to be handled by the Farm Credit Administration. This has been one of the best managed of all the Government agencies. It has done magnificent work. Its salaries probably average less than any other activity. Not even the gentleman from Texas would say it has been guilty of abuses in this regard.

Some discussion has developed as to this $1,000,000. I do not know that it was necessary to have that in this bill at all. It does not apply to the type of loans which the gentlemen have been discussing. There was this same provision for $1,000,000 for feed loans last year in this bill, and only about half of it was used.

There were some applications, and those administering the act felt that they should be in a position to take care of those; but the type of loans discussed here today has been loans that do not require a first lien on the livestock. They have been relief loans, handled under a separate provision altogether. So that should not have any particular application here.

Some reference was made to the primary drought area. The primary drought area was designated not for the operation of this bill but for the operation of the relief fund.

This bill is according to the routine of all other bills along similar lines, although I think it is improved. The gentleman referred a while ago to an opportunity for amendment. The gentleman's party passed the first crop-loan bill that was ever passed by this Congress, under suspension of the rules, so he has not any right to complain. The point is that we have a lot of appropriation bills that must be disposed of, and if this bill is to accomplish its best purposes, it must be passed early. If we do not pass it now, it will probably be delayed for some time. There is no other opportunity for legislation of this sort to come up.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. It seems clear from the sentiment of the House and the testimonial meeting here this afternoon that everybody wants to amend this bill and add a little more money. If that is the spirit of the House, we have the time and the gentleman has it within his control to give us an opportunity to vote on that.

Mr. JONES. I will answer the question by asking the gentleman, Does he think that we just ought to open the Treasury of the United States and authorize unlimited loans? Is that the gentleman's position?

Mr. MICHENER. No; but I am opposed to the bill that is coming up tomorrow under a rule.

Mr. JONES. Now, the gentleman is roaring about the fact that we are doing one thing and he is complaining because we are going to do something else tomorrow. He has not been pleased since the days when his party made such a wreck of things. It seems impossible to please him.

Mr. MICHENER. No; I want the same rules today as tomorrow; that the House be given an opportunity to read carefully, to amend, and to express in a bill its wishes.

Mr. JONES. I would suggest that the gentleman read his own remarks under discussion of bills that were passed when his party was in power. I think it will prove a very valuable lesson to him.

Mr. MICHENER. I think not.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Is this bill confined in extent to the drought area or will its provisions be applicable to drought sections all over the country?

Mr. JONES. The provisions of this bill will apply to all parts of the United States, regardless of whether there is a drought area or not, but probably there will be more loans in the drought area than in others, because there is where the greater need will be.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill be passed?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—SEED LOANS

Mr. CARLSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave of extending my remarks in the RECORD on the seed-loan bill (H. R. 3247) will state that I regret the bill was brought in under a suspension of the rules and therefore no amendments were permissible, as I think an appropriation of $40,000,000 for this most necessary relief of the farmers of especially the drought-stricken area of our country is wholly inadequate and should have been at least $80,000,000. Last year under much more favorable circumstances and lower prices for field seeds we used $38,000,000; therefore my contention for a greater appropriation.

It is necessary that the farmers in a large portion of my district be given Government assistance in securing seed loans, as they are using the proceeds of their allotment checks for feed for livestock and for necessary living expenses following the worst drought in our history.

The seriousness of this drought in Kansas can be realized when you analyze our seed and feed loans for last year. Kansas farmers in 1934 secured from the Government seed loans totaling $2,329,180, giving as security the first lien on the growing crop. Had these same farmers harvested a crop, practically every cent of these loans would have been paid; but because of a complete failure in this area, there remains unpaid on the 1934 seed loans in our State $2,309,284. Our farmers have secured $1,181,038 in feed loans up until December 31, which is but the beginning of our winter feeding season. This illustrates the seriousness of our situation and, despite our inability to pay these loans when due, the Government must furnish these same farmers, and many others in our State, with seed and feed loans for 1935 in order that they will not have to place them on direct relief. I am going to insist that additional funds be made available for what I believe to be the greatest emergency facing the American farmers of today.

Mr. FARLEY. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is good. If the bill contained provision for a larger sum than $40,000,000, it would be better. I am earnestly for the enactment of this measure. It designs relief for farmers in many parts of our country who were stricken by the drought of last year. That drought was wide-spread, and in some areas the damage caused and the hardships inflicted were without precedent. Certain it is that in the extent of territory involved and in the total of losses entailed the history of American agriculture can furnish no parallel of such disaster from such cause.

Whether or not the amount of money this bill provides will be equal to the measure of relief needed is, to my mind, a serious question. Since, however, we are not permitted under the circumstances to consider amendment of the bill, we must make the best of an imperative condition and trust that what we are doing will prove ample to carry the relief we intend to all farmers who may be in need of it. It is not probable that we shall have a similar catastrophe this year. We must hope, all of us, that it will be many years before the like may come again; must hope, indeed, that never more will the farmers of America be afflicted by drought as they have been this past year.

Let us bear in mind that this is a purpose to relieve a terrible disaster, to deal with a dire emergency. Let us insist that in the administration of this purpose it constantly be borne in mind just what the character and intent of this relief is to be. Let it be understood that it is meant to help farmers and to help them at once. Let it be clear to all who may be concerned in giving effect to this act that it is to aid those farmers who cannot at this time look to any other source for relief. By that I do not mean there should be carelessness, or extravagance, or inefficiency in dispensing this relief. I do mean that the act should be liberally construed and generously applied where need is shown and help is deserved. We are attempting to master a crisis that spreads over immense territory through many States. There is not merely an emergency; there are thousands of emergencies.

The plight of every stricken farmer, for whom the benefits of this act are intended, is his own individual and critical emergency. We of the House are putting this bill through under the circumstances that attend our action to save time and render the means we are furnishing available at the earliest possible day to the farmers who need the help. It is my hope, as I know it must be yours, that in the administration of this act the time we save here may not elsewhere be lost. The sooner this help gets to the farmers who are to be relieved, the better it will be for them and for the country.

Under the leadership of President Roosevelt the Government is making courageous and effectual assault on the depression, which for a dozen years has been so heavily bearing down upon American agriculture. His plans have been bold. His initiative has been aggressive. His vision has been far-seeing. President Roosevelt has had, as I hope most of us now have, an objective that lifts above and goes beyond mere relief of agriculture. In a variety of ways and to an extent not in the ken of the wildest dreamer a decade ago, this Government is trying to effect the financial reconstruction of American agriculture.

The President wants and we want to effect that reconstruction in such wise as that it shall remain the community of independent farmers it has been since the United States became a Nation. We are trying and hope to accomplish a return of the great agricultural industry to a degree of prosperity that in due time and course will permit it to go along upon its own and enable those engaged in it to wipe out their mortgages, pay their other debts, and obtain fair returns upon their investments in lands, buildings, and equipment, as well as to procure decent income from their toil. It is my belief that we shall succeed finally in achieving this great purpose. We must hope so, and we must strive on to work out the complete solution of this difficult problem.

If we succeed in what we are attempting to do and already have made good progress in the doing, we may all of us together claim the honest merit of having wrought as great a triumph over stubborn difficulty as the history of our Government can show. And we must succeed in this vast undertaking; for, if we do not, we can cherish small hope that we shall be able to do for other industry and business of every kind what we are making prodigious effort to bring about. We shall not recapture the prosperity we once had and give it firm establishment until we have restored the American farmer to the plane upon which he once stood and where he again should be.

No longer than 2 years ago the conditions by which the American farmer was borne down upon and hedged about appeared to have come to the worst pass it was possible to conceive. The new policies and the boldness with which those conditions were attacked in this present regime of the Government wrought a great change. Conditions became better; farmers began to see light through the enveloping gloom; there was more than the bare promise of happier times; there was the dawning prospect of ultimate triumph over their misfortunes. Then what was expected to be and should have been a favoring season of growth and harvest became a period of drought that in some great areas of our country made literally a desolation of thousands of farms that needed only the blessing of rain to make them yield.

These desolated farmers must have this help if they are to go on. They must be helped to the means of procuring seed for the current year's crops. They must be aided to take the crops off and to get them to market. In the case of those farmers whose flocks and herds have not been entirely taken, there must be feed to last them until the pastures are green again. Those who have nothing of their livestock left to them should be put in the way of reviving that branch of their business. Not long ago I read newspaper accounts of this drought in which it was asserted that in many instances in some regions farmers did not even have poultry left on their farms. That is a sorry and most unusual state of affairs on any farm. In view of all this I am led to question that the provision made in this bill for feeding will be found equal to the need and demand for help of that kind.

In my own part of Indiana we felt last summer's drought variously. There were limited areas, not widely separated, in some of which rain fell and others in which the drought was severe. Some farmers suffered much and others little. But in no case that I know of were there the extreme conditions and the terrible consequences that made the drought a calamitous visitation in parts of the country to the west and northwest of my State. Where we have had damage, other parts were distant and have had ruin. Yet, Mr. Speaker, there will be occasion for some distribution of this relief among farmers of my own district.

This measure, if I do not misconceive its intent, is our declaration that the farmer who has been broken and ground down by a long train of misfortunes is not beyond the pale of relief; that he is worth helping and should be helped; that he is worth saving and should be saved. We are trying to reach down and get hold of the farmer who has been submerged by this final stroke of calamity which has almost finished him. We want to help him to his feet and aid him to come back. If we do not assist him to continue taking his living from the soil, he must seek livelihood in other industry. And other industry is still unable to provide work for several millions who were brought up to it, who are skilled in it. We do not want to drive any more farmers from their soil to the industrial cities and towns. The unemployed already mobilized in those centers make great armies that for a long time will remain much too large. Nor does the farmer want to quit the soil. He wants to remain on the land so long as it will yield him even a meager living. But he does not want to be forever oppressed by debts he cannot meet and harried by taxes he cannot pay. We have high purpose to reconstruct his industry that it may do something better than give him a bare living. We want, I repeat, to give the farmer his own just share of prosperity. But what we are directly trying to do by means of this bill is to give to those farmers who are now worst off what to them will be literally salvation.

I hope to see this bill on the books a completed law within a few days, and then to learn at an early time that the law is functioning where needed. I hope also to know that it is being administered with all the generosity and promptitude that may be thought consistent with prudence. And, in the presence of the critical individual emergencies we are trying to meet, let us trust that even so precious a virtue as prudence may not be too much overdone.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, the institution of government in this country is fast becoming so cumbersome and complicated that it is bound to fall of its own weight. We can see that the economic crash was principally caused by holding companies and the pyramiding of stock companies one upon another without any firm foundation for any of them. This is nothing to compare with the pyramiding of our bureaus and commissions, one on top of another. We have 48 States that are creating boards and commissions to regulate everything under the sun and all the Federal and State agencies are now exercising legislative functions. Take any merchant, grocer, or druggist for instance, and contemplate the army of inspectors, both State and Federal, with whom he must contend. All these agencies are created under the guise of protecting the people, and various helpless individuals, when as a matter of fact they are the means of taking the control of the Government farther and farther away from the people. The grocer, the druggist, the merchant, the cleaner, the baker must not only go to their State capital, disburse all kinds of fees, and run the gantlet of the various licensing commissions in order to sell beans, dispense castor oil, sell overalls, press pants, or bake a loaf of bread but must then come on to Washington and wait in outer offices and further comply with all kinds of rules and regulations, some of which he will discover have not yet been written out by the department clerk and other regulations unknown to the administrator have been annulled or superseded. All this I say, they must do, before they can conduct their business.

This was not so bad and seemed a sort of practical joke on the middleman until we now discover that the farmers, who make up the big end of the population in this country, and who, up to 1920, had been the freest and the most independent individuals in the country are now immersed in all sorts of forms and book work, and who, if they comply with the forms and regulations set up by the Department of Agriculture, would not have any time left for farming. The majority of farmers are appreciative of what the Government has been doing for them and are for the program, but what they object to is so much governmental redtape and bureaucratic control. A busy farmer some years ago might find it necessary to hire a farmhand; now, if he has any funds to do so, it is necessary for him to hire a secretary instead. Before he can breed his sow he must come to Washington and get a license. He, of course, does not have the funds to come here himself, or to hire a lawyer or a representative to come for him, but he has a bright idea: He has a Representative in Congress, whom the people are hiring; he will take the matter up with his Congressman. The Congressman is only too glad to represent him before the bureaus, and when Mr. Congressman appears before the department or bureau on behalf of his farmer constituent he is given to understand that he is a mere politician and that his action in taking the matter up before the department is politics, and in these busy days the department has no time for politics, and the only representative that Mr. Farmer can afford to have is discredited at the very outset. Congress in attempting to help the distressed farmers passed the Federal Farm Loan Act to authorize the making of loans to farmers to enable them to save their farms and homes. It was not intended by Congress in this law that the Federal land bank should be a money-making institution but one to meet an emergency. Because of the petty politics within the various departments, Congress provided that most of these new set-ups should not come within the Civil Service Act.

Naturally land-bank appraisers had to be appointed, and they for the most part did fairly well, and a certain amount of relief has been given to the farmer through the Federal land-bank loans to enable them to save their homes. Recently it has been ordered that all these land-bank appraisers should be appointed through the Civil Service Commission after taking such examinations as shall be prescribed. Of course, the best and most competent appraisers are the county-commissioner or county-clerk type, who have had a great deal of experience when it comes to appraising real estate. Very few of them will be able to qualify under this new regulation. The civil-service appraiser will realize the permanency of his position, and will therefore have little consideration or sympathy for the farmer who is about to lose his farm. A good example of what may be expected is the action of the postal inspectors—who are under the civil service—inspecting the rural routes in regard to consolidations and extensions. I dare say there is not a Congressman here, outside of the city districts, who has not had considerable difficulty because of the manner in which these inspectors have treated these rural-route matters. We realize that, owing to improved road conditions and modern means of travel, it is practical and economical to make certain consolidations, but never in my experience have I known an inspector to go out and get the farmers together and consult with them in trying to satisfy their needs.

Who is it that has more power when it comes to legislation than Congress, the President, and the Supreme Court all combined? Who is it that has a greater veto power than the President? It is the various bureaucrats here in Washington. Let a Congressman introduce a bill, and it is referred to a committee and immediately a copy is sent to some department. The chances are 99 out of 100, especially if they did not draw the bill or previously agreed to it, they will notify the committee that they disapprove of the bill, and that, for all practical purposes, kills the bill. Go down and take up a ruling with some of the department chiefs, they will tell you very politely that they are helpless, that they are compelled to comply with the laws as Congress passed them, and inform you if you are not satisfied that that matter is up to you as a Congressman, when as a matter of fact the very official wrote the law and Congress no doubt passed it as he wrote it if recommended to do so by the committee in charge, not knowing what it was doing.

Now there is before the United States Supreme Court a momentous question of deciding upon the validity and constitutionality of the act prohibiting the payment of obligations in gold. I read from the Associated Press report in the Washington Star of Saturday, January 12, as follows:

Plans discussed to meet the adverse decision on gold. Move to increase the Supreme Court membership considered among Senators.

And from the body of the article:

THOMAS told newspapermen that one idea under tentative discussion, of which he was not the author, would provide for increasing the membership of the Supreme Court by two or three to make more certain the recovery program would get a new deal.

I voted for this act, and I am hoping that the Supreme Court can find a way to hold it constitutional, for to do otherwise would, I am afraid, create considerable confusion and hardship. For instance, all those obligated on mortgages containing the gold clause would have to pay more than half as much again as the face amount due on the mortgage. There was more fiction than anything else in these gold clauses, for there never was enough gold to pay all these obligations or even the interest on the same, and such agreement is more or less a fraud in itself. To say the least, those assuming such obligations probably did not receive gold in the first instance, and some were speculating upon the possibility that payment would not be demanded in gold and if it was that it would not all be demanded at the same time. Nevertheless, the Court may be justified and compelled according to law and the Constitution to hold otherwise:

I quote again from the Washington Star of Sunday, January 20, 1935, page 2–D, under an article entitled "The Supreme Court Holds the Scales in the Issue of Validity of Contracts", by Owen L. Scott, as follows:

Another suggestion has been made in new-deal quarters. It is that the Court might be "packed" in order to obtain a desired decision. Could something of that kind be done? It might be done if Congress wished. But, again, such action would be flying in the face of precedent and defying the tenets of the American Government as they have come to be accepted.

The Supreme Court constitutes the judicial branch of the Government, and has its responsibility under the Constitution the same as the legislative and executive branches of the Government. Daniel Webster, in a speech delivered in the Senate of the United States on the 11th day of July 1832, spoke thus in regard to the judiciary:

The judiciary is the constitutional tribunal of appeal for the citizens, against both Congress and the Executive, in regard to the constitutionality of laws. It has this jurisdiction expressly conferred upon it, and when it has decided the question, its judgment must, from the very nature of all judgments that are final, and from which there is no appeal, be conclusive. Hitherto, this opinion, and a correspondent practice, have prevailed in America with all wise and considerate men. If it were otherwise, there would be no government of laws; but we should all live under the government, the rule, the caprices of individuals. If we depart from the observance of these salutary principles, the executive power becomes at once purely despotic; for the President, if the principle and the reasoning of the message be sound, may either execute or not execute the laws of the land, according to his sovereign pleasure. He may refuse to put into execution one law, pronounced valid by all branches of the Government, and yet execute another, which may have been by constitutional authority pronounced void.

Furthermore, I trust that the other worth-while emergency legislation passed during this administration will be held constitutional, and the Court in its various decisions has indicated that it will go as far as it can in doing so. However, I never could conceive of the National Industrial Recovery Act being constitutional, and for that reason, among others, I was compelled to vote against it.

To have a majority leader of the Supreme Court and attempt to whip the judges into line with their votes and decisions is repugnant to any judicial system of government and can only be the brain product of bureaucrats, who have no conception of the rights of the people or our form of government. If the Court points out flaws in the laws that we have passed, we have Members of Congress wise enough to correct the same without having to disrupt the courts in this fashion.

This administration cannot permit these bureaucrats and "brain trusters" to injure it and its accomplishments in this manner, or countenance such reflections on its integrity by those who have so little respect for the rights of the people and our Constitution as might make such suggestions, for if we are to permit the bureaus to coerce and prostitute our courts in this fashion and punish them for their decisions, which we must assume are honest and conscientious, then I say, "God help us."

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LUCAS, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. WEAVER, for 4 days, on account of illness and death in family.

To Mr. BERLIN (at the request of Mr. HAINES), for 4 days, on account of official business.

JUST TO KEEP THE RECORD STRAIGHT

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein three letters I have written.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, during the last week of the second primary in August 1934 there was circulated throughout my district a letter signed by Mr. H. H. Price, of Graham, Tex., a pharmacist working in the Ramsey drug store at Graham, Tex.—Mr. J. R. Ramsey being appointed postmaster at Graham, Tex., by the Republicans in 1931. This letter was sent out at a time when it was known I would not have time to answer same and show its falsity. The letter is as follows:

GRAHAM, TEX.

GENTLEMEN: I am writing you in behalf of Mr. Sam Spence, who is a candidate for Congress from the Thirteenth Congressional District. Mr. Spence has served as district attorney of the thirtieth judicial district for the past 6 years and has shown himself to be a man of good character and high integrity, and I think will be a friend in Congress to the druggist.

As you probably already know, in 1929 Hon. W. D. MCFARLANE opposed in the State legislature house bill no. 29, which sought to prohibit the selling of medicine for human consumption by all grocery stores and other agencies except regular pharmacies. In the National Congress, February 1934, when the Copeland-Tugwell bill, No. 52800, was before Congress, which bill sought to amend the Pure Food and Drug Act that was passed in 1906, the Congressman opposed this legislation. All this legislation had the sanction and endorsement of the druggists of the Thirteenth Congressional District, but in spite of that Mr. MCFARLANE saw fit to oppose such legislation.

Therefore, I respectfully solicit your vote and active support of Mr. Sam Spence in the coming primary.

Yours very truly,

H. H. PRICE.

SUPPORTED PHARMACIST BILL

The statement made in the second paragraph concerning my record in the State senate in Texas in 1929, regarding my vote on the pharmacist bill, senate bill no. 49—the only senate bill on this subject considered by the senate in the forty-first legislature—is wholly and totally false, which is verified by the senate journal, as well as the following letter from Senator W. A. Williamson, of San Antonio, Tex, who introduced and sponsored this legislation in the senate:

SAN ANTONIO, TEX., December 22, 1934.

Hon. W. D. MCFARLANE,
Graham, Tex.

DEAR MR. MCFARLANE: I was very much surprised to learn that a letter was circulated in your campaign last summer wherein it was stated that you opposed senate bill no. 49, which I sponsored at the regular session of the forty-first legislature; therefore, in order to keep the records straight, I volunteer the following statement:

"The bill was prepared rather hurriedly; therefore was by no means perfect, and required several amendments to put it in proper form. You not only supported the amendments but voted for the conference report, which was final passage of the bill on February 21, 1929." As stated above, I am simply calling this matter to your attention to keep the records straight.

Sincerely yours,

W. A. WILLIAMSON.

COPELAND-TUGWELL BILL (S. 2800, 73D CONG.)

In regard to my vote in the Seventy-third Congress on the Copeland-Tugwell bill, No. 52800, the statement made in Mr. Price's letter is false and misleading. This measure was never brought before the House or Senate during the Seventy-third Congress for a vote, as is shown by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. There was never any such measure as S. 52800 before the Seventy-third Congress. S. 2800 evidently is the bill referred to, introduced by Senator COPELAND, which was never voted upon by either the House or Senate in the Seventy-third Congress, as verified by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and a letter from Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND, as follows:

JANUARY 21, 1935.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: In accordance with your request, I shall briefly outline the history of the bills that I have introduced in the Senate that have to do with the regulation of commerce in foods, drugs, and cosmetics.

S. 1944 was introduced at the close of the first session of the Seventy-third Congress, on June 12, 1933. Hearings were held on this bill in Washington during the month of December 1933, and a large amount of material was collected at this time that was used in drawing up a revised food, drug, and cosmetic bill that was introduced on January 4, 1934, and numbered S. 2000. Subsequent revisions of this bill necessitated the renumbering of it, and on February 19, 1934, the revised bill was known as S. 2800. Again hearings were held, and again a large amount of information was submitted for use in revising and editing the bill. On March 15 the bill was reported to the Senate by the Commerce Committee, and on May 16 the measure came up for debate on the floor. It should be noted, however, that the bill was never voted upon at the last session of the Congress. A final edition of the bill was printed on June 6, 1934, before the end of the session.

My new bill, S. 5, is, in many respects, similar to the last edition of S. 2800. This bill is now before the Committee on Commerce and will, I trust, be reported to the Senate shortly.

Cordially yours,

ROYAL S. COPELAND.

Hon. W. D. MCFARLANE,
House of Representatives, Washington D. C.

COOPERATES WITH STATE HEALTH DEPARTMENT

My record made in the House and Senate of Texas for 8 years on public-health questions has been intentionally misrepresented by certain medical doctors who have tried to promote their own selfish desires. The following letters will show that I have cooperated with the State health department as well as with the program of the State medical association. At my own expense I returned to Washington during the fall of 1933 and assisted in working out the program that permitted Texas—the only State whose births and deaths were not recognized—to be recognized on vital statistics, as shown by letter from Dr. W. A. Davis, registrar bureau of vital statistics:

AUSTIN, TEX., October 30, 1933.

Hon. W. D. MCFARLANE,

MY DEAR MR. MCFARLANE: I have received your letter of October 7, and should have written you again, after my letter of the 9th, but the announcement that the Census Bureau had admitted Texas to the registration area, not only of deaths but of births, placed an unusual burden on the State registrar.

I want to thank you personally for your efforts to secure what was thought to be the necessary $15,000, but since the Bureau of the Census has admitted Texas I presume that by some arrangement the $15,000 has been made available inside the Department of Commerce, although I do not know this to be a fact.

I want you to remember, Mr. MCFARLANE, that both Dr. Brown, the State health officer, and myself appreciate personally your assistance in this matter, and that if at any time either of us can serve you, if you do not call upon us, we will feel that you have not treated us right.

Yours sincerely,

W. A. DAVIS,
Registrar Bureau of Vital Statistics.

A letter of Dr. Charles M. Rosser, president of the State Medical Association:

DALLAS, January 8, 1934.

Hon. W. D. MCFARLANE,
United States Representative, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. MCFARLANE: You will recall a letter from Dr. W. A. Davis, secretary of the State board of health, in which he very properly expressed his high appreciation of the services which you and other Members of the Texas delegation and our United States Senators rendered in the very important matter of securing for Texas its certification as being included in the registration area.

As chairman of the State board of health, I want to emphasize the value to be attributed to this service, and this I am to do upon the expressed desire accorded by the full board at its recent meeting.

It was an unmerited reflection upon the sanitary situation in our State not to be so recognized, and but for the assistance rendered by you and other loyal Representatives we might yet be suffering such unjustified reflection.

It is our purpose to communicate this view to the medical profession of Texas, through the medical journal of the State association, in some appropriate way during the interval, and I know that the fine men who compose the medical profession of our State will not be unmindful.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely,

C. M. ROSSER.

Mr. Price, as an employee of the Ramsey drug store, and under the influence of the Republican postmaster, Mr. J. R. Ramsey, bitterly opposed me all during my campaign and circulated false statements such as contained in his letter. Mr. J. R. Ramsey is a brother-in-law of Republican Wesley Johnson, who is Republican post-office distributor of north Texas, from whom Mr. Ramsey received his postmastership.

The post office at Graham is located in a building belonging to Republican Johnson, and naturally he wants to keep the post office in his building as long as possible. This same Republican, Wesley Johnson, succeeded in having himself appointed United States district attorney under President Hoover and retained this position almost a year before he was asked to resign on account of inefficiency, which resignation was filed promptly when requested.

This same Republican, Wesley Johnson, made false statements against me in my last race and in my preceding campaign, which statements he knew and which the political hypocrites who used them knew were wholly and totally false. Such campaign tactics have been overwhelmingly repudiated by the voters of my congressional district in the last two campaigns. I was reelected last year carrying 13 out of 15 counties in the district, and my majority in my home county exceeded the combined majority of my opponent in the 2 counties I lost, and I carried my opponent's home town, Burkburnett.

My record of honestly and fairly representing the masses of the people has been overwhelmingly endorsed.

I make the above statement in the interest of keeping the record clear, and ask my friends to be on guard against such false rumors circulated by my political enemies for their own private gain.

HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. IMHOFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IMHOFF. Mr. Speaker, during the last week or two there has been a great deal of discussion concerning the operation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the need of another appropriation to continue the relief to the hard-pressed home owners of our country. At this time I wish to give my impression of the administration of this corporation in my section of Ohio.

No more ideal and humanitarian legislation was ever passed by Congress than this attempt to lift the burden of foreclosure from the shoulders of the unfortunate people who are making Herculean efforts to preserve their homes and the savings of a lifetime for themselves and their children.

While many thousands of homes scattered throughout every State have been saved from foreclosure and loss, the administration of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has been anything but a success. When the Seventy-third Congress passed the act creating this Corporation, hundreds of thousands of home owners throughout the length and breadth of our Nation were facing the loss of their most prized possession—their home. In this emergency Congress intended that this Corporation should be organized quickly, that it should act quickly and efficiently, and that the home owner should be given the benefit of any doubt.

What has been the result? Let us look at the record.

The intertangling redtape and inefficiency of the administration of this Corporation has shrieked to High Heaven.

Under the regulations of the Corporation each State is divided into districts, which districts are further subdivided into subdistricts, made up of so many counties. Each county has a fee appraiser and a flash appraiser. There are also district appraisers and State appraisers, with the last word being said at Washington. As a result of this imposing line-up of appraisers, after a property had run the gamut of appraisals the final value of the property was fixed by men who knew nothing of the peculiar conditions that govern the valuation of property in particular places. The outcome of such a condition of overlapping authority was that in some cases the final appraisal was outrageously high, and in others inexcusably low. There also enters into the matter the great waste of time and money to such an extent that it would be farcical if it were not so tragic.

Then, again, there was the constant change in the regulations governing the granting of loans. In thousands of cases the attorneys in charge of the legal work on the application for loans would work a file through the different offices under a certain set of regulations, when a new regulation would come from Washington and the file would be returned to be worked over under the new regulation and sent on another round of visits to the different offices to be reappraised and reviewed again and again. Days and weeks of useless and tedious toil of these attorneys thus went for naught, and for this extra work they received absolutely no compensation.

In the great emergency that existed when the Home Owners' Loan Act was passed by the Seventy-third Congress, it was expected by Congress that this Corporation would be formed in the shortest possible time and an organization set up that would function efficiently in giving relief to the distressed home owners of America. It was 6 months before the Corporation was formed and nearly a year before loans were being granted.

There is no doubt that many thousands of meritorious loans have been made to distressed home owners, but the maze of redtape, unjust discrimination, inefficiency, and delay in the administration of this act has in a large measure defeated the very purpose that Congress had in mind when the act was passed.

It has been pointed out heretofore upon the floor of the House that there has been a general air of inefficiency surrounding the Home Loan Administration. It is a matter of common knowledge that the offices of Members of the House have been besieged by home owners who, during the past year had made application for loans, but who could get no word as to the disposition of their application. Applications have been known to lie in the office where they were filed for a year without any action whatever, and no attention paid to letters of inquiry from the home owner.

It has come to my attention that employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation have gone for months at a time without being paid for their services; that in some cases the proper forms necessary for applications and appraisals were not provided the district office, and were finally secured only after repeated requests to those higher in authority; that the agent of the district offices in many cases had to plead with their superiors in order to secure the necessary equipment for their offices.

You have heard from other Members of the House of instances where banks in the process of liquidation were permitted to transfer their mortgages to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and also of other instances of individuals who were not in distress being advised and permitted to unload their mortgages upon the Government. Cases of this kind run into the thousands.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that such inefficiency and discrimination is absolutely inexcusable and indefensible. As a result of such maladministration, there are hundreds of thousands of distressed and deserving home owners who have never gotten any result of their application and whom Congress intended to be taken care of.

I contend that the activities of this Corporation should be investigated. A resolution calling for such an investigation has been introduced by one of my colleagues from Ohio and I intend to support it. Those responsible for the abuses and injustices of the present administration of this Department of the Government should be replaced by those who are in sympathy with the needy and distressed home owner and who are fitted to do the job. All the unnecessary redtape should be cut out of the regulations governing the granting of loans and the provisions of this humanitarian legislation administered as was intended by Congress and the President of the United States.

Several bills have been introduced during this session calling for another appropriation to take care of the thousands of applications now on file. I have introduced a bill providing for an appropriation of $1,500,000,000. I sincerely hope that the Committee on Banking and Currency will in the near future give consideration to these measures to the end that legislation may be immediately enacted continuing the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, remedying the defects of its administration, and giving immediate relief to the most deserving people in America.

SEED LOANS

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, under leave of extending my remarks in the RECORD on the seed-loan bill (H. R. 3247), will state that I am mighty glad that we have been able to pass this most important piece of legislation. I remember when the first seed-loan bill was introduced by me for the relief of the Southeast, to take care of a serious situation which was brought about by a serious storm visiting that section of the United States in 1928. In calling upon Mr. Jardine, Secretary of Agriculture at that time, I stated that it was my belief that this type of loan to farmers in the South would not only prove to be a real benefit to farmers, but that these loans would be paid practically 100 percent. I succeeded in having this bill passed by the Congress, with the assistance of the late Congressman Hogan, who was at that time Chairman of the Agricultural Committee. I am glad to state to you that these loans, and other loans made since that time, have been paid as indicated by me at the time of the passage of the bill. I am in receipt of a letter this morning from Mr. W. D. Coleman, State supervisor of seed loans in South Carolina, stating that out of loans amounting to a little over $2,700,000 in 1935, under his supervision, he has collected up to this time 94 percent. In addition to this, he states he has collected this year $75,000 on past-due obligations of prior years. Farmers of the South, and I imagine in every other agricultural section of this country, will be delighted to know that the Congress has acted promptly in passing this important bill. There are thousands of small farmers in the South, not being able to qualify for a loan through production-credit associations operating under the Production Credit Corporation, and not being able to secure loans from banks, will now be in a position to plan their farming operations, realizing that we have passed legislation to take care of their farming operations in the way of loans for 1935.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Thursday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, did the gentleman consult with the floor leader before making his request?

Mr. SWEENEY. No; I confess I have not.

Mr. JONES. I wish, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman would withhold his request until he confers with the floor leader, for there may be some plans with which the gentleman's request would interfere.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, for the present I withdraw my request.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, January 22, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Assembly Joint Resolution 4

Adopted in assembly January 9, 1935.

ARTHUR A. OHNIMUS,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Adopted in senate January 10, 1935.

J. A. BEEK, Secretary of the Senate.

This resolution was received by the Governor this 15th day of January, A. D. 1935, at 3:45 o'clock p. m.

MARK LEE MEGLADDERY, Jr.,

CHAPTER 5

Relative to memorializing the President and Congress to enact old-age-pension legislation

Whereas the United States has, for the past few years, passed through a most severe period of depression, hardship, and destitution; and

Whereas as a result of said depression many aged persons have seen their savings wiped away after a lifetime of service to our society; and

Whereas many such unfortunate citizens now find themselves destitute and with no hope of supporting themselves or recouping their fortunes because of advanced age; and

Whereas the establishment of a system of old-age security by the payment of pensions to worthy citizens would obviate the need for public charity in this direction, and restore self-respect to the persons receiving such assistance, increase purchasing power and economic revival, and carry out the principles of humanitarian social justice upon which our country was founded: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully urged to enact as quickly as possible such suitable legislation as will provide such a national system of old-age pensions and old-age security as will accomplish the purposes above set forth and which will be adequate for a respectable existence; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that such Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully urged to support such legislation.

EDWARD CRAIG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
G. J. HATFIELD,

Attest:
[SEAL]

FRANK C. JORDAN,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Assembly Joint Resolution 9

Adopted in assembly January 11, 1935.

ARTHUR A. OHNIMUS,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Adopted in Senate January 14, 1935.

J. A. BEEK,
Secretary of the Senate.

This resolution was received by the Governor, this 17th day of January, A. D. 1935, at 11 o'clock a. m.

MARK LEE MEGLADDERY, Jr.,

CHAPTER 11

Assembly Joint Resolution 9, relative to memorializing the President and Congress to carefully consider and enact legislation to provide for a working week of not more than 5 days of 6 hours each, without any corresponding reduction in the present compensation or salary

Whereas there exists not only in our own State of California but also in every State of this great Nation, a condition of unemployment, which is depriving millions of our citizens of an opportunity to engage in productive effort; and

Whereas this condition, by destroying the purchasing power of so many citizens hurts them economically, physically, and morally, and will tend to harm, in the same way, the Nation of which they are a component part; and

Whereas those citizens who are working, by sharing the benefits of steady employment could aid those citizens less fortunate and at the same time enhance their own prosperity and the prosperity of our country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully urged to carefully consider and enact legislation to provide for a working week of not more than 5 days of 6 hours each, without any corresponding reduction in the present compensation or salary; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that such Senators and Members from California are hereby respectfully urged to support such legislation.

EDWARD CRAIG,
Speaker of the Assembly.
G. J. HATFIELD,

Attest:
[SEAL]

FRANK C. JORDAN,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, memorializing Congress to provide Federal participation and aid in interstate bridge projects across the Missouri River, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. NORRIS, p. 745.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, favoring the enactment of legislation to provide for the immediate cash payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. NORRIS, p. 745.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, memorializing Congress to promptly enact a Federal old-age-pension law, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(See resolution printed in full when presented on yesterday by Mr. NORRIS, pp. 680–681, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the city council of Portland, Oreg., favoring the prompt enactment of legislation providing immediate cash payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. TYDINGS) presented petitions numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Maryland, the Canal Zone, and the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, praying for the publication at Government expense of all testimony taken by the Federal Communications Commission, Broadcasting Division, in relation to the broadcasting of programs of interest, convenience, and necessity, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. HALE presented petitions numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Maine, praying for the publication at Government expense of all testimony taken by the Federal Communications Commission, Broadcasting Division, in relation to the broadcasting of programs of interest, convenience, and necessity, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER presented petitions numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Florida, praying for the publication at Government expense of all testimony taken by the Federal Communications Commission, Broadcast Division, in relation to the broadcasting of programs of interest, convenience, and necessity, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. ASHURST presented a resolution unanimously adopted by the Townsend Old Age Pension Club, of Prescott, Ariz., and signed by S. E. Kent, its president, and E. C. Whitesitt, its secretary, favoring the enactment of legislation known as the "Townsend old-age revolving pension bill", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented the petition of members of the Women's Council of the Church of the Brethren, of McPherson, Kans., praying for the prompt ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by student bodies of the Kansas Wesleyan University, of Salina; McPherson College, of McPherson, and Washburn College, of Topeka, all in the State of Kansas, favoring the ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NORRIS presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

RESOLUTION MEMORIALIZING THE CONGRESS AND THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TO CARE FOR NEBRASKA UNEMPLOYABLES

Whereas the Congress and the President of the United States did initiate and carry out a public-works and relief program caring for the needs of many people otherwise destitute; and

Whereas, due to this fact, the State of Nebraska did not make provision to care for these people; and

Whereas, due to drought and the unparalleled and prolonged depression, tax payments to the State of Nebraska and its governmental subdivisions are in many cases delinquent and are causing financial embarrassment; and

Whereas it is proposed by the Congress and the President to turn the charge and care of so-called "unemployable people" now cared for by Federal relief agencies over to the State and its subdivisions at this time: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, in fiftieth session assembled,

1. That this house does most earnestly petition and memorialize the Congress and the President of the United States that proper appropriations be made to care for these needy people in the State of Nebraska for a period of at least 3 months, or until such time as the State of Nebraska and its subdivisions may be able to assume this burden.

2. That the chief clerk of this house be instructed and directed forthwith to forward a copy of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the President of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives representing the State of Nebraska in a National Congress, so that they, and each of them, may be fully advised as to the situation of the State of Nebraska with respect to the conditions of its unemployables.

Mr. NORRIS also presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

RESOLUTION MEMORIALIZING THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES TO INCLUDE BUILDING OF FREE INTERSTATE BRIDGES ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AS PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION PROJECTS

Whereas in many instances the United States of America, through its Public Works Administration, has considered Federal aid in whole or in part on interstate bridges within the State of Nebraska feasible projects to alleviate distress of the inhabitants of this State accented by the 1934 destructive drought; and

Whereas the effect of the withering drought still pinches our people, and work relief is imperative if our State is effectively to carry on until private industry can absorb our employables now out of jobs: Now, therefore, be it

1. That this house hereby respectfully petitions and memorializes the Congress of the United States to provide further assistance through its Public Works Administration to consider the immediate public necessity of 100-percent Federal participation in free interstate bridge projects across the Missouri River, at such locations across said river as good engineering and public necessity requires.

2. That the clerk of this house is hereby ordered and directed forthwith to forward a copy of this resolution, properly authenticated and suitably engrossed, to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to the United States Senators representing the State of Nebraska, and to the Congressmen in the House of Representatives of the United States representing the State of Nebraska, to take such steps as may be necessary to provide for free interstate bridges across the Missouri River and thus afford the citizens of our State immediate relief, which is desperately needed.

Mr. NORRIS also presented the following resolution of the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

RESOLUTION MEMORIALIZING THE CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES TO PASS, AND THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TO APPROVE, IF PASSED, THE SOLDIERS' BONUS BILL NOW PENDING IN CONGRESS

Whereas a bill providing for the payment of the soldier's bonus is now pending in the present session of the National Congress; and

Whereas the Federal Government has determined upon a policy of spending additional billions to hasten recovery, and World War veterans, speaking through the American Legion, have recommended the immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates, commonly called the "bonus", as the most effective means to that end; and

Whereas such immediate payment would mean the distribution of $21,802,190.95 in the State of Nebraska, spread uniformly throughout every county, town, and hamlet in the State and finding its way into every conceivable channel of trade; and

Whereas other recovery measures, such as a Public Works program, do not so distribute their funds uniformly throughout the State, nor even leave a major portion of the moneys allocated within the State, because in Nebraska, as in other agricultural States, steel, building materials, and machinery are mainly imported; and

Whereas World War veterans were discharged 16 years ago and any unearned interest against said 20-year adjusted-service certificates comes within the same category as a 30-percent grant on Public Works projects; and

Whereas the payment of these certificates would retire and discharge a contractual obligation of the Government which must soon be met instead of creating a new debt: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Nebraska in fiftieth session assembled—

SECTION 1. That we hereby memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass, and the President of the United States to approve, if passed, the soldiers' bonus bill now pending in the National Congress.

SEC. 2. That certified copies of this resolution, properly authenticated, be sent forthwith to the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and each of the United States Senators and Representatives from Nebraska.

PETITIONS RELATIVE TO RADIO HEARINGS BEFORE FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

Mr. COPELAND. I have received, I think, at least 50 or 60 pounds of large packages consisting of petitions from my State relating to the printing of the testimony before the Federal Communications Commission. I ask that one brief petition be printed in the RECORD and that the RECORD indicate that the petitions have been received and that I have asked unanimous consent that they be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

One of the numerous petitions above referred to, presented by Mr. COPELAND from sundry citizens of the State of New York, is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States of America, greeting:

In obedience to the mandate of the Seventy-third Congress, second session, the Federal Communications Commission, Broadcast Division, has taken the testimony of many witnesses in relation to the broadcasting of programs of public interest, convenience, and necessity. We are deeply interested in these facts and therefore petition Congress to publish all the testimony and the report of the Commission, at Government expense, and mail to each of us, the undersigned, a copy thereof.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 92) to prohibit the making of photographs, sketches, or maps of vital military and naval defensive installations and equipment, and for other purposes, reported it, without amendment, and submitted a report (No. 20) thereon.

HOUSE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following bill and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 3247. An act to meet the conditions created by the 1934 drought, and to provide for loans to farmers in drought- and storm-stricken areas, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

H. J. Res. 112. Joint resolution to clarify the definition of disagreement in section 19, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended; to the Committee on Finance.

H. J. Res. 118. Joint resolution to prohibit expenditure of any moneys for housing, feeding, or transporting conventions or meetings; to the Committee on Appropriations.

ADMINISTRATION POLICIES AND PROGRAMS—ADDRESS BY POSTMASTER GENERAL FARLEY

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an address recently delivered by the Postmaster General, Hon. James A. Farley, before the Anthracite Club dinner, New York City, January 17, 1935.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

There is a lot of satisfaction in talking things over with men of substance, men accustomed to the conduct of large affairs and those who have made a success in their own particular lines of endeavor. There has been a good deal of confusion created in the public mind either by misrepresentations or misinterpretations of your Government's policies and programs. I know of no better way of clearing these up than to discuss them frankly before such a distinguished body as is represented here today.

I do not pretend to any great knowledge of the anthracite coal business, but like every other citizen who has followed the course of events in recent years I realize that your industry has been almost unique in preserving its equilibrium in times of stress, for it seems to me that in the midst of a turbulent ocean of industrial and economic unrest yours has remained a pretty solid and unshaken island. We all know that such a situation is not automatic, but reflects the good sense and good judgment of the people who direct the activities of industry. With this in mind, I regard the opportunity to talk over with you the problems that beset our country as a very happy circumstance.

In paying tribute to your efficiency, however, I am not blind to the fact that like every other business in this country you have had your troubles. The advent of oil and other new competition made inroads in your business. In direct contrast to what happened in other industries, the statisticians tell me that your troubles began long before the depression. For example, I am advised that 10 years ago you were getting out 90,000,000 tons of anthracite a year, but that from this high mark during the boom times your production went down 16,000,000 tons, so that in 1929, when we were in the midst of our tremendous speculation spree and nearly everybody thought that the sky was the limit in prosperity, you were only getting out 74,000,000 tons. Naturally with the closing down of factories, the curtailment of heating plants in great hotels and business blocks, consequent on vacant rooms and vacant offices, you slipped still further like all the rest of us during the panic period.

And now you are again on the upgrade. For according to the Government figures, up to the first of the year you increased your output over 1933 by about 8,000,000 tons, which is a pretty good start in the progress back to normalcy. Incidentally, I note from the last figures available, those for November, that your pay rolls are something more than 7 percent over the total of wages paid a year ago.

I am also advised that your technical laboratories have been and are developing new types of furnaces, new methods of utility, and other devices that are bound to keep you abreast of your competitors. So, if I may borrow one of the favorite terms employed by those who criticize the present administration in Washington, let me say that it has been represented to me that your own private "brain trust" is having a lot to do with pulling you up where you belong. More and more the technical expert is becoming a great, if not the greatest, factor in accomplishing success. After all, government is a business, the greatest business of all, inasmuch as it has in its care the welfare and prosperity of 120,000,000 people as against the relatively small populations affected by private enterprise. There is this difference, of course—the success of your industry, and practically every other industry, is represented by dividends that represent money. The Government's dividends are measurable only in contentment of the whole people. To earn these dividends, the Government must be as fair to employers as to employees, as just to producers as it is to consumers. It could no more venture to take the profit motive out of industry and commerce, as some of the wildest of the assailants of the administration have suggested is its intent, than it could attempt to establish deliberately a wage scale below that which would afford a decent standard of living to the toiling population. It could no more crucify industry than it could permit agriculture to go into Nation-wide bankruptcy. If it did either of these things, the administration would be a failure. The Government has got to earn its own particular type of dividends or go out of business.

Now, when you hear that the Government is dominated by a harum-scarum lot of visionary economists, that young men from the colleges are being permitted to perform all kinds of wild experiments—socialistic, communistic, or dictatorial—I wish you would cast your eyes on your own laboratories and figure out how much the chemists and engineers busy with their test tubes and retorts, and blue prints, have to do with the policies of the anthracite industry. In this way you can get an accurate picture of the part the so-called "brain trust" is performing in our Government. If one of your laboratory experts came to you with a suggestion that because the carbon content of your product corresponded to a dietary need of the same element and that therefore you should make food for human and animal consumption out of coal, do you think that the men directing your affairs would go in competition with the meat packers and the flour-mill people? Naturally, you would not. What you want from them are practical suggestions and not lurid dreams. Well, it is the same way with the Government. The professors, to whom all of you have been willing to intrust the education of your sons and daughters, are all experts in their own lines. Most, if not all of them, have been called in by the various big industries at one time or another to aid in working out their problems. When their suggestions are sane and workable, you have made use of them. Any suggestions that have been impracticable, costly beyond the economic value of the suggested improvement, are rejected. It is exactly the same way with the Government.

There is not a man among you who is any more level-headed, any more practical than Franklin D. Roosevelt. There is not a man among you who would any more go off on a lunatic tangent because one of his experts suggested it than would the President of the United States. He is as well versed in the problems of government as you are in the mining and marketing of hard coal. He took hold of this Government of ours at a time of unprecedented distress. Not only was business all shot to pieces, but the morale of our whole population—capitalists and charity wards, merchants and mechanics, bankers and beggars—was at the lowest ebb of any period in our history. He has stemmed that tide of hopelessness. He has made banking safe for stockholders as well as depositors. Under his administration millions of men and women who were on the verge of desperation have secured jobs. Since he has been in office, bankruptcies of great institutions have been so rare that I doubt if any of you can recall an important instance, whereas during the period before President Roosevelt's advent to the White House there was hardly a day in which some commercial earthquake shock was not reported in the newspapers.

Of course, the job is anything but complete. There are still millions of men and women out of work, eager though they may be to find employment. Until most of these do find employment in industry, the Government has to take care of them. There may be honest differences of opinion as to the best way of doing this, but there can be none as to the necessity that it be done.

There are two ways of meeting the inescapable problem—by direct relief, that is the dole, or by putting them to work on public jobs. The first course would probably be the cheaper, in terms of what it takes to provide a living for an individual. The work system, however, takes into consideration not only the circumstance but that the country gets something back in the form of public improvements, greater security against such calamities as floods and fires, cross-road collisions, and so forth. Of still more importance is the value of preserving in the American people a spirit of self-reliance and self-respect. No man who is worth saving could indefinitely eat the bread of charity if he had the alternative of earning his living.

It is very much like some questions you must have had to answer in your own business when weighing the relative advantages of the cheapest way of meeting a production of a distributing emergency, or a dearer method that promises a deferred but permanent asset.

There is another impressive parallel in the conduct of the Government's business and private business. It concerns the simple fact that its problems are not solved by miracles but by hard, intelligent work by those in control. I know that many of you have had to take hold of enterprises that have been in a bad way—outfits that were deeply in the red either because of bad management or by reason of circumstances beyond the control of management. It has fallen to the lot of many to have such a task of rehabilitation thrust upon them. How have you gone about that sort of job? Obviously, the first step is economy. You cut the overhead expenses. But there is a point beyond which you cannot go in simple economy, for you reach a situation in which further reduction means crippling your service. Such economy will not regain lost markets or reestablish the efficiency or processes or methods that have failed to keep pace with the progress of new inventions or discoveries. So you have to reorganize your ailing company. Perhaps you must scrap a lot of obsolete or defective machinery; you may have to rebuild your whole plant in order to meet the competition that has to be met if our hypothetical sick company is to regain its commercial health.

I suppose the use of the word "competition" suggests that the parallel of government and business falls down, because the Government has no competitors. That hardly follows. The Government must constantly meet the competition of famine and the other forces of unrest and disaster. Moreover, even if you think this matching of obligations is more hypothetical than real, let me point out as a counterbalancing circumstance a resort you as business men have that the Government lacks. If the worst comes to the worst, you can drift and let your sick enterprise die. You can liquidate the whole enterprise and let your shareholders shoulder their loss while you go on to some other venture. The Government cannot do anything of that sort. It must go on making the best of whatever situation arises. Otherwise, the country would go into the ghastly receivership of revolution and anarchy and involve us all in a chaos of destruction.

I did not come here, however, to lead you into a chamber of horrors or to parade before you any nightmare of demons, phantoms, and specters. The precipice is there, as several great countries have demonstrated by falling over it, but America is on a safe, if difficult, road, and we will negotiate the steep grades and sharp turns until we come again to the happy level country of content and prosperity.

Incidentally our progress to that destination is not going to be expedited by pelting the engineer in charge of the train. It may be a bumpy road, but it is the only one, and while the discomfort of the journey may be complained of, it would help some if the alarmed and impatient among the passengers would suggest some available detour instead of grumbling.

But to get back from the highway to the plain facts of our country's plight. Like any intelligent business management, the administration, when it took over direction of the distressed country's affairs, began by inaugurating a regime of strict economy. The only thing before that was to get the banking situation in shape and stop the collapse of our whole financial structure. You know that story as well as I do, so there is no use reviewing it.

You may look askance at the claim to economy in the face of the huge expenditures for relief. Let us, however, separate for the moment the ordinary Government expense account from the emergency expenditures. The first item is always with us; the other is only with us to such a time as industry can reemploy those out of work. I can assure you that the most disturbed individual among your membership is not more anxious for the termination of the relief period than is your Government. All that can be done about it just now is to insure that the amount of relief is held to the lowest possible figure consistent with the obligation and to pave the way for its gradual decrease as people get on to a self-sustaining basis.

With the regular expenses of government it is very different. There it was possible to take up a lot of slack. This overhead has been reduced by approximately a billion dollars a year. That flat statement is proved by the actual figures. The end of the last fiscal year showed that the Government had spent in its departments a billion dollars less than it spent during the previous year for the same services. Those who are bent on finding fault with the Government may, perhaps, challenge these figures, insisting on taking the Federal expenditures as a whole and making no distinction between the costs of routine administration and the extraordinary disbursements compelled by the army of unemployed.

Perhaps I may be pardoned if, to illustrate this point, I refer to the affairs of my own branch, the Post Office Department. Recently I reported to the President that whereas the Post Office Department had in the year preceding the advent of the present administration showed a large deficit, last year's balance sheet presented a surplus of $12,000,000. I was immediately assailed and accused of falsifying the record inasmuch as I had excluded from the account various subsidies to ships and aircraft, and the free transmission of Government mail—services that do not appertain to the Post Office Department except that we happen to be the Government's agent for the disbursement of subsidies intended for the upbuilding of the merchant marine and the aviation industry. Under a law enacted in 1930—during the administration of President Hoover—these matters were authorized to be separately classified by the Treasury Department and the General Accounting Office, in stating the expenditures made from the Post Office Department appropriations. Postmaster General Brown, accordingly, drew his balance sheet for the fiscal year 1931–32 in agreement with this law.

That report showed the Post Office Department $153,000,000 in the red, exclusive of the nonpostal expenditures referred to. The report for the fiscal year 1932–33, during which the administrations overlapped—8 months under President Hoover and 4 months under President Roosevelt—gave the loss figure at approximately $50,000,000, under the identical bookkeeping method of the preceding year. The year that ended last July was the surplus year, and, of course, the same process of striking a balance was followed. Indeed, under the law, and under the supervision of the Comptroller General of the United States, no other process could have been employed.

I only cite this matter to illustrate to you that you cannot always accept at face value charges made against a Federal administration by its opponents.

Of course, the Government is spending a lot of money, but I ask you what other course is possible? With millions of people without the means of support, aid must be provided somehow. Inevitably the burden must fall on the community at large and that burden would be no less if it were borne by private charity than it is when appropriated by the Government and collected in turn by the Government from the whole community.

Despite the gloomy views of people who for one reason or another are uncomfortable under present conditions, or who feel bound to find fault with whatever is done by the administration, this country is getting along pretty well. Business is improving. That improvement is indicated by the circumstance that the aggregate of incomes on which taxes were paid were something like $2,000,000,000 more for the fiscal year 1933–34 than they were during the previous fiscal year. The railroads, the department stores, in fact every considerable industry, reflect the advance. The job, of course, is not half done; but it will be done in a shorter time than most of you anticipate if the country does not listen to the voices of the alarmists, who seem to think that they are performing a service to themselves and to the Nation generally by scaring people, without regard to the plain and available facts of the situation.

I think you will all agree that a contrast between today and the day President Roosevelt came to the White House is cheering and not at all doleful. That the people generally appreciate this was pretty definitely demonstrated at the congressional elections last November. On that occasion the President's policies, which were the only issues insisted upon by the opposition political party, received an endorsement unprecedented under any administration since the infancy of the Republic.

It ought not be necessary for me to tell you that Franklin D. Roosevelt is a practical, sensible citizen, who chases no rainbows, but brings to the performance of this tremendous task a splendid energy, a ripe experience in government, and a true patriotic desire for the welfare of every element in our great commonwealth. He rides no hobbies; he plays no favorites. He has been a great President throughout a period of untold anxiety and complexity. With him at the head of affairs there certainly is no reason why any business man should lie awake nights worrying about what is going to happen.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS—STATEMENT BY SENATOR HASTINGS

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, on yesterday the able Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] made a brief statement touching certain proposals of the President's plan regarding old-age pensions. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The report of the Committee on Economic Security was submitted to the President in a letter signed by Frances E. Perkins, Secretary of Labor (chairman); H. Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury; Homer Cummings, Attorney General; H. A. Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture; Harry Hopkins, Federal Emergency Relief Administrator.

In that report it is stated that "at this time a conservative estimate is that at least one-half of the approximately seven and one-half million people over 65 years now living are dependent."

If each were paid $30 per month, it would require an annual expenditure of a total of $1,125,000,000.

The bill presented to the Senate provides that the tax of one-half percent upon every person employed and one-half percent on every employer upon the amount of wages paid shall begin January 1, 1937. The report says this date is fixed because of the large number of people involved and the other duties imposed upon the Social Insurance Board. This is the excuse given for postponing the date to January 1, 1937.

It is estimated that without this compulsory contributory annuity system that the Federal share of the cost may in the first year reach a total of $136,600,000; in the second year $199,000,000, and would increase steadily thereafter until it reaches a maximum of $1,294,300,000 by 1980. These figures are based upon reports of actuaries, but the committee believes, in view of the fact that only $40,000,000 per year is now being used for old-age pensions by the various States, that $50,000,000 would be sufficient for the first year.

It will be observed that the bill provides for $50,000,000 for the year ending June 30, 1936, and that thereafter it shall be $125,000,000 annually.

The Congress is urged to pass the bill quickly, because the legislatures of 44 States are meeting at this time, and it is hoped to have the legislatures follow the recommendations of the Federal Government. If the legislatures should act as they have been requested, there would only be $50,000,000 of Federal money applicable for this purpose between July 1 of this year and June 30 of next year.

Section 6 of title 1 seems to imply that the Federal Government will match the State contributions up to $15 per month; but it expressly provides, "If the sum of all allotments be in excess of the appropriations for the purpose, then the allotment to each State shall be diminished to that percentage which the appropriations bear to the sum of all allotments."

I think in considering this legislation it is important that we should not fool ourselves or fool the country. Fifteen dollars per month contributed by the Federal Government will permit payments to be made only to 694,444 people even when the larger appropriation of $125,000,000 is available. If the committee is correct in saying that 3,750,000 people are in need of assistance in the way of old-age pensions, and the State should make provision for all of them, it will be observed that this 3,750,000 would not get $15 per month, but would only receive $33.33 per year from the Federal Government, or about $2.78 per month.

Nowhere in the report can I find an estimate that $125,000,000 per year will even approach the amount that is adequate. I suppose the hope is that between January 1, 1937, and the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, there would be something added to this fund from the tax imposed. This tax, however, under the plan, takes the form of an annuity; and if it be expended in current and monthly distributions, it would defeat all the purposes of an annuity.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE IN PETROLEUM

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1190, to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum, and so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1190) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONNALLY obtained the floor.

PRINTING OF SPEECHES AND ARTICLES IN THE RECORD

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] desires to secure recognition for a moment. Will the Senator from Texas yield to him?

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator from Minnesota desire recognition in regard to the same matter which came up yesterday?

Mr. SCHALL. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. If there is to be any argument or controversy about it, I prefer not to yield. Has the matter been adjusted with the leader of the majority?

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from Minnesota desires first to submit a resolution and have it referred to the Committee on Rules, and then, I think, he wishes to offer for the RECORD the matter which was objected to yesterday.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. I offer a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 59), as follows:

Resolved, That rule XI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, relating to reading of papers, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, That when a Senator is physically unable to read his own speech, the clerk shall, upon the request of such Senator, read such speech and it shall be printed in the RECORD as if it had been spoken by such Senator."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield further?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. SCHALL. Yesterday I attempted to put into the RECORD some articles written on the condition of the people of Russia under the communistic regime. This is especially interesting to me because I come from the State of Minnesota, and in Minnesota there was recently elected a Governor who ran on a communistic platform. He has been a very popular man, and this is his third term. His vote was greatly reduced from a sizable majority in 1930 and 1932 to a minority in 1934; but, thank God, the Legislature of the State of Minnesota is still American.

During the teamsters' strike last summer, he, like Hitler, Mussolini, and Stalin, used his military strong arm to enforce his edicts; converted the State fairgrounds into a barbed-wire stockade for the imprisonment of citizens attempting to deliver groceries, milk, fruit, meat, ice, and coal without a military license; he had on his publicity staff the two famous Communist editors of the publications known as the "Militant" and the "New International"; Minnesota became the Mecca for the underworld—bank robbers, kidnapers, Dillingers, and assassins of editors; he built a political platform demanding State ownership of all factories, newspapers, railways, mines, utilities, elevators, stockyards, and packing houses; he placed the civil power under the military; he destroyed $100,000,000 worth of mercantile, manufacturing, and farm marketing business in 100 days, jumped the State tax levy from 5 mills up to 11 mills, and converted a treasury surplus into a record debt and deficit.

These articles give a living picture of what we can expect in the Minnesota Russian-Hitler-Mussolini program. In order to put over his program of converting Minnesota into a Socialist-Communist State, Governor Olson needed first a State legislature to pass his measures. Both the State senate and the house stand about 2 to 1 against the Olson program. Many level-headed Farmer-Laborites have joined the Republican-anti-Roosevelt-Democratic union to bar the administration program. The regular Democratic candidate for Governor of Minnesota complained to the Roosevelt administration that the $250,000,000 of Federal money being expended through Olson was being spent for the benefit of Olson's communistic program instead of for relief and in the interest of the Democratic ticket on which Mr. Roosevelt was elected.

Governor Olson was appointed by the administration to head the N. R. A. in Minnesota, and promptly named himself the "codefish" of Minnesota and proceeded to draw up a Minnesota ruin act with himself as dictator to parallel the dictatorship of the "National Racketeer's Association," commonly known as the "N. R. A.", but which the Supreme Court has recently worked on with annihilating effect. He called a special session to pass this act, but the legislature turned him down.

Due to the Minnesota communistic platform and due to many other circumstances, it seems to me that these articles would be especially of interest to my State, and I asked yesterday to have them printed. My good friend from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] objected. He had rather been pilloried by the World Court speech of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and I know he was not feeling just exactly right, and I do not hold his objection against him; but it seems to me, Mr. President, that a blind man should have the same privilege in the Senate as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has. He has his eyes and can see to read what he wants. Why should not someone who is physically unable to read have the services of the clerk? Why should what he presents not be read? Why should some Senator be able to get up and say, "I object." I ought to have, and every other man disabled as I am ought to have, the privilege of using the eyes of the clerk in this House without anyone saying him nay for any remarks that he wishes to make.

It is said that reading maketh a full man, conference a ready man, and writing an exact one. In these strenuous days of changing government and revolution I want to be exact and I may want my speech written. If I had my sight, I could rise in my place and read it, and it would appear in the RECORD as if spoken originally hot from the heart.

It seems to me that the amendment to the rule which I have introduced ought to be adopted in all fairness. I make no objection to the President of the United States coming here and having a platform built to enable him to get into the Capitol to talk to us. There is a condition existing which makes it necessary. But it seems to me in all fairness to me and to another on the floor of the Senate that I and the other Member of whom I speak, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], should have, if we so desire, the right to have anything that we back and anything that is our own read in this Chamber without asking the privilege even of the genial Senator from Arkansas, who seems to be much irritated at what I have to say. He has said that I have assailed a Senator in a letter from a veteran, Archie Johnson, of Mound, Minn., which I had published in the RECORD on the 17th instant. I should like to have that letter read. It is in the RECORD, and if there is no objection on the part of the Senator from Arkansas I will have it read. That is the best way to get at the truth or falsity of the charges made by the Senator from Arkansas yesterday in reference to this same article.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me see it first.

Mr. SCHALL. It was published in the RECORD on the 17th instant and the Senator from Arkansas said yesterday he saw it.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator knows, and he must know, that I have never made any objection to him having his speeches read.

Mr. SCHALL. Yes; the Senator objected when I was on the floor just before adjournment. The Senator objected because I was accusing the administration of fixing itself for a dictatorship.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no, Mr. President!

Mr. SCHALL. I said it was censorship upon the press of the country, and the Senator from Arkansas objected.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall wait until the Senator from Minnesota concludes.

Mr. SCHALL. The Senator from Arkansas further put in the RECORD a tirade against me which was entirely uncalled for; and when I tried to secure recognition of the Chair, he refused to recognize me to answer the Senator. I have always appreciated the Senator from Arkansas; but just because I do not agree with this Machiavellian administration and prefer to have somebody at its head who does not speak in the voice of Jacob with the hand of Esau to run the thing, I ought to be able to say so here without so much protest on the part of the Senator from Arkansas.

The letter was put in the RECORD at the request of a veteran of my State. I was asked to place it in the RECORD. It is merely the expression of a veteran from my State and does not mention any Senator in derogatory fashion. It tells what he thinks about the administration, and I think it would do no harm to have it read, and I so request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. SCHALL. It is in the RECORD, and certainly if I had my sight I would read it. May I not call upon someone to read it? I want to bring to the attention of the Senate by the reading of the letter upon which the Senator from Arkansas based his complaint yesterday that there were no grounds for his objection.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I have always tried to respect the rule of the Senate that no remarks shall be made or article read reflecting upon the Members of the House or of the Senate. The article in question which the Senator from Minnesota is now seeking to have read does not touch upon the character of a Senator or a Representative. As I remember, having read it, it is an assault upon some phases of the administration by a veteran of the State of Minnesota. It has been published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. It has been circulated. I think as a matter of courtesy the Senator from Minnesota should have permission to have it read without question.

I appeal to the Senator from Arkansas, inasmuch as the letter has been published in the RECORD and circulated, that the request be granted. The Senator from Minnesota requests that the letter be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Minnesota has concluded, I should like to state the ground of my objection.

Mr. SCHALL. No; I have not finished.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas further yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I desire to be tolerant and lenient about this matter; but, since it affects a rule and therefore has to go over under the rule, I hope the Senator from Minnesota will be brief, if he has anything further to say.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is hardly the rule. We have not any established rule regarding the printing of articles. The practice and precedents are based upon the theory that when anything is offered for the RECORD it must be accepted by unanimous consent. If the request is not granted by unanimous consent or if consent is withheld, then at an appropriate time a motion can be made. I recognize such a motion is not in order at this time, because there is unfinished business before the Senate. If objection is made, that takes the Senator from Minnesota off his feet.

I appeal to the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Arkansas that the article in question be read, and then we may proceed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if I may be afforded an opportunity to explain the reason for my objection, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Oregon that the article referred to does not contain slanderous, libelous, or other improper allusions to Senators, I shall make no objection to the incorporation in the RECORD of the article; but I shall object to the reading in the Senate of the letter which was, I must say, clandestinely inserted in the RECORD by the Senator from Minnesota a few days ago and which prompted the objection I made yesterday. I shall give my reasons for it when the opportunity arises.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I have written a few remarks specifically that I wish to be made preceding the offering of the article upon Russia. If I may have the privilege of the clerk's eyes, I will ask him to read these remarks which contain the request for having the article printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I ask leave to print in the RECORD the articles on communism in Russia that appeared in the Washington Herald recently. They have a singular appeal to my State, where the Governor advanced a platform in behalf of his party last spring so communistic that he himself shied away from it in the campaign for fear of defeat, and which platform was not obtainable in the party's own headquarters, but only interpretations of it.

It is unfortunate that every citizen of Minnesota cannot have access to these articles that they might reach a better understanding of a totalitarian state such as was proposed by Governor Olson in the last campaign.

The stream of false doctrine in radio speech, in magazines, by paid newspaper scribes pounds and pounds on the national nerve until it is becoming deadened to the old reactions. Love of country, patriotism, frugality, the old-fashioned virtues are belittled and derided. The masses of the people having first endured, perhaps pitied, are almost in the state of inertia to embrace this dangerous doctrine if only it is befogged with the mad Machiavellian-like promises of this administration.

Pleadings for money, food, and clothing for the 140,000,000 inhabitants of Russia, beset by the tyranny and want of communism, are reaching us every day. The people of this country must soon answer these cries for bread and save the people of that nation from the starvation resulting from what they believed was to be for them a new deal.

In view of these facts, it is difficult for most of us to understand by what mental process Gov. Floyd B. Olson, of Minnesota, has been brought to believe that such a system should be imposed on the United States. Mr. Olson is a brilliant man who rose from humble circumstances to the high esteem of the State. His success was based on the system of democracy which made this country the land of opportunity. Mr. Olson is a product of this opportunity for all. Why should he now believe, since he has met with such success, that our system should be changed so that those who come after him will not have the chances which the country afforded him. A critical person might call his position selfish; that having achieved great success, he now would deny those chances to the children of the present and coming generations by advocating and heading a movement to Russianize the United States and drag its citizens down to where they soon must demand bread for their very existence from countries not foolish enough to accept the new deal.

Under the leadership of this self-made Governor, Minnesota is now known throughout the Nation as the seat of Communist agitation in the United States. Governor Olson is advocating the Russian system; and, because of the fact that he is the official patronage dispenser for the Roosevelt administration in Minnesota, he is in position to give Government employment to Russian sympathizers. President Roosevelt made him head of the N. R. A., the C. W. A., and the F. E. R. A. in Minnesota, and with the funds and influence at his command Governor Olson has brought to Minnesota a majority of the Russian agitators who formerly were distributed throughout the country. With this aid and votes of people who did not know the direction his plans were taking, Mr. Olson elected himself Governor on a strictly Russian platform. Fortunately for the people of Minnesota, while Mr. Olson was electing himself Governor by a greatly reduced vote, the legislature was carried by the Americans; and while Mr. Olson is still demanding the communization of Minnesota, he is unable to carry out his plans. The legislature, composed of Americans, refuses to accept the Russian new deal.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WHEELER. I simply desire to make a statement with reference to the article placed in the RECORD.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I hesitate to make a statement with reference to something that is put in the RECORD by the Senator from Minnesota, but I happen to know something of Governor Olson and something of the fight he has made in the State of Minnesota, and I unhesitatingly say that the charges which were made by the Senator from Minnesota with reference to Governor Olson's appointments and with reference to his bringing in Communists in his administration are utterly untrue.

Governor Olson won in the State of Minnesota by a large majority at the last election. He had against him all the power interests, all the great banking interests, and all the railroads; and, of course, Mr. President, when the power interests, the railroads, and the banking interests fight a man, the one thing that they always charge him with is being an extreme radical. The best evidence of what the people of the State of Minnesota think of him, however, is their action in electing him. I say the majority of the people of Minnesota are as high-class, honorable, decent American citizens as there are in the United States of America, and it is unjust and unfair for the Senator from Minnesota to stand on the floor of the Senate and make a charge against the Governor of his State, who has been elected by an overwhelming majority, when the Governor is not here and able to answer the malicious charges which have been made against him.

Mr. President, I resent statements being made against Governor Olson, because I know him to be honest; and so far as the statements are concerned that Governor Olson is distributing the patronage for the Roosevelt administration, there is not any truth in that, either. The Democratic national committeeman, I think, to a large extent controls the patronage of Minnesota; and surely it cannot be said that the Democratic national committeeman of the State of Minnesota is either a Communist or leans toward communism.

The statement put into the RECORD by the Senator from Minnesota, in my opinion, is made up largely of statements that have been handed to him by someone who is bitterly antagonistic to the Governor of that State, and probably for the reason that the Senator fears Governor Olson may be a candidate against him 2 years from now.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think all Senators will understand that in objecting to the article to which the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] has just made appropriate reference I had no thought of depriving the Senator from Minnesota of any right or privilege that a Senator or a gentleman should have and exercise.

It is desirable that the right of petition, and all that that carries with it, shall be preserved and perpetuated; but it is not right, and no one who hears me who has a fair conception of the standards of American justice will think it is right, that a Senator, whether he be afflicted or otherwise, shall abuse the privileges and the confidence which he enjoys by reason of being a Senator to insert in the RECORD of this body charges against Members of the Senate, innuendoes against the honor and the integrity of Members of the body, which he dare not stand upon the floor of the Senate himself and make.

Mr. SCHALL. Oh, yes, yes; I want to say——

Mr. ROBINSON. I decline to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Any courageous man who is right-minded, before inserting in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement which reflects on the integrity or good faith of a colleague, will call his attention to it. He will give that colleague the opportunity to protest against the insertion of the statement.

During the past session of the Congress the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL] day after day rose in this body and had unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD statements which should not properly have gone into the RECORD. No objection was made to his action save on a single occasion. A few days ago, under the liberal practice that prevails here, he asked the insertion in the RECORD of a letter from one of his constituents which reflected on the honor, the integrity, and the good faith of two Members of this body. He deleted the names from the letter, which he had no right to do. He had no right to insert in the RECORD a statement which reflected upon two Members, and then refuse to give the names of the Members upon whom he was reflecting.

Considering the manner in which the insinuation was made, the fact that it was printed by unanimous consent, I say it is fair and proper that if the Senator from Minnesota wishes to have such matter inserted in the RECORD, he should give the Senate the opportunity of passing upon the question as to whether it will prostitute its RECORD to such purposes as he has in mind.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. To have the audacity now to ask that the letter which was inserted in the way I have stated, by unanimous consent, shall be read again, and again make a record, condemns the merit of the suggestion.

The Senate has the power, if it chooses, if it wishes to set such a precedent, to permit everyone who has any insinuation or reflection to make against the Members of this body to have, through the medium of the Senator from Minnesota, the opportunity to make the charges clandestinely; and I am perfectly willing that the Senator shall move that the letter be read at the desk. If he does so, and if the Senate votes to incorporate it in the RECORD, I shall have no further complaint. What I am insisting on is that neither the Senator from Minnesota, nor any other Member of this body, shall abuse his prerogative and his privilege by, unknowingly to the other Members, incorporating in the RECORD matter that reflects on Senators.

I wish to assert again that I have no objection to any criticism that the Senator may make of the administration, or that he may make of a Member of this body, if it is couched in parliamentary language. Criticism is essential to the proper conduct of our affairs and to the proper conduct of the Government; but neither the Senator from Minnesota nor any other Senator ought to abuse debate by incorporating in the RECORD scandalous and objectionable matter which the Senate would not permit to be incorporated if it knew it was being offered for the RECORD.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas wishes to be indulgent, but he refuses to yield for a speech, Mr. President. If the Senator desires to make a request, he may go ahead; but I am not going to yield further.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. President, I desire to state that I have never placed in the RECORD anything reflecting upon any Senator. All I have attempted to do is to try, in my humble way, to get before the people of the country what is happening to their Government. I have tried to put things into the RECORD that might wake them up. I have tried to show upon some occasions—and that was what the Senator from Arkansas particularly objected to when I made the statement here in a recent speech that I had read—that 25 days after our President had raised his hand and sworn to maintain and defend the Constitution, a bill was sent to the House and shoved through the House that would have put a publisher in jail for 10 years, with a fine of $10,000, for daring to publish anything that the administration did not approve. And to say nothing about the dictatorship usurped under the communications bill. Further, he is now demanding under his $4,000,000,000 relief bill the right to send to jail for 2 years and fine $5,000 by edict any publisher who dares to criticize his acts in expending this tremendous fund.

It seems to me that somebody, even though he may be blind, should say these things that the country ought to know. Perhaps no one reads the RECORD; but, so far as accusing me of sneaking something into the RECORD is concerned, it is not true. What I am attempting to do now is to have it so that it can be read, and that the Senator from Arkansas or any other Senator can know what it is. I want him to know what it is. I want him to reply to it. I want to hear why this country is being driven into a communistic government. Somebody should protest.

I believe in the Constitution; and it seems to me that the Constitution is pretty well gone through the tactics of this administration.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. SCHALL. Free speech is gone in these United States, except here in the Senate; and I am praying God now that somebody, somewhere, will come to the rescue before it is too late. So I used the means of a humble veteran to say what he thinks. Tomorrow I may want to use a carpenter to say what he thinks. The next day perhaps I will want to use something else; but at all times I will stand back of anything I say. I want the privilege of rising in this body and having the benefit of reading what I may say, that I may get it exact, without its being objected to by the Senator from Arkansas.

How come that our majority leader has grown so great that he attempts a censorship of the Senate? Upon what meat has this our Caesar fed that he has suddenly grown so great that we poor, petty Senators must creep beneath his huge legs and peep around to find ourselves dishonorable graves? [Laughter.]

As to the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], he is entirely misinformed. Governor Olson was not elected by a great majority. He was elected by a minority of 44 percent of the votes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not want to be discourteous to the Senator, and I want to be indulgent; but I have declined to yield to a long debate here. This is an oil bill, not a gas bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHALL. Just a word. May I have just a word, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yielded to the Senator——

Mr. SCHALL. I want to say——

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment; I have the floor, Mr. President. I yielded to the Senator to make his request, and I indicated that I did not yield for a speech. The Senator, wholly disregarding what I thought was my courtesy, proceeded to make a new speech against the Senator from Montana and against the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. SCHALL. No; they made speeches against me. The Senator from Arkansas and the Senator from Montana were not limited by you. Why limit me in my reply?

Mr. CONNALLY. I cannot yield further.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas declines to yield further. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator desires to make his request and get through with it, I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. SCHALL. I just want to say that I——

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not yield for anything except a request.

Mr. SCHALL. I should like at this time to ask consent to have printed in the RECORD the communistic planks of the platform upon which the Governor of Minnesota was elected. The reading of it will be a complete answer to any man believing in our republican institutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield for that purpose?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield for that purpose without debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Minnesota? No objection is heard.

The matter referred to is as follows:

We therefore declare that capitalism has failed and immediate steps must be taken by the people to abolish capitalism in a peaceful and lawful manner, and that a new, sane, and just society must be established; a system where all the natural resources, machinery of production, transportation, and communication shall be owned by the Government and operated democratically for the benefit of all the people and not for the benefit of the few.

INDUSTRIAL PROGRAM

To protect our citizens from exploitation through industrial profits, we demand public ownership of all mines, water power, transportation, and communication, banks, packing plants, factories, and all public utilities: Provided, That this shall not apply to bona fide cooperatively owned and operated enterprises.

EMPLOYMENT

The State to take over sufficient idle industrial plants to furnish employment for idle citizens and to distribute the products to the needy.

Mr. SCHALL. Further, I wish to ask unanimous consent to print an article from a newspaper published in my State with reference to the drought situation of Minnesota and have it referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The article was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Independent Press, Madison, Minn., Jan. 18, 1935]

FEED SITUATION SERIOUS

Slight demonstrations of what can be expected on a larger scale, unless a change is made in the feed-distribution system, occurred in this county last week. Farmers entered the villages of Boyd and Marietta and helped themselves to hay that was stored there for the purpose of relief distribution. On the face of it, that looks like a mighty desperate act, and it was. But these farmers are desperate.

Last Saturday there were more than 1,752 tons of hay, straw, and corn fodder stored in the various cities and villages throughout the county. This could not be distributed because the county relief administrator had received an order not to distribute anything after December 31, 1934, until the new feed relief set-up was completed at St. Paul.

That was more than 2 weeks ago, and yet the livestock was expected to wait until the changes had been made. Were the cattle and horses supposed to eat theories and sleep on a bedding of statistics?

At the fair grounds in this city there are several hundred tons of hay baled and piled waiting for distribution. One small boy and a cigarette or match could wipe out this entire stock in a few minutes. Would that be better than to distribute it to needy farmers? Would the loss be less than it would if these farmers came in and took that hay and straw? We are not encouraging the people of this community to break the law, but we can hardly condemn them for using such ways and means in an effort to stave off almost certain starvation for their livestock.

This is no longer a small-grain country, and that fact should be considered in the formulating of relief plans. Our farmers have spent their time and resources to build up dairy and beef herds, flocks of sheep, and poultry, as well as herds of swine. Instead of a 1-crop year they have changed their system of farming so that they had a salable commodity every month of the year.

The new feed regulations wipe out all that these farmers have struggled to attain. If they are put on a budget system, such as is proposed, they will be forced to cut the size of their herds to 14½ units for a farm of 160 acres or more. The units are divided as follows: One horse or cow is classed as a unit; 5 hogs are a unit; 7 sheep are a unit; 100 poultry are a unit, and colts or cattle under 2 years are one-half a unit. One doesn't have to be a farmer to realize what that means on a farm of 160 acres. There will not be enough cattle to keep the farmer through dairy products; there will not be enough hogs to support him, even if the prices do increase; nor will there be enough poultry to support the family by the sale of eggs. All of which means that Mr. Farmer is going to be forced upon relief until the next crop is harvested and then there will be a surplus of grain raised because the herds will have been diminished to such an extent that there will not be enough stock left to consume the feed the farmer raises.

These are the conditions as they exist in this drought-stricken area today. Yet the farmer is asked to be patient and wait until a new and more economical feed distribution plan can be worked out. When the financial interests of this country saw their houses tottering they received immediate and almost unlimited financial aid from the Federal Government. If this Government is really of, by, and for the people, then it is high time that agriculture be considered a part of the Government.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE IN PETROLEUM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1190) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, on yesterday we were discussing somewhat briefly the measure known as "Senate bill 1190", regarding the prohibition of the interstate shipment of oil produced or refined in violation of State law.

Some Senators propounded questions which indicated that they were in some doubt as to the authority of the Congress to enact this particular legislation, in view of the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Amazon and Panama cases, which held that section 9 (c) of title I of the Industrial Recovery Act was unconstitutional.

If those Senators will give heed, I shall undertake very briefly to point out the grounds upon which I contend that the Congress has authority to pass this particular legislation.

In this connection I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that section 9 (c) of title I of the Industrial Recovery Act, which was held unauthorized by the Supreme Court, provided in these words:

> The President is authorized to prohibit the transportation in interstate and foreign commerce of petroleum and the products thereof produced or withdrawn—

And so forth.

In other words, the provision of that particular section which was found unauthorized by the Supreme Court did not lie in the fact that the Congress had prohibited interstate shipments, but that it had sought to delegate to the President the power either to prohibit or not to prohibit such interstate shipments, according to his own judgment and discretion, without the Congress having laid down a particular set of facts upon which he should act or a particular standard which would guide him in that determination.

On yesterday the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] suggested that there might be some doubt in his mind as to whether or not the Congress could prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce of an article which in itself was not harmful or deleterious. Is that the question the Senator suggested?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do.

Mr. BORAH. That was the point I had in view at the time.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's question, no doubt, was prompted by some expressions of the Supreme Court in what are known as the "Child Labor cases", which came to the Supreme Court from North Carolina. In order, however, to indicate to Senators at the very beginning some of the cases in which the Supreme Court has exercised that power, I desire to point out that the Supreme Court has heretofore prohibited the interstate shipment of lottery tickets.

Of course, lottery tickets may be said to be harmful within themselves. It has upheld legislation prohibiting the interstate shipment of diseased cattle—livestock. That probably comes within the definition suggested by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. Under the Pure Foods Act the Supreme Court in a number of cases upheld the prohibition of interstate shipments without determining that the articles themselves were deleterious, such as the prohibition of the interstate shipment of articles which were merely misbranded and upheld an absolute bar.

The Supreme Court in Weeks against United States, Two Hundred and Forty-fifth United States Reports, page 619, goes into that particular question very thoroughly.

But more than these particular cases, all Senators are no doubt familiar with the Supreme Court's decisions in the whisky cases, the prohibition cases, in which the Court upheld first a statute which made intoxicating liquors subject to State laws when they reached the State line, and afterward an absolute prohibition by Congress of the interstate shipment of any kind of intoxicating liquors into a State which had by law prohibited the sale of such liquors.

Permit me to say to the Senator from Idaho that whatever his views about liquor being in itself harmful is concerned, the Congress did not prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce because it was harmful, because it would then have prohibited shipping it into any State; but it prohibited the shipment only into those States which by law had undertaken to control or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. My understanding is that the Supreme Court did say that it was the exceptional nature or harmful nature of liquor which placed it in a class by itself, and, therefore, it was subject to the exertion of this power.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not think that that argument was contained in those decisions.

There is another suggestion in another case which I will advert to in a few minutes. The point I make, however, is that if the Congress had prohibited the interstate shipment of liquor because of its inherent harmfulness, it would have provided that the prohibition be effective everywhere, rather than to have made it depend upon the action of a particular State in prohibiting the sale and merchandising of intoxicating liquors within such State.

We shall take a still later case. In the case of Weber v. Freed (U. S. 239, p. 325), the Supreme Court upheld an act of Congress prohibiting the interstate shipment of prize-fight films. Of course, the Senator from Idaho might contend that such films were harmful. However, it did not go into that particular question.

The latest decision of the Supreme Court on that particular feature is in the case of Brook against the United States, Two Hundred and Sixty-seventh United States Reports. This is the case in which Congress prohibited the interstate shipment of automobiles which had theretofore been stolen. The case comes up from Oklahoma.

Mr. BORAH. From what volume is the Senator reading?

Mr. CONNALLY. Two Hundred and Sixty-seventh United States Reports, page 433; opinion by Chief Justice Taft. I shall not read all the facts and pleadings, but I do desire to quote briefly from the opinion of the Court. The chief assignment of error is the invalidity of the act. Then it recites the act which it is not necessary to read here. The Court said:

> The objection to the act cannot be sustained. Congress can certainly regulate interstate commerce to the extent of forbidding and punishing the use of such commerce as an agency to promote immorality, dishonesty, or the spread of any evil or harm to the people of other States from the State of origin. In doing this it is merely exercising the police power for the benefit of the public within the field of interstate commerce. Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania (114 U. S. 196, 215). In Reid v. Colorado (187 U. S. 137), it was held that Congress could pass a law excluding diseased stock.

Then it recites the pure-food decisions, the diseased-stock and the white-slave cases, and the liquor cases. It cites the case of Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland Railway Co. (242 U. S.).

It cites the prize-fight film decision. Then it averts to the child-labor cases. I desire the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] to pay heed to this. He raised the question about the applicability of the child-labor cases.

In Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U. S. 251) it was held that a Federal law forbidding the transportation of articles manufactured by child labor in one State to another was invalid, because it was really not a regulation of interstate commerce but a congressional attempt to regulate labor in the State of origin by an embargo on its external trade. Articles made by child labor and transported into other States were harmless and could be properly transported without injuring any person who either bought or used them. In referring to the cases already cited, upon which the argument for the validity of the Child Labor Act was based, this Court pointed out that, in each of them, the use of interstate commerce had contributed to the accomplishment of harmful results to people of other States, and that the congressional power over interstate transportation in such cases could only be effectively exercised by prohibiting it. The clear distinction between authorities first cited and the child-labor case leaves no doubt where the right lies in this case.

Then it goes on to discuss the speed at which automobiles can be transported, and so on.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACK in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that some State prohibits the manufacture of goods by children under 16 years of age; does the Senator from Texas contend that Congress could prohibit the shipment of goods which were made in another State by child labor into the State which had forbidden the manufacture of such goods?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do; because in these cases the suggestion is now and again made that the Federal Government, in the matter of the regulation of interstate commerce, should cooperate with the States instead of doing what the Court said it was trying to do in North Carolina; that instead of cooperating with North Carolina it was trying to undo the laws of North Carolina and superimpose on North Carolina a different child-labor law from the one that North Carolina already had in effect. That is pointed out in the decision in that case; that the Congress was seeking indirectly to do what it could not do directly, and was circumventing in a way the power of North Carolina to regulate its own manufacturing enterprise.

This is the automobile-theft case. The decision upholds the right of Congress absolutely to interdict the interstate shipment of automobiles, which in themselves are not harmful, which, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, were not produced or used in violation of any Federal law, but because through the violation of a State law their possession was transferred illegally from the owner to another they then became subject to a prohibition of shipment in interstate commerce.

I desire to suggest to the Senator from Idaho in this connection that there is a rather striking analogy between illegally produced oil, oil produced illegally as defined in this measure, and a stolen automobile or any other kind of stolen property. As the Senator from Idaho knows, oil is a fugitive element. It is not stable. The surface owners of oil property must capture the oil in order to secure the benefit of the oil which is supposed to be under their land. There is what is called a law of capture. If the owner does not capture that oil, someone else adjoining or in another portion of the same field may capture it, and when he does, it becomes his oil. So the State, in order to protect surface owners in their rights, has found it necessary to set up an elaborate system of drilling regulations, and they prescribe upon what size tract of land a well may be drilled, and they provide that the adjoining owner has to observe certain rules and regulations in his drilling to protect the oil under the adjoining owner's land. Where an offset well is drilled, where a well is drilled on adjoining property, the leaseholder must also drill or forfeit his lease in order to protect the owner of the soil.

One of the chief evils we are seeking to correct is the absolute theft of oil—theft of oil just like the theft of automobiles, theft of oil just like the theft of a horse or of a cow. On account of the flush productions in many of the great fields the oil which is being illegally produced is oil to which the man who produces it is not justly entitled. If he should observe his own proration, his own limitation, and thereby respect the rights of the adjoining owner, we should not have such a bill before us. But one lawless owner or driller, disregarding the State law, by devices, through underground passageways, through the employment of by-passes that dodge the point where the oil is measured, and all sorts of artifices, illegally produces not only his own oil but the adjoining owner's oil, and it is to prevent that sort of theft and that sort of misappropriation, in order to make effective the State laws in that regard, that we are asking the Federal Government to say that when the State does administer its oil law, when it does set up a system of protecting the owners of oil property, that the contraband oil, that the illegal oil, that the oil which has been misappropriated in violation of the law, stolen, if you care to use that term, from the adjoining owner, shall not be permitted free shipment in interstate and foreign commerce; that the Federal Government shall not afford the lawbreaker an avenue of escape from punishment, since the State cannot prevent interstate shipments. Without Federal prohibition or regulation of such shipments, the Federal Government permits the nullification of State law.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. GORE. The producer in any State who obeys the laws of his State will not be affected by this legislation.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly. The Senator from Oklahoma has very pertinently suggested that the oil companies or owners of a lease or the owners of the fee who obey the State law never will feel the pinch of this legislation because it does not apply to them. It only applies to the man who defies the law, or the oil company which defies the law and for the sake of immediate gain is willing to ship illegal oil in interstate and foreign commerce and thereby not only reap some little reward for himself or itself but do an injury not alone to the industry itself but to the man from whom the oil was illegally appropriated.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Reverting to the automobile decision, may I ask the Senator whether or not the automobiles involved in that case were used for criminal purposes?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; not necessarily at all; just so they had been stolen.

Mr. GLASS. To steal an automobile is a crime, is it not?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thought the Senator meant that the automobiles themselves had been employed in some criminal operation.

Mr. GLASS. Does the Senator contend——

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator's own car, if stolen and transported to another State, would be within the inhibition.

Mr. GLASS. That involves a crime. What I wanted to ask the Senator was, would he contend that the Congress would be within the constitutional limitation if it prohibited the transportation in interstate commerce of automobiles simply because a State prohibited their use within its borders?

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course, the Senator is putting a very extreme and a very harsh case.

Mr. GLASS. Of course, nobody would prohibit the use of an automobile; it is a curse to the country now that some of them are not prohibited; but is not what I am suggesting an analogous case?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall answer the Senator frankly. I shall say to the Senator that I cannot conceive of the Congress ever passing such an act, but under the decisions of the Supreme Court it seems to me to be absolutely clear that if the Congress, as the possessor of the absolute right to regulate and control interstate commerce, should see fit to do a thing of that kind it would have the power to do it.

Mr. GLASS. In other words, no matter how absurd a State law might be, just because it is a State law affecting interstate commerce, the Congress would have the right to prohibit interstate commerce so far as that State is concerned?

Mr. CONNALLY. I would say it would have the power; I do not know about the right.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. On January 19, 1929, there was approved a statute which the Senator may recall. It was entitled "An act to divest goods, wares, and merchandise, manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases."

The purpose of the act seems to be analogous to that which the Senator from Texas is discussing, although manifestly it is not identical with it. In that statute the Congress provided that all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured in whole or in part by convict labor should upon arrival in any State be subject to the laws of that State to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been manufactured, and so forth, in such State.

Of course, there is nothing harmful to the public health or deleterious in convict manufactured or mined commodities; the fact is that they may be quite as wholesome as when manufactured by free labor; but many of the States had passed laws forbidding the employment of convict labor in manufacturing and mining, and, in order to aid the States in making their laws effective, Congress passed the statute to which I have referred.

So far as I am advised, the constitutionality of the act has not as yet been passed upon by the Supreme Court; it may have been but I am not informed as to that. The act was approved January 19, 1929, and did not take effect until 5 years later, which would be January 19, 1934; but it seems to me that Congress recognized a principle analogous to that which the Senator is discussing when it enacted the convict-goods act.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Arkansas very much for his illuminating contribution.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator from Arkansas, Is there involved in that act of Congress a prohibition of interstate commerce?

Mr. CONNALLY. There is a prohibition of some of it, at least.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; the title of the act is "To divest goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined by convicts or prisoners of their interstate character in certain cases."

Mr. GLASS. And yet they may be shipped in interstate commerce; they may be shipped from one State to another State.

Mr. ROBINSON. The act to which I have referred follows the language of the Webb-Kenyon Act, as suggested to me by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GLASS. That was the liquor act.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes. Under the act cited by me if a State has not forbidden the employment of convict labor in the manufacture of goods, wares, and merchandise, such goods, wares, and merchandise might be shipped into that State, but they could not be shipped into a State where the laws forbade the use of convict labor.

Mr. GLASS. As I understand, they could be shipped into that State, but when they got there they would be subject to the laws of the State.

Mr. ROBINSON. Which would prevent their being sold.

Mr. GLASS. I grant that in effect it operates in that way, but it is not a prohibition.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have one other case here to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Idaho as well. This is a circuit court of appeals case; it does not seem that it reached the Supreme Court. This was a case in which the State of Oklahoma enacted a statute prohibiting the shipment out of the State of any kind of game. Congress subsequently passed an act prohibiting the interstate shipment of any game which had been secured or handled in violation of a State law. Here is what the Court says about it in the case of Rupert against the United States in One Hundred and Eighty-first Federal Reporter, page 87:

Paris N. Rupert was convicted on indictments for criminal offenses, and he brings error.

* * * * * * *

The local laws—

Quoting from the court:

The local laws of the Territory of Oklahoma allowed quail to be killed during certain months. * * * But the Oklahoma statutes prohibited the exportation of quail at any time.

* * * * * * *

The purpose of the Lacey Act—

That is an act of Congress—

The purpose of the Lacey Act as expressed in the statute (sec. 1) "is to aid in the restoration of such birds in those parts of the United States adapted thereto where the same have become scarce or extinct."

Section 4 of that statute provides that all packages * * * shall be plainly and clearly marked—

And so on.

I shall omit those portions of the opinion which are unnecessary to be read.

Quail belong to the State or Territory, or rather the people collectively thereof, and are subject to the local laws as to killing and the times therefor and the shipment. These propositions have been put at rest by the Supreme Court.

Citing decisions.

It is for the State legislature to say when quail may be killed. It may provide that they shall not be killed at any time. It may provide that they may be killed for use at the home only, and not killed for shipment out of the State, which if allowed would result in the extinguishment locally of such game. And no one doubts the validity of game laws which prohibit killing of game on the lands of another. It is quite likely that every State of the Union has such laws, and such was the common law—

And so on.

And as Congress is vested with the power under the commerce clause to regulate commerce between the States, it has the power to provide that there shall not be unrestrained commercial intercourse.

Thus, in Cook v. Marshall County, * * * it was held that a State law limiting the right to sell cigarettes would be upheld, even though brought in from another State. This was so held because the prohibition of the sale was a valid exercise of the police power of the State, and the commerce clause cannot be used to override that which is clearly within the police power of the State.

And so in Manchester v. Massachusetts, * * * a statute regulating the taking of fish was upheld and enforced, when it was sought to avoid the statute by showing that the fish were carried to the ports of other States on a vessel licensed under national authority. And a like holding was made as to oysters in McCready v. Virginia (94 U. S.). It is one thing to prohibit property from being carried out of the State, and another to prohibit property from being brought into the State. And yet, In re Rahrer, the Supreme Court upheld the act of Congress of August 8, 1900, commonly called the "Wilson bill", which makes intoxicating liquors, when brought into the State, subject to the local laws. Such being the holdings, it surely follows that a congressional enactment like the Lacey Act, which makes it a crime to carry out of the State that which can be and is lawfully prohibited by local or State laws, must be upheld.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. If I may be permitted, I may say to the Senator that I am not interested to controvert anything he is saying. I just want to say that, in my opinion, the most vicious thing the Supreme Court of the United States ever did since it was constituted was to interpret the language in the Constitution which authorizes Congress to regulate interstate commerce as meaning that Congress has a right to prohibit interstate commerce. Every time I have had an opportunity to vote against that interpretation of the constitutional provision I have done so.

Mr. CONNALLY. I respect the views of the Senator from Virginia and have high regard for his opinions on all public questions, but, of course, when it comes to the particular legal proposition I am compelled to side, by force of circumstances, with the Supreme Court rather than with the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. GLASS. I realize that, but the Senator need not become sarcastic at my expense.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Texas has no such intention. I do not mean that I prefer to do it, but I have to do it.

Mr. GLASS. On questions of law, I do not assume to speak, but upon questions of common sense and the plain text of the Constitution anyone is privileged to speak.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator does me an injustice when he suggests that I intended to be sarcastic. Such was not my purpose. I simply meant that, however much I might prefer to side with the Senator from Virginia, since we are dealing with legal facts and situations, I cannot go with the Senator when the Supreme Court goes in the other direction, because it will not let us go with him, however attractive and delightful his society may be, intellectually and otherwise.

Mr. President, the power to regulate absolutely must include the power to prohibit not necessarily all commerce; but whenever Congress regulates, in most cases it prohibits some part of interstate commerce.

Mr. BORAH. But on a specific principle.

Mr. CONNALLY. To be sure; on whatever the principle is in the particular case. Of course, that is the principle upon which interstate commerce is regulated. Here we are contending that the principle upon which we ask the Congress to regulate in this instance is the principle of cooperation with the State when it is undertaking to enforce its own laws in order to protect its citizens in the enjoyment of their own property, and not, by refusing to regulate it, to permit the lawless elements of that State to rob their fellow citizens and disrupt the industry throughout the Union. Those are the considerations upon which we seek to undertake the exercise of this high and mighty power—and it is all that.

I agree with the Senator from Idaho that it is a tremendous power; I agree with the Senator from Virginia that it is a very transcendent power; but the fact that it is such a power is no reason why we should not exercise it at all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator that if the power exists, there is no reason why we should not exercise it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. We do not prohibit all interstate shipment of oil. If we were doing that, it would be a different situation. The Senator from Virginia seems to imply that we are not going to permit any oil to move in interstate commerce. The Senator from Idaho would seem to think that because we are prohibiting some oil we are not permitting any oil to flow. We are only prohibiting that portion of the oil which has been produced in violation of the law.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator from Idaho has said if the power exists then perhaps we have the right to do that. I should like to ask the Senator if the power does not exist what became of it? When the States existed as independent States, before the adoption of the Constitution, the power did exist. The States had the right to prohibit the shipment of commodities from one State into another. When the Constitution was adopted, no power was lost. Every power the States had as individual States was continued. It was either delegated to the Congress or else it was retained by the States.

Every one of us will agree that the power to regulate interstate commerce exists. If it does not exist in the State and if it does not exist in the Federal Government, what became of the power that did exist in the beginning, when the Constitution was adopted? It must be with the Congress or else it has disappeared in thin air.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In line with the suggestion made by my colleague, not only did they possess the power but they exercised it. The legislatures of many of the States enacted laws absolutely prohibiting the importation of articles of commerce from other States into those Territories or States, so they did exercise it as well as possess it.

With respect to the prohibition of commerce being an abuse of the power to regulate, certainly no one would contend that Congress does not enjoy the power to prevent the shipment of a carload of rotten beef from one State into another, not only under the power to regulate commerce but under the power to protect the public health.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I suggest that while undoubtedly a State has the right to prohibit the shipment into the State of diseased beef or any other article that is deleterious, the question in which I am interested is this: If the article is in no sense objectionable, if its use is in no sense deleterious or harmful, if it is a legitimate subject of commerce, and if it is a benefit to the State into which it is going, may a State for some reason, for internal reasons, make a prohibition and then we take that prohibition and upon it base a law which prohibits its movement at all?

I am not discussing the matter now as it might relate to automobiles which are used to effectuate crime, which were stolen, and which may be used in the further promotion of crime. Here is an article which is a necessity in the commercial world today. For supposed conservation reasons the State adopts a policy and the question is, May we by reason of that policy come to the point of prohibiting its movement in interstate commerce? That is the question.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield further to the junior Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I agree fully with what the Senator from Idaho says. The Supreme Court has held that we can prohibit the shipment of any commodity from one State into another if that commodity is in some way detrimental to the welfare of the State into which it is shipped. That has been held. It has been said by the Supreme Court in some seven or eight different groups of cases that if the commodity or article as shipped into another State is deleterious to the public welfare, it may be prohibited. But my opinion is that the power to prohibit the shipment of articles which are harmless and not detrimental to the public welfare from one State into another did exist at the time the Constitution was promulgated. If that power did exist and no power was destroyed, it must exist either in the States or in the Congress, one or the other.

Mr. CONNALLY. Right on that point I want to invite the attention of the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Kentucky to the child-labor case. That was a 4-to-5 decision. Mr. Justice Holmes in the dissenting opinion, and this is general discussion rather than on the immediate point, said this at page 277 of the Two Hundred and Forty-seventh United States Supreme Court Reports:

> The first step in my argument is to make plain what no one is likely to dispute—that the statute in question is within the power expressly given to Congress if considered only as to its immediate effects and that if invalid it is so only upon some collateral ground.

I should like the Senator from Virginia to give heed to this, because it deals directly with his question. I read further:

> The statute confines itself to prohibiting—

> Not regulating, but to prohibiting!

> The statute confines itself to prohibiting the carriage of certain goods in interstate or foreign commerce. Congress is given power to regulate commerce in unqualified terms.

> There is no limitation on it, no qualifying terms.

> It would not be argued today that the power to regulate does not include the power to prohibit.

That answers the Senator from Idaho. That answers the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I am compelled to be absent from the Chamber for a few moments. There are two amendments which I wish to propose at the request of the Attorney General and which I am sure the Senator from Texas will approve. The amendments merely strike out in two places in the bill the words "his duly designated agent or agency" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the Attorney General."

Mr. CONNALLY. The general direction of the act is under the Secretary of the Interior. Are these amendments such as to meet the approval of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. ROBINSON. The pending bill provides that "the President and his duly designated agent or agency" shall do certain things, and we wish to make it clear that the responsibility is on the Attorney General instead of his duly designated agent. I think there can be no objection to the amendments.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to examine the amendments just a little.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. The amendments, if the Senator will indulge me a moment, relate to those provisions of the bill which authorize the institution of suits and the prosecution of litigation. They contemplate that the duly authorized or designated agent of the Attorney General shall take the action. The suggestion is that the Attorney General himself be designated in the bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not anticipate any opposition to it later, but I should like to have the amendment go over so I may examine it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall not ask a vote on it now, but merely bring it to the attention of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, further I want to bring to the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that Mr. Justice Holmes said:

> The statute confines itself to prohibiting the carriage of certain goods in interstate or foreign commerce. Congress is given power to regulate such commerce in unqualified terms. It would not be argued today that the power to regulate does not include the power to prohibit. Regulation means the prohibition of something, and when interstate commerce is the matter to be regulated I cannot doubt that the regulation may prohibit any part of such commerce that Congress sees fit to forbid.

We are not asking that Congress prohibit the interstate shipment of oil, but we are asking Congress to prohibit that portion of it which is illegal, which is contraband, which has been produced not only in defiance of State laws but in defiance of the property rights of the citizens of the State from which the oil came and in which it was produced.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to invite the Senator's attention to the fact that the Supreme Court has expressly said in its own opinion that the Federal Government has a right to enact laws regulating interstate commerce so as to carry out the policy of a State. Here is the expression of the Supreme Court in the case of Champion v. Ames (186 U. S.):

> Congress may exercise this authority in furtherance of the policy of the State if it sees fit to do so.

That is the expression of the Supreme Court. In addition to that the Senator from Idaho has again raised the question that the matter shipped must be harmful. The Supreme Court has expressly upheld numerous instances where the article was not harmful.

Mr. BORAH. Can the Senator give me the authority?

Mr. BLACK. I shall be delighted to do so. The Senator will recall I gave it to him in the discussion of the 30-hour-week case.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I remember.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator will remember that a State enacted a law prohibiting the shipment of game killed in States in violation of law. A bird that is killed in the State of Idaho in violation of the law of the State of Idaho is no more harmful than a bird that is killed in obedience to the law. It is still a bird. But if that bird has been killed in the State of Idaho contrary to the law of the State and is shipped into the State of Illinois, the Federal laws make that a crime under the interstate commerce provision. That is one of the instances. No one can claim that that bird is harmful merely because it is killed in violation of the State law.

Mr. BORAH. I do not remember the volume in which the opinion appears. Has the Senator the volume?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; and I shall be glad to give it to the Senator in a moment.

Let us take two other cases. I do not think anyone will disclaim that the Sherman antitrust law has been the law of this land for a number of years. A combination may be formed to fix prices on the most healthful commodities, as is frequently done, and yet if a combination of individuals or business enterprises enter into a conspiracy to fix prices contrary to the Sherman antitrust law with reference to the best food that can be manufactured in the United States, it is a crime to ship that from one State into another, and that is made so under the interstate commerce clause.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I have great respect for the Senator's opinion, because I know he has given a great deal of thought to this matter. Is it the Senator's contention that the State and the National Governments combined may prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce of a perfectly legitimate and desirable commodity simply because they have come to the conclusion that it is in the interest of public policy to do so?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly; of course. They did that; they upheld the State of Oregon with reference to an hours-of-labor law, although they stated that they would not indicate that they thought that was to the best interests of the public.

Mr. BORAH. Regardless of whether there is any crime connected with the transaction, and regardless of whether the food or the commodity is in any way deleterious or injurious, the Senator is of the opinion that the Congress may absolutely prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce of any article which the Congress in its judgment thinks should not go in interstate commerce?

Mr. BLACK. I did not say that at all. I said it did not have to be harmful. I said the Supreme Court had never said it had to be harmful. I said that they certainly had the right to recognize the policy of a State. If the State adopts a policy, and, in accordance with the laws, as set out by the Court, reaches the conclusion that it is harmful, then the Supreme Court does not arbitrarily and capriciously set that aside.

Now let me state the third instance in which the goods need not be harmful.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Has the Supreme Court definitely overruled the case of Lochner against New York, holding that there must be some reasonable relationship? I am referring to the suggestion made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that the Congress or a State may take some perfectly harmless food product, for example, and by legislative enactment declare it to be harmful. The case, as I remember it, is Lochner against New York, in which the Supreme Court held that in order for either Congress or the State to exercise the police power there must be some reasonable relationship between the exercise of the police power and the purpose for which it is exercised.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, of course, there must be a reasonable relationship.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does not that answer the question submitted by the Senator from Idaho—that the Supreme Court has held that there must be some reasonable relationship, and we here, or some State legislature, could not just arbitrarily take some perfectly harmless commodity and by legislative fiat declare it to be harmful?

Mr. BLACK. The position I am taking is that it does not have to be harmful. If it did, the Supreme Court could not have upheld the law with reference to birds.

Now let us take another instance.

In the case of Delaware & Lackawanna Railroad Co. v. United States (231 U. S. 639) Congress said that it is unlawful for a railroad to transport goods manufactured, mined, or produced by it or under its control, or in which it has an interest, direct or indirect. It does not make any difference whether the goods so manufactured or produced are harmful or beneficial.

Mr. BORAH. The logic of the able Senator's position is, then, that the States may control interstate commerce, because they may say anything is harmful.

Mr. BLACK. No; I do not say that. This was a law passed by Congress, not by a State. They passed a law which said that a railroad could not be in certain business.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, yes; but that is upon a different principle.

Mr. BLACK. It could not mine coal. The coal is perfectly harmless. Certainly no one can claim that it is harmful.

Mr. BORAH. That is based on a wholly different proposition.

Mr. BLACK. It is based on the commerce clause. The position I am taking is that it has been held, in so many cases that it is useless to cite them, that the Congress does have the power to regulate commerce even though the commodity itself is not harmful.

The coal dug by a company owned by a railroad is just as good coal as though it had been mined by some other company, and yet the Supreme Court has upheld the right of Congress to prohibit the shipment of that coal in interstate commerce under the commerce clause, just as it did with reference to birds, and just as it has done with reference to numerous other things. So I take the position that it is not necessary that the commodity be harmful in itself, and that there is no case which has so held.

Mr. BORAH. Is there any limit whatever, then, to the power of Congress in this matter?

Mr. BLACK. Of course, it is for the Court to determine hereafter what the limits are. The Court decides on the particular cases as they arise. I set out in the argument which I made before a number of reasons that it had assigned, among which was action in aid of the policy of the State. That is one.

Another one: Gross misuse of interstate commerce.

Another one: Because of its harmful results. That is one of the reasons on which the Congress can act, but not an exclusive reason.

Another reason: Defeat of the property rights of those whose machines have been taken against their will. In the same case, harmful results to those of other States. In the same case, regulation may take the character of prohibition.

So the Court has not yet ruled, except in general terms, as to how far it can go, but it has expressly declined to take the position that the commodity itself must be harmful. The position I take is that the constitutionality of a law cannot be determined by the harmfulness of the product alone.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if, in his judgment, there is any limit to the power of Congress in the matter of prohibiting interstate commerce?

Mr. BLACK. I agree fully with the statement made by the Senator from Kentucky, and which I have not time now to interrupt the Senator to state, but which I established, I think, in the previous argument by quotations from the Supreme Court, that the power of Congress to regulate interstate commerce is supreme, as it would be in any single State. That is exactly the language used by the Supreme Court in one of its cases from which I quoted. I think I have that expression right here. Here is what the Supreme Court said:

> The power of a sovereign State over commerce, therefore, amounts to nothing more than a power to limit and restrain at pleasure.

That is the expression of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I take the liberty of interrupting the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BORAH. Before the Senator interrupts, may I, in that connection, read just a single line from the Supreme Court?

(At this point a message was received from the House of Representatives, which appears under its appropriate heading.)

Mr. BORAH. However, it may lead to argument, so I will not read the quotation at this time.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg the liberty of making a suggestion to the Senator from Alabama, having heard the argument, which he has referred to, very ably presented by him. I ask both the Senator from Texas and the Senator from Alabama what distinction these eminent lawyers make as to the later ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States preventing the State of Oklahoma from having a business undertaking in an ice manufactory, despite the previous ruling which the Senator has referred to as to the coal transaction?

I do not know whether the Senators recall that the Supreme Court of the United States lately held invalid the act of Oklahoma which assumed, in behalf of the State as an institution, to create an ice factory, shipping ice from Oklahoma to the neighboring States.

Mr. BLACK. That was an intrastate commerce case. That was not an interstate commerce case.

Mr. LEWIS. But was not the shipment from Oklahoma to the other States the basis on which the Court took jurisdiction?

Mr. GORE rose.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] is here. He is thoroughly familiar with that case, and has risen.

Mr. LEWIS. I did not intend to interrupt the argument to such an extent as that.

Mr. GORE. The case referred to by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] is that of the New State Ice Co. v. Leibmann (285 U. S. 262). Mr. President, the question of interstate commerce was not involved in that case. The State of Oklahoma undertook to declare that an ice factory was affected with a public interest and undertook to regulate the price of ice upon that declaration. The Supreme Court of the United States held, as it had previously held, that the question as to whether or not a business or property is affected with a public interest is a question of fact and not a question of law. That is the point upon which the Oklahoma law or regulation involved in the ice company case was held unconstitutional.

While I am on my feet I wish to say, with the indulgence of the Senator from Texas, that in order to sustain the pending legislation I do not think it is necessary to go so far as to answer either of the questions propounded by the Senator from Idaho in the affirmative. I should hesitate to do that myself. I should hesitate to make the word "regulation" synonymous with "prohibition" without any reservations whatever.

I should hesitate to sanction the doctrine that Congress can declare that cotton could not be transported out of Texas into Louisiana or to England, or that Congress could prohibit the shipment of wheat from Kansas to Missouri, or prohibit the shipment of corn from Iowa to Illinois, a perfectly innocent article of commerce, without any question involving that of police power or any other collateral question.

It is not necessary to go farther than this, and I will give a concrete illustration which will point out the foundation upon which the pending bill is based.

The Senator from Texas and I, we will assume, have adjoining oil leases in the east Texas oil field. We have offset wells. That means wells within 200 feet of the line offsetting each other. The State of Texas has declared that the Senator from Texas and I cannot produce more than a thousand barrels of oil per day on our respective leases. That is the law in Texas.

The Senator from Texas obeys that law and limits his production to 1,000 barrels a day.

I disobey the law of Texas. I produce more than 1,000 barrels a day. I produce 2,000 barrels of oil per day. Those who are familiar with the oil industry and the fugitive character of oil itself know that this excess thousand barrels that I have produced each day drains the lease of the Senator from Texas, and I am taking out of his land a part of his oil in violation of the law of the State of Texas. I am taking oil from under his land which he would get if I were not disobeying the law.

The pending bill undertakes to say to me that when I violate the law of Texas, and when I undertake to appropriate the oil that belongs to the Senator from Texas, I am violating the law of the land; and Congress forbids me to do that and forbids my contraband oil the privilege of interstate commerce. That is the ground upon which this legislation is sought to be justified. If this legislation can be sustained at all, it can be sustained upon that ground. If it cannot be sustained upon that ground, I doubt if it can be sustained at all.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, it seems to me it is probably unnecessary to pursue this constitutional argument with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] or other Senators. I simply desire to make the observation that this bill does not prohibit interstate shipments of oil. It regulates interstate commerce by prohibiting the shipment of a part of that oil—only that part which is contraband, and which has been illegally produced.

The laws of a State are laws which it has the power to pass under its police power and under its other sovereign powers to control and conserve natural resources. If those laws go beyond that proper function or scope, the courts strike them down. Here is a State, however, which has passed laws which the supreme court of the State has approved, laws which the Supreme Court of the United States has approved and said are within the proper function of the State.

So far as intrastate transactions are concerned, the State laws are obeyed. Here, however, is a violator; here is a man who illegally produces oil that does not belong to him, that belongs to his neighbor. He cannot sell it in intrastate transactions, but he defies the State government by saying: "I will not deal with it within the State. I will ship it in interstate commerce; and, since the State has no control over interstate commerce, I will employ the facilities that are permitted to me by the Federal Government not to cooperate with the State, not to uphold the law, but to defy the law."

So here the failure of the Government of the United States to exercise its power to regulate interstate commerce in illegal oil aids those who are violating the State law and affords them a haven and a refuge for their crime.

If this were an entire prohibition of all shipments of oil, the Senator from Idaho might have some ground for his objections.

But it is not. And as it is suggested by the Senator from Alabama, there is no requirement in any of these decisions that in order to prohibit an interstate shipment it must in itself be harmful or deleterious. Of course, in many cases the articles prohibited were harmful or deleterious. We contend that these articles are harmful or deleterious in that they are contraband, in that they are the fruits of crime, in that they are stolen property, on a parallel with the automobile theft case in which the Federal Government exercised the power to prohibit the shipment of stolen automobiles in interstate commerce.

The automobile is not harmful in itself. It is a useful article contributing to the pleasure, to the well-being and business and industrial life of the Nation. There is no harm in driving across the river between two States in an automobile. But the moment that automobile is stolen and lands in another State the Federal Government contends that a crime has been committed in that there has been an interstate shipment. Why? Not because the car in its essence is harmful, but because that automobile was stolen, its owner was deprived of its use illegally in another State.

So here oil in itself is not harmful, but when it is the product of theft, when it is the product of a violated law and is being shipped in interstate commerce, why has not the Federal Government just as much power to restrain the shipment of that illegal oil as it has to prevent the shipment of a model T 1901 automobile?

Mr. LEWIS. The Senator means shipment across State lines.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; shipment across State lines. Of course, interstate shipment.

Mr. President, we talk a great deal about conservation of natural resources. The great oil resources of nature are peculiar unto themselves. Oil is a fugitive element. It is not like producing tangible things that each man can have in his own possession, but oil must be captured, it must be subjected to control before it can become property and be utilized. So, in endeavoring to conserve this great resource, not for ourselves but for the whole Nation, in order to keep it all from being squandered in the flush production and low prices of a few months, followed by the accumulation of great stocks and then the later appreciating of the price at the expense of the public, three States in the Union are undertaking to conserve the oil by regulating its production and by protecting that production so as to be equitable and fair to all the others in the fields; and the Federal Government ought to be interested in helping the States, in cooperating with the States, instead of furnishing an avenue whereby the States may have their laws violated and transgressed because a producer may utilize the opportunity to ship it in interstate commerce without the control of anyone on earth.

In conclusion, Mr. President——

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Before the Senator concludes I wonder if the Senator would mind stating what is contraband oil under the statute of Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall say to the Senator from Nevada that Texas and the other States I referred to all have what they call "proration" laws. In other words the amount of oil that may be produced from any single well is limited and fixed upon a different series of bases. One standard is the potentiality of a well. In other words each well is given what is called a certain "allowable." The Federal Government suggests to the States what its "allowable" ought to be in view of the current demand. When the State receives that gross allowable it then prorates that amount out through the oil fields. A well may have a potential production of 2,000 barrels. It may not produce over 40 or 50 or 200 barrels per day. Of course, there are a number of factors, but that in general is the method by which the States regulate production. After the State has fixed the amount a well should produce, any production in excess of that is illegal oil, because otherwise the proration statute in our State could not be maintained.

Mr. McCARRAN. On that basis am I correct in concluding, then, that it is not really a question of the statute of Texas, but it is a question of the allocation of production made under the N. R. A.?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is not quite the case.

Mr. McCARRAN. So that we are not dealing with the statute of Texas now but dealing with an actual prohibition coming from a Federal authority.

Mr. CONNALLY. In a sense that is true and in a sense it is not. The State laws are the ones that are immediately concerned here, because we make no reference to any Federal regulation.

Mr. McCARRAN. I know; but in reality the Federal regulation is basic?

Mr. CONNALLY. For the time being the States have been following the suggestion of the Federal authority. I do not know that they are under any compulsion to do that. They might disregard it, but, as a matter of fact, they are following the suggestions as to the allowable amount which has been proposed by the Federal authorities.

Mr. McCARRAN. So that if I follow out, which I hope I do, the legislation now pending would seek to enforce not a State regulation or a State statute, but an enforcement of a code established by the N. R. A. Am I correct in that?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I would not go that far.

Mr. McCARRAN. How near would the Senator come to that?

Mr. CONNALLY. I would not say that it is an attempt to enforce the code, because it does not in anywise relate to the code. But under the code the Federal Government has been making these suggestions as to the amount which each State ought to produce. In my State the State authorities have been in general following that suggestion, and to that extent, and to that extent only, is the Federal power concerned.

Mr. McCARRAN. Just one question then. Does it follow that by the enactment of a statute of the State of Texas? In other words, was there a statute of the State of Texas enacted to carry out the code regulations of the N. R. A.?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. In Texas we had the statute long before there was any N. R. A. We have had for many years before the Federal Government undertook any regulation whatever, statutes relating to the production of oil, and so there was nothing necessary for our State to do further than to follow the suggestions as to the total amount to be produced.

Mr. President, this act was drawn in collaboration with the Chairman of the Oil Production Board of the Department of the Interior and with the counsel of that administration and they advised me in a letter of date January 17, 1935:

> It is my opinion that this bill would prove an effective measure in supplementing State conservation laws, but I continue in my belief that it is advisable that the bill cover interstate shipments of petroleum illegally produced, refined, processed, and so forth, under Federal as well as State law.

Then I skip other parts of the letter. The Chairman of the Petroleum Administration Board says further:

> I should also like to restate my opinion that although the bill serves as a substitute for and a very great improvement over section 9 (c), it is very desirable to adopt far more comprehensive legislation.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I take the liberty to call a matter to the attention of the able Senator from Texas. He did not mean some moments past in discussing decisions and citing authorities to indicate that the Supreme Court of the United States had ever held invalid for Congress to pass such actions and such acts as he is insisting upon here. The decision of the Court was not that Congress could not pass such legislation as the Senator has presented, but it could not transfer to the President to do so by regulation. But there is no decision of the Court that the act could not legally be passed by Congress.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator from Illinois for that suggestion. Earlier in my remarks I pointed out that the vice which the Supreme Court suggested in 9 (c) was not that Congress did not have the power itself, but that in undertaking to delegate it to the President, to leave it to the Executive as to whether he would prohibit or not prohibit—therein and therein only was the act held invalid, and there was no suggestion anywhere that the Congress itself did not possess the power to enact this prohibition. I again read the concluding portion of this letter.

> I should also like to restate my opinion that although the bill serves as a substitute for and a very great improvement over section 9 (c), it is very desirable to adopt far more comprehensive legislation.
> Yours sincerely,
> CHARLES FAHY, Chairman.

I read that letter in order to indicate that the Interior Department, which has jurisdiction of the oil enforcement, is supporting and in favor of this measure as far as it goes, but in justice to that administration I desire to say that it really favors a more comprehensive piece of legislation—that is, Federal control and regulation, perhaps, in all of its phases. This act, however, is intended simply to supply the gap in the law which the Supreme Court decision has made. There is no effort on my part to foreclose any future action that might be suggested in either House of the Congress with respect to more comprehensive legislation. But it does seem to me highly desirable, and it also seemed highly desirable to the Federal authorities concerned with the oil administration, that the pending bill be enacted now so as to restore and to reconvey to the Secretary of the Interior, or other agency under the President, the power to prohibit these illegal shipments of oil—illegal in the sense that they have been produced in violation of a valid State law—illegal in the sense that they have been produced often as the fruit of crime and of theft, and in order to have the Federal Government cooperate with the States in carrying out their conservation policy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is now open to amendment.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the pending bill. I merely wish to state one or two facts with reference to its origin and history.

Section 9 (c) of the National Recovery Act was the section held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court in its recent decision. That was the "hot oil", the contraband section of the N. R. A. measure.

When the decision of the Supreme Court came down the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] introduced a bill, a sort of stop-gap measure, as we call it, to meet the exigency resulting from the decision of the Supreme Court and in order to avoid demoralization in the oil business in his State, in my State, and in other States. I introduced Senate Joint Resolution No. 26, covering the same points, and designed to meet the same exigency. There was only one material difference between his proposal and mine, which I shall not now discuss. Both measures undertook to prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce of contraband oil—of oil produced in contravention of a State statute or of a valid order or regulation—made in pursuance of a State statute. The two measures were referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining. The Senator and I appeared before the committees and collaborated in the preparation of the pending bill. It embodied many of the points suggested in both measures. The Senator from Texas, having been the author and proponent of the original legislation, naturally took the lead with respect to the emergency that resulted from the Supreme Court decision.

The only object which this measure is designed to accomplish is to meet the exigency resulting from the Supreme Court decision. There are one or two sentences in the decision of the Supreme Court which indicate the serious doubt and difficulty of legislation of this sort, but if Congress can meet that exigency by legislation at all the pending measure meets that situation and takes care of that exigency. That is all that is claimed for it. It does not undertake the establishment of a general petroleum conservation code.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3410) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WOODRUM, Mr. BOYLAN, and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

RECOMMENDATION FOR AMENDMENTS TO COMMUNICATIONS ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair) laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, submitting, pursuant to law, recommendations of the Commission for five proposed amendments to the Communications Act of 1934, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

ALLOCATION OF BROADCASTING FACILITIES TO NONPROFIT RADIO ACTIVITIES

The PRESIDING OFFICER also laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report containing certain recommendations, together with its reasons therefor, concerning the proposal that Congress, by statute, allocate fixed percentages of radiobroadcasting facilities to particular types or kinds of nonprofit radio programs or to persons identified with particular types or kinds of nonprofit activities, and also transmitting a digest of hearings, etc., held by the Commission, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3410) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, accept the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. GLASS, Mr. BYRNES, and Mr. HALE conferees on the part of the Senate.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE IN PETROLEUM

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1190) to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have been compelled to attend committee meetings for a number of hours today and, therefore, have been denied the opportunity of hearing all of the discussion concerning the bill under consideration. I have read the measure before us, however, and have listened to fragmentary portions of the arguments in its support. I have also read the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Panama Refining Co. et al. against Ryan et al., and the Amazon Petroleum Corporation et al., petitioners, against Ryan et al. In the cases referred to the Court held that provisions of an act of Congress and certain Executive orders and rules and regulations issued by the Secretary of the Interior thereunder were without constitutional authority. The pending measure is intended to meet the objections of the Court and to make enforceable rules and regulations to be promulgated dealing with the production and shipment of oil from a number of States.

The Court declared that the Congress "manifestly is not permitted to abdicate or transfer authority or essential legislative functions with which it is thus vested." And the Court further declared that—

> In every case in which the question has been raised the Court has recognized that there are limits of delegation which there is no constitutional authority to transcend. * * * We think that section 9 (c) goes beyond those limits. As to the transportation of oil production in excess of State permission, the Congress has declared no policy, has established no standard, has laid down no rule. There is no requirement, no definition of circumstances and conditions in which the transportation is to be allowed or prohibited. * * *

> If section 9 (c) were held valid, it would be idle to pretend that anything would be left of limitations upon the power of Congress to delegate its lawmaking function * * * instead of performing its lawmaking function the Congress could at will and as to such subjects as it chooses transfer that function to the President or other officer or to an administrative body. The question is not of the intrinsic importance of the particular statute before us, but of the constitutional processes of legislation which are an essential part of our system of government.

The opinion of the Court points out the infirmity of the statute referred to and the illegality of the proceedings thereunder. May I state that there has been too much of a disposition to delegate the functions of the national legislature to executive agencies; and in a number of statutes no definite rules or standards have been established or set up to determine what facts must be found or what procedure taken in order to call into operation the attempted delegated authority.

In my opinion, the measure before us does not meet the objections urged in the opinion of the Chief Justice to which I have referred. The wisdom of this proposed legislation certainly is subject to challenge, and its constitutionality may properly be called into question. I cannot bring myself to vote for this measure and shall, when the vote is taken, cast my vote against it.

I regard the measure as unwarranted by any facts brought to my attention, and it is a further effort to extend the authority of the Federal Government to deal with matters of a purely domestic and State concern.

It has been suggested by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] that the Department of the Interior approves the bill and would go much further and support a measure far more comprehensive and one which would grant to the Department greater authority than that provided in the pending bill.

Mr. President, our attention is not infrequently challenged to the demands by executive organizations to increase their authority and power. Many of these demands are urged with vigor. I had hoped that under Democratic administrations there would be a recrudescence of the spirit of local self-government and a determination to preserve the autonomy, and indeed the sovereign rights of the States.

Reference has been made to the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, and to the supposed grant of power therein to the Federal Government, to not only regulate interstate commerce but to prohibit the same. I cannot believe that the fathers of the Republic intended to confer upon the National Government unlimited authority to determine what commodities should be carried in interstate commerce or to prohibit the transportation from one State to another of commodities wholesome and beneficial to individuals and communities. Regulation of interstate commerce does not justify prohibition of interstate commerce.

I know it has been argued today by the Senator from Kentucky that power must be lodged somewhere to prohibit shipments from one State to another, and he assumes therefore that because the States may not prohibit, the power must rest in the Federal Government.

It is not my purpose to discuss this question, but I cannot refrain from stating that in my opinion the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution has been misinterpreted and, if I may use the expression, it has been abused to the injury of the people of the United States. It is too often invoked in support of the restriction of individual liberty and of the authority of sovereign States.

In listening to the discussion I have wondered what would be the attitude of the Senate if a measure were before us to prohibit the shipment from States where there were submarginal lands of wheat or other agricultural crops raised upon such lands. There is a movement, as Senators know, to withdraw large areas of land from cultivation upon the ground that they are submarginal.

It may be that if we are to have legislation of the character of the bill before us, that the States in which lands alleged to be submarginal have been designated, that measures will be enacted to prohibit the shipment of agricultural crops grown upon such lands from the States in which they are found. It may be that we will soon have before us legislation to prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce of cotton because the legislatures of one or more States may contend that that course is necessary to effectuate the policy of crop reduction. It is not difficult to perceive the extent to which State and Federal legislation may be demanded if measures such as the one under consideration find support in the National Legislature and in the Federal courts.

Mr. President, I regret that there is so much legislation based upon expediency and so much defended and justified by alleged extraordinary economic and industrial conditions.

Of course, this measure will pass, but I am sure it will find its way into the Federal courts, and I cannot help but believe the challenge which was interposed to the former measures and regulations and orders which have been held to be unconstitutional, will be interposed when rules and regulations that are to be promulgated by executive agencies under the pending bill are put into operation.

I shall not take the time to analyze the bill. I do, however, wish to point out one or two provisions which I think are wholly unwarranted. I call attention to section 3, which attempts to confer legislative authority upon the President, or his duly designated agent or agency. There is no provision in this section, or in the bill, fixing the standards under which action is to be taken by the agencies of the President. Obviously the bill attempts to delegate legislative authority, but does not provide standards and means of determining the facts upon which the authority granted or delegated may be exercised. This bill has some of the provisions found in other laws, namely, provisions which grant authority to prescribe rules and regulations and to fix penalties for violations of the same. There are now thousands, if not tens of thousands, of rules and regulations and other prohibitions, formulated and promulgated by executive agencies and individuals for the failure of which heavy penalties may be inflicted.

It is a serious thing for Congress to confer upon the great army of Federal agencies and organizations authority to devise and promulgate rules and regulations defining what acts or omissions are crimes and providing heavy penalties for infractions of the same.

In my opinion the time will come when there will be a revolt against the delegation of so much authority and power to executive agencies, including the authority to define what acts and omissions constitute crimes and to prescribe penalties for violations of such rules and regulations.

Mr. President, as indicated, I cannot support the bill under consideration.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask the clerk to read sections 3 and 4 of the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. The President or his duly designated agent or agency shall prescribe and promulgate such rules and regulations as may be found necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this act, including but not limited to suitable rules and regulations prescribed by any duly constituted State authority, and he may require reports, maps, affidavits, and other documents relating to the production, refining, processing, transporting, or handling of petroleum or liquid petroleum products, derivatives, and blends and may provide for inspection of properties and facilities and may require books and records to be kept available for inspection. The President or his duly designated agent or agency may require certificates of clearance for petroleum and liquid petroleum products, derivatives, and blends moving or intended to be moved in interstate or foreign commerce in areas where it may be found necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this act; and the President or his duly designated agent or agency may establish boards for any such area or areas to issue certificates of clearance. Such board or boards, under rules and regulations prescribed and promulgated by the President or his duly designated agent or agency, shall, upon application duly presented, make independent determinations of fact whether the petroleum and liquid petroleum products, derivatives, or blends for which a certificate is applied do or do not constitute contraband oil. The members of any board authorized by the provisions of this section shall have the power to administer oaths or affirmations. Whenever such certificates of clearance are required in any area or areas, no person shall engage in interstate or foreign commerce in petroleum or liquid petroleum products, derivatives, or blends from such area or areas without first obtaining such certificates of clearance in accordance with the applicable rules and regulations.

SEC. 4. (a) Any person violating any provision of this act, or of any valid order, rule, or regulation prescribed thereunder, shall be deemed guilty of a crime, and upon conviction, shall be punished by fine of not to exceed $5,000 or by imprisonment of not to exceed 6 months, or both, and each act or omission in violation thereof and each day of any such act or omission shall constitute a separate offense: Provided, That upon the second or any subsequent conviction hereunder, such person, if an individual, shall be imprisoned as herein provided.

Mr. BORAH. There is nothing to be gained by delay in the passing of a bill which is going to pass. However, I wish in the RECORD to express some views on the measure. Sections 3 and 4 (a) ought to have the attention of the able Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. I think they embody provisions which might render the law void if the constitutionality of the measure should be questioned. Section 3 authorizes the President or his duly designated agent or agency to make rules and regulations such as may be found necessary or appropriate to effectuate the purposes of this act.

Under the section the President may make, as it were, laws the violation of which constitutes a crime. What is the standard; what is the rule laid down to guide the President in the making of rules and regulations the violation of which constitutes a crime?

In this bill, if I may so suggest, there is embodied one of the defects to which the Court referred in its opinion, and, in my judgment, the bill is vulnerable just as was the previous legislation which was declared to be unconstitutional.

These rules and regulations, referring to an entire field of legislation, are then made punitive in their terms, so that a person violating any provision of this bill or any valid rule or regulation prescribed thereunder shall be deemed guilty of a crime. The violation of any rule or regulation, any order made by the President or his agents or his agencies, may constitute a crime. The provision unquestionably delegates legislative power. These rules become laws binding upon a citizen and stamping him as a criminal if he should transgress them or any one of them.

As I understand the decision of the Court, if Congress is going to make such a delegation of power, it must prescribe definitely the standard or guide and terms under which the delegated authority may make the rules and regulations. In this bill the entire field is open; there is no limit to the rules and regulations which the President may make.

That is the vice of the provision. The objection would not be so serious if the rules and regulations for carrying into effect the purposes of the bill stopped there; but when the bill proposes to make a criminal offense the violation of an ordinary order, an ordinary regulation, an ordinary rule, which may exist at night and be abrogated in the morning, which may be repealed by the making authority at any hour, it seems to me the measure goes beyond anything we have authority to do or anything, in justice to the citizen, that we should do.

I call the Senator's attention to the suggestion for his consideration. I have no desire to delay the bill. If there were any possible chance to change the measure, I would seek to do so. As it is, I can do no more than make the record clear.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. As I understand, the Senator just stated that he does not mind giving the power to make the rules and regulations, but does object to making their violation an offense. What good would it be to make the rules and regulations under those circumstances?

Mr. BORAH. There is no presumption that a citizen is going to violate a rule or regulation, and, even if he does violate it, there is civil authority by which he can be restrained from doing it; but when we have completed the record by making a violation of a rule or order prescribed by the President or his agents a crime, we then have a completed legislative act in the form of a law made by the Executive or his agencies. I do not want the record to be silent upon this question. Mr. President, the Constitution was designed to limit the power of the lawmakers, and therein lies the safety and security of the people.

Referring to the other question, which the Senator presented with a great deal of ability, I call attention to a quotation from one of the cases cited which seems to me to answer much of the argument made by the able Senator from Texas and also by the able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK]. In the case of the Distilling Co. against the Western Maryland Railroad Co., to which reference was made, and in which the question of the power to prohibit arose, the court said:

> The power conferred by the Constitution is to regulate; and the very terms of the grant would seem to repel the contention that only prohibition of movement in interstate commerce was embraced. And the cogency of this is manifest, since, if the doctrine were applied to those manifold and important subjects of interstate commerce which Congress from the beginning has regulated, not prohibited, the existence of government under the Constitution would no longer be possible.

I know of no instance in which the Supreme Court has modified that rule. I hope it may never do so.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, what case was the Senator reading?

Mr. BORAH. From Two Hundred and Forty-second United States Reports, page 311. In other words, the power to regulate is distinct from the power to prohibit, and the power to regulate must be based upon some consideration either as to the deleterious or harmful effect of the article or commodity or that its use constitutes a crime or an injury to society.

We cannot prohibit as a mere matter of policy. The Congress could not conclude that corn should not be shipped from one State to another even if the State should agree and legislate upon the subject and should say that it was in the interest of the State that its corn should not go out of the State. We could not prohibit the shipment of cotton from one State to another even if the State should desire to manufacture its cotton within the State and prohibit its shipment into another State. Congress could not join in the proposal and say, because the State had concluded that it was a wise policy to prevent it being shipped, the Congress of the United States would aid it and prohibit it being shipped.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Congress could say that corn stolen in one State could not be shipped into another State, could it not?

Mr. BORAH. I would have to modify that. If it was purely an internal transaction, purely a matter of theft within the State, I would have some doubt about it.

Mr. President, as I understand, the State of Texas has adopted what it calls a "conservation policy." It undertakes to protect against certain doings upon the part of oil producers; that is to say, it undertakes to say that oil secured under certain conditions is contraband oil and should not, therefore, enter into commerce—either intrastate commerce or interstate commerce. That oil, when it reaches the adjoining State, is just as desirable, just as beneficial, just as useful, and just as necessary as the oil which is permitted by authority of law to go within the other State. There is nothing in the substance itself, nothing in the commodity itself, to distinguish it in any way from oil which under the law is permitted to go into the State.

Is it within the power of Congress to prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce of any commodity, however desirable, however necessary in commerce, upon which the State for a domestic reason and for a policy of its own sees fit to put the brand of contraband?

We come back to the same proposition which I suggested a few moments ago and that is that as a mere matter of political policy the two sovereigns combining could shut any commodity out of interstate commerce that we saw fit to shut out.

The able Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] referred to the bird law. I see in that a distinction. I have not been able to read the decision since the Senator spoke of it, but the State treated the bird as property belonging to the State and therefore, the property belonging to the State, the State had the right to say what should be done with its own property. That seems to me to rest upon a wholly different proposition and I think it does rest upon a different proposition because in deciding the bird case the Court did not undertake to distinguish and certainly did not undertake to overrule such decisions as those to which I have referred here. For that reason it would seem to me it is not to be regarded as controlling here.

I know of no opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States which modifies the principle which I read a few moments ago from that decision. I know of no instance in which the Supreme Court of the United States prohibited the shipment in interstate commerce except where the article or commodity was deleterious or harmful, harmful in the State in which it was shipped, harmful to the community and to the public, or where the commodity was used in effectuating a crime.

I am perfectly willing to admit, in discussing the question of the regulation of commerce, that no well-defined rule has been laid down by which we can with any degree of certainty say that it applies to this or that situation. It is a great deal like the question of the delegation of power on which the Court passed a few days ago. There is no rule announced by the Court. Perhaps there could not be because they decide each case upon its peculiar facts presented.

I will only state in conclusion my own view, for whatever it is worth, and I recognize that it is not of great moment, that I think the Supreme Court in the paragraph which I have read announced the rule—and I know of no modification of it. When the Court said that the existence of Government under the Constitution would be no longer possible if it were within the power of the Congress of the United States, even in cooperation with the States, to prohibit the shipment of perfectly desirable and perfectly acceptable commodities, the Court clearly announced a vital principle.

Mr. President, that is all I care to say upon the matter. I regret to see such principles or theories embodied in our laws.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in reply to the suggestions which have been made as to the right to make and enforce rules and regulations, the Senator from Idaho is no doubt aware that those rights have been contained in all legislation enacted by the Congress. In the case of United States v. Cremo (220 U. S. 506), the Secretary of Agriculture had been given very broad power to make rules and regulations with respect to the forest reserve. The breach of such regulation was declared to be criminally punishable. The Supreme Court upheld that sort of thing, and it has been upheld in a number of cases, as the Senator is no doubt aware.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I know the Supreme Court has upheld in some instances these regulations, under certain circumstances, but I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that when these cases were first presented to the Supreme Court of the United States, rules and regulations, the violation of which constituted a crime, were held invalid. The Court modified its position upon the question. I venture to say that if we continue to make these rules and regulations by the thousands and thousands, the violations of which constitute a crime, the Supreme Court will go back some of these days to the very sound and safe rule which it announced in the beginning when it first dealt with the question. There may come a time, as in the decision in the oil case, when the Court will conclude a danger point has been reached.

Mr. CONNALLY. In a large measure I agree with the Senator in the idea that it is rather drastic to authorize any department to make rules and regulations punishable by fine or imprisonment, but the principle has been established and followed over and over again. Under this particular measure, of course, the Department cannot prescribe any rule beyond the scope of the direct authority which the Congress grants.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Texas desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has two amendments pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have not as yet been offered. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. On behalf of the Senator from Arkansas, I offer the two amendments. I have no objection to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 5, lines 14 and 15, to strike out the words "his duly designated agent or agency" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "the Attorney General", so as to make the paragraph read:

(b) The several district courts of the United States are hereby invested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain violations of this act, or of any order, rule, or regulation prescribed thereunder, and suits may be brought in any district wherein the defendant is a resident or is doing business. If any person fails or neglects to obey any provision of this act, or order, rule, or regulation prescribed and promulgated thereunder, the President or the Attorney General may apply to an appropriate district court of the United States for the enforcement of such provision of this act or order, rule, or regulation. The court shall enforce obedience to this act, or such order, rule, or regulation, by a writ of injunction or other process, mandatory or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. It is proposed, on page 5, in lines 21 and 22, to strike out the words "his duly designated agent or agency" and to insert the words "the Attorney General", so as to make the paragraph read:

(c) It shall be the duty of the President or the Attorney General or the several district attorneys of the United States to bring or cause to be instituted such actions at law or in equity in the name of the United States as may be necessary for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. Are there any further amendments? If not, the question is, Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time?

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers in the Navy and the Marine Corps.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Education and Labor, reported favorably the nomination of Katharine F. Lenroot, of Wisconsin, to be Chief of the Children's Bureau in the Department of Labor.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the nomination of Adolph C. Miller, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Federal Reserve Board, for a term of 12 years from August 10, 1934. (Reappointment.)

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

RESERVATION TO WORLD COURT RESOLUTION OF ADHERENCE

Mr. DAVIS submitted a reservation intended to be proposed by him to the resolution of adherence on the part of the United States to the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

THE CALENDAR

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of business on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered, and the clerk will state the first order of business on the Executive Calendar.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Josephine A. Roche, of Colorado, to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] voluntarily informed me this morning that his suggestion yesterday, which continued consideration of the nomination of Miss Josephine A. Roche until today, was merely a routine request without any express or implied significance whatever; and that he has no reservations or objections with respect to the confirmation of this noted, thoroughly qualified, and able Coloradan.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Arthur Roe to be United States attorney, eastern district of Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of C. Porter Kuykendall to be secretary in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Dorsey Gassaway Fisher to be secretary in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there are numerous nominations of postmasters on the calendar. I ask unanimous consent that they be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc. That concludes the Executive Calendar.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY, EASTERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the Senate has confirmed the nomination of the speaker of the house of the Illinois Legislature to be United States attorney in the eastern district of Illinois, wherein his immediate predecessor had resigned, leaving the office vacant. The one who resigned was a candidate for Congress. May I ask that the President be notified at once of the confirmation of the nomination of Arthur Roe, so that he may take the oath of office tomorrow? I ask unanimous consent that that be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not understand the nature of the request.

Mr. LEWIS. It is with reference to the nominee for the office of United States attorney for the eastern district of Illinois, extending from the town of Danville to East St. Louis. The Senate has confirmed the nomination, the previous incumbent having resigned office, and there being a vacancy. My request is that the President be informed at once of the confirmation of the nomination so that the newly confirmed nominee may take the oath of office in the morning when court opens.

Mr. McNARY. Has the nomination been confirmed?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. It has been the practice on either side of the aisle, especially since the Smith controversy arose, to let such matters as these take the usual course. I would prefer that we do so in this instance.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator from Oregon has reasons for not consenting to the request, I accept whatever reasons he has and shall not press the matter over his objection.

Mr. McNARY. If there is an emergency, an unusual situation, I shall be glad to consider it, but generally I take it the Senate should follow the course outlined by the rules of the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. All I am able to say to the eminent Senator is that I am informed that the office is vacant; that since the nominee is not yet in office there is no officer to perform the necessary functions, and so I ask that notification be given the President immediately in order that the nominee may take the oath of office immediately upon opening of court tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. I think that might go over to executive session tomorrow.

Mr. LEWIS. With that statement, I shall not press the matter further.

THE WORLD COURT

The Senate resumed the consideration of Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Court of International Justice, the pending question being the amendment of Mr. VANDENBERG to the resolution of adherence as reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, would the Senator from Utah like me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. No, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator prefers to proceed without it, very well.

Mr. BONE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Adams | Clark | Hayden | Pittman |
| Ashurst | Connally | Johnson | Pope |
| Austin | Coolidge | Keyes | Radcliffe |
| Bachman | Copeland | King | Reynolds |
| Bailey | Costigan | La Follette | Robinson |
| Bankhead | Couzens | Lewis | Russell |
| Barbour | Cutting | Logan | Schall |
| Barkley | Davis | Lonergan | Schwellenbach |
| Bilbo | Dickinson | Maloney | Sheppard |
| Black | Dieterich | McCarran | Shipstead |
| Bone | Duffy | McGill | Smith |
| Borah | Fletcher | McNary | Steiwer |
| Brown | Frazier | Metcalf | Thomas, Okla. |
| Bulkley | Gerry | Minton | Thomas, Utah |
| Bulow | Glass | Moore | Townsend |
| Burke | Gore | Murphy | Trammell |
| Byrd | Guffey | Murray | Truman |
| Byrnes | Hale | Neely | Vandenberg |
| Capper | Harrison | Norris | Wagner |
| Caraway | Hastings | Nye | Walsh |
| Carey | Hatch | O'Mahoney | Wheeler |

Mr. LEWIS. I repeat the announcement heretofore made by me as to the absence of certain Senators.

Mr. BULKLEY. My colleague [Mr. DONAHEY] is absent on account of a slight illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I find myself projected into the discussion of the World Court as a result of an accident. The accident came about quite innocently, and in my innocence I stepped into it.

During the discussion by the learned and great Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] regarding the World Court, there seemed to be an implication that the reservations adopted by the Senate in 1926 were not fully and completely accepted by the signatory states. I was so surprised at this implication that I threw myself into the debate for just a moment. Not only was I surprised that there should be any doubt at all about the acceptance of the five reservations, but I was more than ever surprised to think there should be any doubt at all about the acceptance of the first four reservations, concerning which there has been hardly any discussion at all since they were first presented to the signatory states.

I went to the trouble, Mr. President, of going over all the communications and all the drafts of the protocols of accession, signatures, and so forth, all those things which had to do with the consideration of the Court since the Senate decided to adhere to the Court with the five reservations; and I am able to say that if anyone will conscientiously read through these communications, he will find that every reservation has been protected in its fullness.

He will find also that progress has been made to such an extent concerning that part of the fifth reservation—the only part, by the way, which caused any discussion either here or in Europe, the part referring to the advisory opinions—that it has been expanded and enlarged and made stronger from our standpoint than it had ever been before.

In order to make this point it will be necessary for me rather tediously to call the attention of the Senate to a few historical facts.

In the first place, we came into a discussion of the World Court quite a bit later than most of those who now oppose our adherence seem to realize. Time and time again the Court is called "the League Court." Time and time again we are referred to the fact that the Court is an outgrowth of an article of the League of Nations Covenant. To this extent, and only to this extent, that is true:

The League of Nations Covenant, in article 14, provides for the coming into existence of an international court of justice, and in that article certain jurisdiction is given.

In the light of that article, back in 1920, after the League was set up, a suggestion was made and a motion was actually made in the Assembly of the League of Nations that a World Court be created. This proposition was voted down on the ground that the Assembly of the League of Nations or the Council of the League of Nations had no authority to create the Court.

The Court came into existence as the result of a multilateral treaty, brought about as the result of a conference among representatives from many States; and in that conference of many States, members of the League and nonmembers of the League took part.

Article 14 of the League of Nations Covenant has now become spent. Its effect is past. It stands in the League of Nations Covenant exactly in the same position that article VII stands in the Constitution of the United States. That article provided for setting up three great institutions which constitute the Government of the United States. It prescribed how those institutions should come into being under the Constitution. When those institutions were set up under the Constitution, the purpose of the article was spent; and while it remains in our Constitution, we know that it is not used further.

On February 4, 1921, we were given our first signal as far as the World Court is concerned in a letter from the Secretary General of the League of Nations to the Secretary of State of the United States, enclosing a certified copy of the protocol of signature and the statute of the Court. This certified copy was later signed on the part of the United States, on December 9, 1929, after all the communications back and forth had been finished and after a declaration had been made on the part of our Secretary of State that all the requirements which we had asked for under the reservations had been met, and that the President of the United States was satisfied that since those requirements had been met it was now time to ask the Senate for its advice and consent; and that was done.

On August 13, 1921, the receipt of this communication was acknowledged by our Secretary of State.

On February 17, 1923, Secretary Hughes recommended adhesion by the United States to the protocol of signature of the Court of December 16, 1920. In his recommendation Secretary Hughes suggested that we go into the Court with four reservations. These reservations became almost word for word the first four reservations which later were adopted by the Senate of the United States.

The House of Representatives, by a vote of 302 to 28, on the 3d of March 1925 urged the Senate to adhere to the World Court, to give its advice and consent in conformity with the recommendations of the Secretary of State and also in conformity with the message of the President of the United States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I do.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. May I suggest to the Senator that he have incorporated in his remarks at this point the four reservations, as suggested by Secretary Hughes, for the convenience of Members in reading his remarks?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. If that is satisfactory to the Senate, I have no objection to it in the least. The four reservations are as follows:

I. That such adherence shall not be taken to involve any legal relation on the part of the United States to the League of Nations or the assumption of any obligations by the United States under the Treaty of Versailles.

II. That the United States shall be permitted to participate through representatives designated for the purpose and upon an equality with the other states, members, respectively, of the Council and Assembly of the League of Nations, in any and all proceedings of either the Council or the Assembly for the election of judges or deputy judges of the Permanent Court of International Justice or for the filling of vacancies.

III. That the United States will pay a fair share of the expenses of the Court as determined and appropriated from time to time by the Congress of the United States.

IV. That the United States may at any time withdraw its adherence to the said protocol and that the statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice adjoined to the protocol shall not be amended without the consent of the United States.

I think everyone is familiar with the four reservations, and that I should not repeat them; but in the beginning I hope to make two points by going through this correspondence:

First, that we satisfied, by the various communications that have gone back and forth, all the requirements of all five reservations made by the Senate.

Second, that there can be no question at all about the first four reservations, because from the very beginning, after the discussion in the first conference of the delegates from the signatory states in Geneva, it was taken for granted in all the communications.

Mr. President, here I must project myself personally a little bit farther. I was present in Geneva at the meeting of the delegates in September 1926. I talked with many of them, and I enjoyed the conversations with them. We will find as we go on through these communications that the League of Nations Council did not like completely all of our five reservations—in fact, they took exception to our reservation in regard to advisory opinions and took rather strong exception to it also. The discussion in this conference hinged upon the meaning of that reservation, because the first four were practically taken for granted. It was in this discussion that I tried to explain once in a while that I did not think that the United States was asking for something that it would not grant to other peoples; that I thought that all we were interested in was that we should come in on an equality.

It was here where amusing incidents occurred. It was necessary for the different members in order to find out what we meant by reservations, to refer to the discussion in the Senate of the United States. I do not want to be light-minded, but I was told time and again that they could not understand our processes here. They could not see why all the poetry about the sun, moon, and stars should find place in our discussion about this reservation about our adherence to the World Court. They could not understand why statistics should be put in—statistics concerning our national parks and so on. I replied that of course if they understood what an American senatorial or congressional filibuster was they would understand it. But that led to more confusion than ever. "What was a filibuster?" And then I tried to explain. I attempted to explain by suggesting that a filibuster was something that was full of bluster.

I found myself in more difficulty than ever. I gave up; and I realized it right then, as everyone is realizing who has spent some time in foreign countries and with foreign languages, that when the Lord confused the tongues at the time of the building of the Tower of Babel, he started something.

Now, as we run through these various communications, I desire to read those parts which refer to the acceptance of the five reservations and showing that there could be no doubt. In the Senate resolution of January 27, 1926, giving advice and consent to the adhesion by the United States we find this one sentence, which is a sentence we must accept, which is the sentence in its spirit we must follow in all communications. On March 2, 1926, the Secretary of State sent forth the first communication to the Secretary General of the League of Nations, and in that he said:

I have the honor, therefore, to inform you that the signature of the United States will not be affixed to the said protocol until the governments of the powers signatory thereto shall have signified in writing to the Government of the United States their acceptance of the foregoing conditions, reservations, and understandings as a part and a condition to the adherence of the United States to the said protocol and statute.

Then, in answer to that we received from Geneva, dated March 29, 1926, a communication from the secretary-general of the League to the Secretary of State of the United States, and in this communication we realize that we break away from the easy-going arrangement which we thought we had provided for. The secretary-general said, in part:

I now take pleasure in informing you that at a meeting of the Council of the League of Nations held on March 18, 1926, the British representative put before the Council, in regard to the subject dealt with in your letter, a statement and proposals, which were adopted by the Council.

Then he goes on and says this:

* * * A decision that invitations shall be issued to the governments of the states actually signatories to the protocol and to the Government of the United States to appoint delegations to meet in Geneva on September 1 of the current year for the purpose of discussing any questions which it may be proper for them to discuss in this connection, and for the purpose of framing any new agreement which may be found necessary to give effect to the special conditions on which the United States are prepared to adhere to the protocol.

Then attached to that communication was a copy of the minutes wherein Sir Austen Chamberlain called attention to the fact that there was objection in the fifth reservation to the advisory opinion, and that as European states found the advisory-opinion type of adjudication serviceable, they did not want to give it up.

As we go on, we find that we refused to send a delegate to that conference, asserting that it was not necessary. While we did refuse to send a delegate and made that pronouncement in this same communication, we did accept the proposition that it was all right for signatory states to meet together.

If the states signatory to the statute of the Permanent Court desired to confer among themselves, the United States would have no objection whatever to such a procedure.

This I think is essential because someone may suggest that we went out of our way. That is over the signature of our Secretary of State, Mr. Kellogg.

As the result of the first conference of the signatories in Geneva held in September 1926, we find that so far as the first, the second, the third, and the fourth reservations are concerned, each one of these reservations is accepted with the words "it may be agreed to." In the fourth reservation a very, very essential thing takes place, which says that on the part of our country and on the part of the other countries there was an acceptance of these four reservations, because we find later when the Root protocol is being discussed or when the amended draft is being discussed, that Mr. Root takes from the fourth reservation, which he assumes has already been accepted, the beginning of his stand for making it possible to bring about a complete acceptance of the fifth reservation. Thus we see that there can be no doubt about the acceptance of the first four.

One would have to read very much more than I desire to read today to carry through this type of argument to show that in the next documents that are connected with our adhesion to the World Court we have of course informal and formal acceptance of these things.

Finally, by leaving out the matter of the advisory opinion concerning which there was some dispute, may I call your attention to the fact that it was the second part of the fifth reservation which remained for discussion after February 19, 1929.

Then in a resolution adopted by the Council of the League of Nations on March 9, 1929, we find the Council requests the committee appointed by its resolution of December 14, 1928, to see if there could not be brought together a further meeting to work out the differences which seemed to exist, and as a result of that meeting we have the draft protocol concerning the adhesion of the United States drawn up by the committee of jurists, and in this draft protocol we find a reiteration of what I stated time and time again.

> The states signatories of the said protocol accept the special conditions attached by the United States in the five reservations mentioned above to its adherence to the said protocol upon the terms and the conditions set out in the following articles.

Then in the actual protocol itself, which was signed under the instructions of the President of the United States, the protocol of accession, we find article 1.

> The States signatories of the said protocol accept the special conditions attached by the United States in the five reservations mentioned above to its adherence to the said protocol upon terms and conditions set out in the following articles.

Then to put this into effect, as we said the other day, actual amendments to the statute were brought into being, and the spirit—the very purposes of the five reservations—were inserted in the amended statute governing the League of Nations.

That brings us practically down to the present time, when we are asked to accept the three protocols, and the question comes up, Have we by review of these various communications back and forth settled the question as to whether we have in every way taken care of the interests of the United States?

Let us now sum up the purposes of the five reservations and see if the purposes in the minds of the Senators when those reservations were adopted have been accomplished. These purposes I have divided into three parts.

First, judicial, that is to say that the Court remains strictly a judicial body; second, to see that the United States has equality with all other states in relation to the Court; equality with the members of the League and the nonmembers of the League; and, third, to safeguard our American interests in relation to the advisory opinion.

First, the five reservations were designed to safeguard the judicial character of the Court and to make sure that in no time and under no circumstances would the Court become subservient to any political agency.

By referring to the practice of the Court, this is being accepted as a guiding principle of the Court. But the Senate resolution sought to have that statute written into that statute of the Court. The accession protocol of 1929 accomplishes that result.

The reservation's second objective was to bring about, without question of a doubt, the United States' position of equality with the states which are members of the League of Nations in respect to the Court. This is logical; since the United States is not a member of the League of Nations, it was so written that we should place ourselves in a position in which we might have influence with the development of the Court comparable with that of other states. The accession protocol without question accomplishes this. It gives the United States a position of equality with all states. But with the ratification of the protocol of accession it becomes a legally accomplished fact.

The third objective is an implied one. It seeks protection for the United States against any indirect or advisory adjudication of a dispute to which the United States is a party without the consent of the United States. If the matter is of direct adjudication, the Court has no jurisdiction without the consent of the parties concerned. But if the matter is of advisory nature, there are no parties, as the opinion is not a judgment, and, therefore, it cannot be, strictly speaking, for or against anyone, but it is merely an interpretation.

Advisory opinions are in no sense legally binding. The theory behind advisory opinions is that they would be respected because of the high authority of the Court. A government taking an inconsistent position would have great difficulty in defending itself against public opinion. If we do not adhere to the protocol of accession, and this is the position we are in today, the Council of the League of Nations might request an advisory opinion concerning a dispute wherein the United States is a party. It is most improbable that the Council would do that, but it is legally possible. But, with the protocol of accession ratified, the Court could not, over objection of the United States, even entertain a request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or any question in which the United States has or claims to have an interest.

Thus with the ratification of the protocol, our legal status is incomparably enhanced. The accession protocol of 1929 completely protects the United States. The Court has handed down about 25 advisory opinions. The usefulness, in the face of these opinions, of this type of jurisdiction cannot be questioned.

Our weakness in not being a member of the Court or our weakness if we refuse to accept and do not accept the accession protocol is pointed out to us very plainly in a case which was before the Court last summer. It is the case of Oscar Chinn. This case dealt with the interpretation of a convention to which the United States is a party. We were not present at the proceedings. We might have intervened, of course, because we could have claimed an interest, and the Court would have recognized our intervention, but the machinery was not prepared for such intervention. It is not probable that our interests have been hurt as the result of the decision of the Court, but, at the same time, we were a party to a convention concerning the interpretation of which the Court acted. The Court had been asked for an opinion, and we were not in a position to protect our interests.

To repeat, a request for an advisory opinion will not be entertained by the Council or the Assembly of the League without consultation with the United States. The United States will, therefore, always have a timely opportunity to say whether it wishes to claim an interest, and, what is more, under the accession protocol, the duty is definitely placed on the Court to make sure that such an opportunity has been afforded the United States. This is an advance over the original reservation. If the United States should decide to claim an interest, we could object to any request being made for an advisory opinion, but even if we should fail to object, before the Court would entertain the request it would be in duty bound to ascertain whether the United States has had an opportunity to object. While it is inconceivable that any conflict might arise between the United States and the Council, the protocol further provides that if no agreement can be reached, the United States may at any time withdraw and denounce the protocol of accession and of signature. The 1929 protocol thus completely protects the United States. Indeed, it gives us even greater protection than did the reservation of 1926, for it enables us not only to oppose the giving of an advisory opinion by the Court, but it even stops a request for such an opinion on the part of the Council. Thus we are doubly protected. It actually places us in a favored position not enjoyed by any other state, not enjoyed by even a member of the League of Nations. And, what is more, we have restated our right of withdrawing at will. We have much to gain by ratifying the accession protocol and nothing to lose.

Mr. President, after this rather tedious review, if the logic which we use in summing up what has gone before us, historically, is correct, actually before the Senate of the United States today is not the question of adhesion to the World Court. That was decided in 1926. Legally, I realize that until advice and consent is given it is perfectly proper for us to discuss this question as if it were entirely new to us and start from the beginning; but actually the question is, Did we accept the historical fact; have the signatory States done so; have the modifications of the rules of the Court been made to such an extent that we are satisfied in regard to our reservations; and, is it true, as our Secretary of State in the Hoover administration said was true, that all the objectives we had have been reached by the legal changes which have been made in regard to the organization of the Court?

If this be true, there, of course, should be no delay about our voting upon this question; and I urge that there be no more delay, but that the Senate of the United States vote as soon as is practically possible concerning this question, and that we put ourselves on record in regard to the question before us as to whether our interests have been protected or not, because the question of adherence to the World Court was decided some little time ago.

Mr. President, I am not one of those who in the least are apologetic regarding the judicial theory of an advisory opinion. I respect greatly the mature judgment and the dignity of the Senator from Idaho, and I, as the other Members of the Senate, listened spellbound yesterday to his address; but at the same time I think that he does not and cannot give full credit to the reasons for an advisory opinion. In fact, I am sure that if we will use his own illustration concerning the advisory opinion which he stressed yesterday so greatly, we will find that there is more reason for the Court of Justice than he maintains there is, and that there is real reason for our supporting this great Court as a medium of promoting peace in the world.

The rendering of advisory opinions is one of the most important functions of the World Court. Except in the debates carried on in the Senate of the United States, the advisory-opinion theory has never been attacked anywhere else in the world as a proper judicial process.

In the debate of the Committee of the Jurists in 1929 the provisions for an advisory opinion, which had previously depended solely upon the rules of the Court, were embodied in the statutes, because, after several years of experience, it was possible to form an accurate idea of the working of the procedure in respect to advisory opinions.

In some of the cases it has been shown that an advisory opinion is probably more important than an ordinary judicial opinion so far as the maintenance of the peace of the world is concerned. Three great advisory opinions give us exactly the same background as the Senator from Idaho painted for us yesterday concerning the opinion in regard to the customs union between Germany and Austria.

Advisory opinion no. 12 concerned the Mosul case. The case between Great Britain and Turkey, concerning Iraq's frontier, was submitted to the Council by Great Britain August 6, 1924. Great Britain and Turkey were almost at the point of war concerning boundaries. Great Britain submitted the case to the Council. Turkey claimed the Council had no jurisdiction. The Council, however, asked the Court to give an opinion.

Mr. President, wars have been caused over boundaries. Here we have a typical case where the advisory opinion is used to slow up nations in their anger. We have a case where one side refuses to pay attention to the advisory opinion. We have a case where they say they will not pay attention to an opinion if it is given. We have a case where one side says the League of Nations Council has no authority to ask for an advisory opinion. We have a case where one nation is determined to fight and to use its troops and other resources against any opinion which might run counter to their judgment of what they considered to be justice in a boundary case. Here we have all the elements that go into the making and the consummating of war. Here we have a case which is critical, which is essentially politically critical, and where war is imminent. What happened? In spite of all that Turkey said, the opinion was handed down; and as a result, perhaps, of the slowing-up process incident to the giving of the advisory opinion, in spite of the braggadocio of the Turkish Government, in spite of the movement of troops, the opinion was respected; the boundary line was corrected; and the peace of the world was maintained.

We may go on and cite other cases like it. Before we do go on, and I am going on because I want to cite two more of the advisory cases much in the same spirit in which the great Senator from Idaho cited them yesterday, let me ask what is meant by the "judicial function"?

Provisions are made for advisory opinions in several of the States of the Union. The Massachusetts constitution of 1790 provides for advisory opinions. Colorado, Florida, Maine, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, and South Dakota use the advisory judicial opinion system. The supreme courts of the Dominion of Canada and the seven Provinces of Canada accept the theory in judicial cases of the advisory opinion. The judicial committee of the Privy Council of Great Britain, under the judicial committee act of 1833, accepts the judicial advisory opinion. Under the English common law for years advisory opinions were given to the Crown.

It is difficult to state what is the judicial function apart from the actual history of the Court, and this is a part of the history of the Court. In the actual discharge of its advisory function the Court has always kept within the limits which characterize a judicial function.

Let us turn now for a moment to the great case which the Senator from Idaho brought up yesterday and consider that just a little bit more fully and in a little different way. Let me paint, before I do this, the fact that all that the Senator from Idaho said concerning unsettled conditions in Europe at the time the opinion was sought is true. Europe was on the verge of a war. There was reason for Europe's being on the verge of war. The customs-union suggestion hit at the very heart and very soul of what was the primary purpose of the Treaty of St. Germain. That purpose was to keep the unification of middle Europe from being an accomplished fact. The purpose, so far as the treaty was concerned, was political.

I invite attention to the fact that all during the World War Germany and Austria were trying to bring about exactly the same kind of customs union, bringing it about for military purposes as well as for economic purposes. The only reason why they were unsuccessful in this effort was because the little country of Hungary, which was a part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, said that such a union would destroy the independent integrity of Hungary, and they fought that proposition during the whole course of the war.

That was a feeling apart from what was then an allied group of nations fighting another group of nations. Hungary felt that her independent integrity was of great importance and she objected to Germany and Austria bringing those two nations into more of a bond than existed during the war time, and this on a strictly constitutional basis.

The opinion, when it was put to the Council of the League of Nations and from the Council to the Court, was a legal question though it did have political implications as the Senator from Idaho pointed out. It did come at a time when actually there were marching feet in Europe because, as I said before, it hit at the very heart and soul of what was the real objective and the motive power behind the Treaty of St. Germain. The Senator from Idaho merely disagrees in his argument with the majority opinion. There were grudges on both sides.

I am not going into the question which was before the Court because that has been discussed; but I do want to point out one thing which the Senator from Idaho failed to mention yesterday, and that is concerning the request of Austria for an ad hoc judge. He implied that Austria was denied this privilege. Both sides requested an ad hoc judge, and the Court handed down the decision that both sides were represented by judges who were already on the Court, one by a judge who was of German extraction and who so far as this case was concerned was on the side of Austria, the other by a judge of French extraction and who so far as this case was concerned was on the side of Czechoslovakia.

So both requests were denied. Each had the opportunity to make the request, but the Court decided against each of them.

I invite attention to this fact because I have incorrectly referred to the Court and its judges as if they represented nationalities. Yesterday the Senator from Idaho read the names of the seven dissenting judges and he did something that made me very, very happy. As a man who has had occasion to defend the poor yellow man on the other side of the world time and time again, I was greatly pleased to have him list the Chinese justice and the Japanese justice as Teutons. I realize it was a slip of the tongue, but his idea was that it was the Teuton influence that brought about the decision of the minority judges.

Historically I would say to the Senator from Idaho that the great justice from China, if he could accidentally assume that he was in any way related to the Teutons, would feel grieved. The Kaiser, in sending his troops to China, at the time of the Boxer Rebellion, told his generals to fight in such a way that the Chinese would know what the word "Hun" meant. For 2,500 years of Chinese literature and Chinese history, the bogeyman, the thing that has frightened the Chinese more than anything else, the thing against which they built their great wall, was the people who were called and held as related to the Huns who later overran Europe.

The Senator from Idaho, too, forgot to mention that there was a Belgian judge among the minority. If his contention were true, this judge should have voted with the majority, because Belgium is definitely pro-French.

To continue, there was a politically tense situation. It was most important for the Court to be able to keep the legal question in its discussion. The Senator from Idaho explained the German-Austrian protocol as a reciprocity treaty. It was not a reciprocity treaty. It was in fact a customs union and there is a tremendous difference between a reciprocity treaty and a customs union.

Historically it can be shown that such a union was contrary to the maintenance of the independence of Austria. Throughout the war negotiations were in progress to try to bring about a similar union between Germany and the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Hungary refused to consider this union because it would impair her independence. Finally, just before the end of the war an agreement was reached, but this agreement was upon a customs union in the sense of the 1931 agreement, because certain tariffs were maintained between the two nations. Germany conceded almost free trade, but the Austro-Hungarian delegation established a very considerable number of intermediary duties on the German exports. The formula was always free duties, partly from the one side, partly on both sides, intermediary duties equal to the difference between the external duties. Using this formula the treaty was signed October 11, 1918, but never went into effect.

If such formula had been included in the 1931 union the Senator from Idaho might be justified in calling it a reciprocal agreement, but no such safeguard formula for the independence of Austria was included.

In 1919 the Allied Powers, with the United States cooperating, just to show how completely the fear of a union of middle Europe is inherent in the world, urged omission from the German constitution of reference to any union at all with Austria. Thus we see this case reaches right at the very heart and soul of the political desires of the Allies. No wonder they were, as the Senator from Idaho pointed out yesterday, ready to march. No wonder they were with armies ready to act if this should become an accomplished fact.

It did not become an accomplished fact. The advisory opinion worked satisfactorily. It is true when the opinion was first handed down the editorial pronouncements throughout the world seemed to give vent to the notion that it was a politically influenced opinion. The editorials which were quoted yesterday were valid editorials. But if it is right to bring in an argument today concerning the editorial opinion of certain papers concerning an advisory opinion, I say it is extremely valid for me to throw into the argument at this time the result of the editorial opinion of more than 2,000 papers in the United States concerning the adherence of the United States to the protocol.

Questionnaires were sent to more than 2,000 papers in the United States, asking them whether they favor the adherence of the United States to the protocols. Out of the 2,000 some 400 failed to reply, but of the 1,600 left, 1,200 of the total were in favor of the Senate accepting the protocols and adhering to the World Court.

Now we must go one step farther in regard to this opinion handed down concerning the customs union case—the advisory opinion of the World War.

In spite of the fact, as the Senator from Idaho pointed out, that the opinion seemed to be politically influenced, everyone knows that in the light of past history, of the type which I cited here today and which I am going to cite, through this opinion the independent integrity of Austria was maintained, and that in the opinion of practically every student of international relations in the world today that is one of the most vital and one of the most important factors having to do with the peace of Europe today.

I was in Germany last summer; and I wonder what might have happened at the time Dollfuss was assassinated if those who shot Dollfuss had been successful in their political aims, if this customs union had been effected. If that event, under the present circumstances, was enough to cause the mobilization of troops on the border, if it was enough to bring nations together protesting that which was being done, how much greater would have been the movement of troops if there had been brought about an actual union between these two countries in middle Europe!

That, however, is not the only reason why the judgment of the majority of these judges was right, and why the opinion of the minority was wrong.

We find that in 1932, in Geneva, Austria entered into another multilateral agreement with many states, reiterating and making over again the legal effects in accordance with the opinion which was handed down. In other words, Austria herself today has given evidence of showing that she accepted the opinion, and wants that interpretation concerning her own national integrity understood to be her will.

Back again to the picture: Where can we find, in the history of peace-making institutions, any more splendid case of preventing a war than we have in this case which was cited by the Senator from Idaho yesterday?

Here we have nations with troops ready to march. Here we have nations worked up, ready to strike at each other; and something happens. What happens? The ordinary processes of international institutions which have been established, functioning, working in the ordinary way. The answer to the whole proposition is that while soldiers were ready to march, they did not march; that while troops were ready to strike, they did not strike; while nations were ready to rush at each other, they did not rush at each other; and what stopped them was an advisory opinion of an International Court of Justice.

I hardly know where we can find a better illustration; yet I believe I do know one, because there is another advisory case of the same sort. This is a case which is extremely vital. I am not going into the law of the thing, because it takes us into the law of citizenship, and it takes us into the law of nationality, and those laws are extremely involved. There is a conflict between municipal law and international law, and the International Court of Justice was asked to rule concerning these conflicts. The facts of the case are these:

Down in Africa, France and England got into a dispute with one another over the right of France to give to nationals who had formerly been British nationals a French nationality. That in itself was not so bad; but it meant exactly what England did to our nationals before the War of 1812. It meant that France wanted to make these former British nationals eligible for military service. England said France had no right to treat her nationals in that way. France maintained that she did. Here, Senators, we find a battle of the giants. Here are England and France, probably the strongest and greatest of all the nations in the League of Nations now, ready to go to war for such a principle as nations have gone to war in the past. There was the same tense political situation that the Senator from Idaho pointed out in the Middle Europe case. There were the charges back and forth; there was the opinion expressed that France would not hold itself subject to a decision, because the principle was a domestic one, and so forth. Both nations were aroused, ready to fight over exactly the same kind of cause that nations heretofore in history have been ready to fight for; and what happened?

England asked the Council of the League of Nations to ask the International Court of Justice for an advisory opinion concerning the legality of what was being done; asked them to take jurisdiction of the question as to whether domestic law and international law might be brought into an international court. There was a conflict between the two. We do not care about the legal phases. What we know is that as a result of the request to the Council of the League of Nations, as a result of the advisory opinion handed down by the International Court of Justice, France and England did not go to war. France and England did settle their difficulties in a peaceful way. France and England did negotiate a treaty which they had refused to negotiate before. This was put through the Council before an advisory opinion was asked in the Permanent Court of International Justice.

I do not know where we can find, in the whole history of the world, any finer example of the effectiveness of a medium of keeping peace in the world than this advisory opinion has been as it has operated under the administration of the Permanent Court of International Justice as it is at present constituted. Remember, Senators, that in each of these cases which I have cited—one a boundary-line case, and boundaries have caused war; another an alliance case, and alliances have caused war, and unions have caused war; another a nationality case, and nationalities have caused war—remember this: In answer to one of the arguments put forth by the Senator from Idaho yesterday that the justices were influenced by their nationality, let me point out the fact that the judge who was elected to the Permanent Court of International Justice from France voted in this opinion against his own country.

Here let me say that there seems to be a great deal of misgiving and misunderstanding about how the justices of the Court are elected. I cannot go into that question here; but the way in which it was stated yesterday shows that if we call these justices French judges, German judges, British judges, we fail to understand not only the method of election but also the spirit of the whole Court itself. We have in the United States somewhat the same kind of situation. When our Senate was organized, was a Senator an ambassador from a sovereign State? That question was settled by making him a Senator of the United States; and he was paid and has been paid since the setting up of our Federal Government by Federal taxation and Federal money.

The justices of the Court are not paid by their individual countries. The justices are paid in Dutch money—money which is collected from all members of the League of Nations; money which is collected from very many nations for the benefit of 15 justices—and these justices stand in the world upon their own individual merits. They are elected because of their qualifications. They are elected because they are eminent in questions of international law; and in passing judgment we have no more right to criticize them on the basis of nationality than we have to criticize the justices of our own Supreme Court on the basis of the States from which they happen to come. We have no more right to assume that in the case of this decision, which the Senator from Idaho stressed so much yesterday, there was even a leak about how the judges were going to vote than we have today to assume that already there is a leak in the Supreme Court of the United States concerning its decision in regard to the gold clause, and so forth.

But even if there had been a leak, it is not the first time in the history of great and mighty courts that there have been leaks. All of you are familiar with the Dred Scott decision, and the leak which occurred at that time.

I desire now to turn the Senate's attention for just a moment or two to another consideration, and this I shall do quite briefly. It comes about as the result of a statement made by the great Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] in relation to sanctions.

The Senator implied, if I understood him correctly, that under the ruling of the World Court the Court might take unto itself the right of sanctions which was given to the winning nation, and which is outlined in article 16 of the League of Nations covenant. The sanctions there were provided for in the treaties entered into at the end of the war. A sanction in that sense is merely the right of a nation to use force in enforcing the rights which it has under a given treaty. No one is going to defend the idea of sanctions in practical international relations. I am as heartily opposed to them as anyone; but I desire to call attention to the fact that in the four great treaties that were drawn up after the war—the Treaty of Versailles, which was between Germany and the associated powers; the Treaty of St. Germain, between Austria and these same parties; the Treaty of Neuilly, which was between Bulgaria and these parties; and the Treaty of Trianon, which was between Hungary and these parties.

In these four treaties there was incorporated the Covenant of the League of Nations. The four treaties to which we were a party in the negotiations carry the Covenant of the League of Nations as part of those treaties. Primarily, because of this the United States refused to ratify these treaties, and on the 2d of July 1921 we made peace with Germany, we made peace with Austria, we made peace with Hungary, by joint resolutions of both Houses of Congress.

The point I desire to make is that in our treaties with Germany, with Austria, and with Hungary the United States of America maintained its right to use force to see that its rights under the treaty were observed. We took unto ourselves the sanction. God forbid that we ever use it. I do not think we ever will. No one here thinks we ever will. But legally we could take that right, in spite of the fact that we rejected the Treaty of Versailles as it was presented and the Treaty of St. Germain as it was presented, and the Treaty of Trianon as it was presented.

There are two kinds of sanctions. There is the sanction under a treaty where we have a right to use force, and there is the sanction which an international court might be accused of having, but which the Permanent Court of International Justice does not have. It has no power at all to enforce its will, its judgment, or its opinion upon any nation or upon any group of nations. When the question of sanction was put before the Court, the Court itself decided that it could not discuss and would not discuss the matter of sanctions; that it would not even assume that its will would not receive respect by all parties who were parties to the arrangement to bring the matter before them.

I have talked in exactly the spirit which the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] displayed when he said he was happy that I happened to project myself into the argument when he spoke, because he wanted information. Of course I cannot give him information, but I do call attention to the fact that if he was referring to sanctions under the treaty the United States still has the right and we do not reject that right. But I repeat that I would stand with him with all the force I have to see that we never use that right. However, when it comes to the sanctions which the Court may express as a court attempting to enforce its will, as a court attempting to enforce its judgment, or as a court attempting to enforce its opinion, the Court has no authority to use a single sanction, it has no power on which it can call to enforce its will, and what is more the Court has said it never would attempt to assume a sanction. It would leave its decision entirely to the question of the public opinion in the lands where its decision would have effect.

Mr. REYNOLDS obtained the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HATCH in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Adams | Clark | Hayden | Pittman |
| Ashurst | Connally | Johnson | Pope |
| Austin | Coolidge | Keyes | Radcliffe |
| Bachman | Copeland | King | Reynolds |
| Bailey | Costigan | La Follette | Robinson |
| Bankhead | Couzens | Lewis | Russell |
| Barbour | Cutting | Logan | Schall |
| Barkley | Davis | Lonergan | Schwellenbach |
| Bilbo | Dickinson | McCarran | Sheppard |
| Black | Dieterich | McGill | Shipstead |
| Bone | Duffy | McNary | Smith |
| Borah | Fletcher | Maloney | Steiwer |
| Brown | Frazier | Metcalf | Thomas, Okla. |
| Bulkley | Gerry | Minton | Thomas, Utah |
| Bulow | Glass | Moore | Townsend |

| Byrd | Guffey | Murray | Truman |
| Byrnes | Hale | Neely | Vandenberg |
| Capper | Harrison | Norris | Wagner |
| Caraway | Hastings | Nye | Walsh |
| Carey | Hatch | O'Mahoney | Wheeler |

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], occasioned by illness, and the absence of the members of the Philippine Commission on governmental duty, who have not returned.

I also beg to announce the absence of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG], who is necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. BULKLEY. I announce the absence of the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], who is detained from the Senate by a slight illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, the question before us today has been before the Senate for 12 years or more, and if an additional 12 years' discussion of this all-important subject will prevent our entering the World Court, then I for one shall gladly welcome a continuation of the debate on this subject for the next 12 years. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will admonish the occupants of the galleries that no demonstrations of any kind are permitted under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I say that for the reason that I am thoroughly convinced of the fact that if our great country shall enter the "court of intrigue" which we refer to as the World Court, it will unquestionably involve us detrimentally in the affairs of the world to the benefit of those materially interested nations that have so willingly made themselves a part of the League of Nations.

I listened with unusual interest to the remarks which so fluently were made by my colleague from the State of Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I was happy, indeed, that he took upon himself the responsibility of outlining so clearly and so delightfully the history of the creation, the birth, of the League of Nations, because I am anxious that the people of this great country—and by that I particularly mean the masses of this land—be advised honestly as to how the League of Nations came into existence.

Was the League of Nations a creation of the thought of the people of America? It was not. Why? Because, Mr. President, the United States of America has nothing at issue now, nor will it have anything at issue in the future which will cause us to be at odds with other nations of the world. We have no territorial lines to be adjusted; we have no fight to pick with our neighbors; we are a great continent unto ourselves; and if the world will leave us alone we shall not put hand upon, nor worry about, any other peoples on the face of this globe.

I heard my colleague from the great Commonwealth of Utah say a moment ago that not so many years past he visited the city of Geneva, the seat of the League of Nations, nestling so snugly between the towering mountains of the Alps and gazing, as it were, upon the serene, peaceful waters of a lovely lake below. No doubt he likewise observed the dove of peace sitting upon every single one of those massive buildings; and while there he saw, too, the flags of the nations affiliated with the League floating side by side. Then, lo and behold, says he, "I became engaged in conversation with those of foreign lands who were interested at that particular time in the methods by which the League was functioning." During the course of those conversations the Senator from Utah learned from the lips of one from shores beyond that neither he nor his friends in that country across the sea could understand the attitude assumed by the people of America. I am glad that statement was made by him; I am glad that he told us of that experience in Switzerland, because the experience he had there he would have in every other single country of the world; he would learn of the viewpoint of those who reside not only in continental Europe but in every other country on this globe which has become a member of the League of Nations. Why? They have been reared, Mr. President, in an atmosphere quite different from that in which we have been born and brought up. I am not surprised, because those with whom he talked were not natives of our own America; those with whom he talked have been brought up under conditions quite different from the conditions under which we have been reared in this country of ours, and never so long as this world shall last will the people of the continent beyond the turbulent waters of the Atlantic or will the people of the Orient agree with the attitude of these United States of America.

My friend says the time has come when the Members of this body should deliberately place themselves upon record. Insofar as I myself am concerned I shall say now, without a moment's hesitation, that the time when the Senate shall come to vote upon the question in which we are now interested can arrive not too soon for me, because I for one, as a Member of the Senate, am desirous of placing myself on record with and before the American people in order that they may know, and well and plainly understand, that I am endeavoring to represent my clients, to represent the interests of the people of the State of North Carolina and the interests of the people of the United States by endeavoring by my voice and vote to see to it that this country, our beloved fatherland of America, shall never again place itself in a position where it will become involved in a world-wide war as once it did a few years ago.

O Mr. President, I recognize well and true that throughout the length and breadth of this great land of ours, extending from the blue waters of our own Atlantic to the Golden Gate of the Pacific and from the heavily timbered forests of Michigan to the pine-clad slopes of Florida, there are thousands upon thousands of good mothers, God-fearing women, some of whom today are in the Capital City of the world—Washington—who advocate our entrance into the World Court. But if those good mothers of our native land realized, as many of us do realize, that entry into the World Court means entrance into the League of Nations, and that entrance into the League of Nations means nothing more nor less than that we are to interest ourselves in settling matters far withdrawn from our shores, which unquestionably will eventually involve us in war and difficulties with one country or another, they would not be so eager that we should enter the World Court.

It has been said that we of all nations should interest ourselves to the extent of becoming members of the World Court because sooner or later we are going to find ourselves locking horns with the master of the Orient. We are told that we should seek universal peace, that we should join this great body of Christian nations in an endeavor to stamp out the sore spot of mankind—we of all nations, because, say they, the time will come when we shall have to face that enemy of the Orient over which the war clouds are now hanging—Japan.

Never should you say, Mr. President, never should anyone say that we are going to have any trouble with Japan. In my opinion, Japan is the greatest overrated nation on earth. Japan in mortal combat would have just about as much chance with the great, powerful States of our Nation as would an undernourished mouse in the paws of a well-fed and active cat. [Laughter.]

Oh, this bugaboo about Japan! We should join the World Court in order that the World Court might make decisions bearing upon questions at issue between the power of the Orient and the power of the western world. A few years ago Japan had "bulled" and bluffed and "buffaloed" everybody in the world. They even had at that time the Russian bear in line. For months, even unto the end of the world, we were watching the morning papers, thinking there might be some notice of difficulty between Russia and Japan. But within those years intervening Japan has changed her attitude. Japan has about-faced; Japan changed her attitude when the Russians mobilized, as they have now mobilized, hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of troops not far withdrawn from Manchuria, not far withdrawn from Vladivostok, to strike at a moment's notice should Japan by such act occasion an advance on the part of Russia.

We should join the League of Nations because we want the World Court to say that there shall be no controversy between Japan and the United States—Japan, a nation of only 69,000,000 people; Japan preparing for war all the time, buying millions of pounds of scrap iron in this country for the purpose of building ships.

I say to the Members of this honorable body that to enter the World Court is to enter the League of Nations. It does not make any difference to me whether we enter the World Court by the side door or by the back door or by the basement door. Regardless of how we get into it, we will be in the Court, and when we are in the Court we are in the League of Nations, because the World Court is an offspring of the League of Nations. No one can deny that fact for the reason that if the League of Nations had never been created, the World Court never would have seen the light of day.

Mr. President, the subject before this body is truly an important one. The subject before this body is one which should command the attention of every living, breathing person within the confines of these United States, because it not only involves the future of the people who breathe the breath of life now but it involves the future of oncoming generations who will soon be called upon to fill those places made vacant by our respective passings.

Mr. President, I observe that there are many who sit within the sound of my voice who have but recently visited various political sections of the world. I recognize the fact that there are many who have but recently secured information at first hand, particularly in continental Europe, the seat of all this intrigue.

I assume to say that none who has visited Europe within the summers past or within the time of the years before, who has not observed on every hand the fact that every single nation constituting what is known as "continental Europe" was then and is now preparing for war. Yet we are told that if we of America cast our lot with them across the seas it will bring about international peace. Let us see!

Has any single nation, has any single country, kingdom, republic, or otherwise, a member of the League of Nations, come forward with lifted hands and said in all frankness, candor, and honesty, "If America will enter the World Court, the League of Nations, we are confident that war forever will be wiped out"? No! Why? Because, Mr. President, no one of that body, no single person in the whole world, is sufficiently convinced of the benefits to be derived by way of or from the League of Nations to assert boldly that the League of Nations will forever smother out the thought of war.

Therefore, Mr. President, I say if we are all so sure-fired, if we are so certain that our entrance into this league of intrigue is going forever to cast aside war and live only with the dove of peace, why do not those countries disarm?

Let us find out something about this thing. I am interested in this subject because I know that mothers and fathers who are living today and whose sons' warm, red blood of courage was spilled upon the fields of France are interested. I am interested in this subject myself because I know that the people of America are interested in it; and I assert without hesitation that if the American people as a whole, every single voter in this country, were afforded at this hour an opportunity to cast a vote in favor of or against our entering the World Court, eight out of every ten of the votes cast on this subject would be cast against our entrance into the World Court.

If this League is such a wonderful thing—if it is going forever to destroy the thought of war, prevent the maintenance of great armies, the building up of armaments, battleships, airplanes, cruisers, submarines—then it is a good thing; but who will undertake to say that the League of Nations can do that, with us or without us?

Let us find out something about it.

We are talking peace all the time. We all want peace. There is not a living, breathing soul in these States of ours who does not want peace, eternal peace, universal peace; but we do not want to tie ourselves up in any arrangement which is going to involve our Nation in another war. Let us look at it as a layman looks at it. Let us look at it as the everyday fellow looks at it. Why should we stick our noses into, why should we meddle with, the business of foreign nations? Of what concern is it to us? If we are to judge the future by the past, we shall write this now, as it were, in our thoughts; and this thought I beg permission to leave with this most honorable body:

It is said that if we shall go into the League we shall be fairly treated. Like many of my colleagues, I have been engaged all my life in the practice of law. I interested myself particularly in the practice of criminal law; and I well knew that if my evidence did not bear out my contentions what I had to do was to select the right kind of jury. When I began the selection of a jury in defense of my client, what did I do? I tried my best to get, as members of the panel, jurymen whom I knew. I wanted to get on the jury men whom I knew. When John Splinters would come from a point near Leicester, and John and I had 'possum hunted together, I got John on the jury if I could, because John spoke my language. Then when my friend Charlie Case was brought up, I tried to get Charlie on the jury, because Charlie and I had been friends. I wanted to get men on the jury whom I knew, who were my neighbors, who were my friends, and, if possible, to whom I had loaned money [laughter], because I not only know the frailties of human nature but because, my friends, I recognize and appreciate those who are grateful for acts kindly done. Say not to the contrary; it is the truth.

We enter the World Court. There arises a question, of what sort I do not know, placed within the hands of the members of that jury, a jury of the World Court in the form of 11 judges and 4 deputies, who are to pass upon my case. Am I to permit to sit there men who are interested in those to whom they are indebted? Is America accorded, in the trial of a case of that sort, the same privilege that a defense counsel is entitled to when he challenges the qualifications of a certain juror to sit upon his case? It is my understanding that we are not accorded that privilege. Would we be permitted to inquire of those several judges and deputies as to whether or not their respective countries were indebted to the nation over which the controversy arose?

We all know that human nature is the same the world over; and what is a nation? It is nothing more than an aggregation of individuals. Strip Australia of every single human being living thereupon and no viewpoint is reflected or projected; but populate that continent with living, breathing individuals, and that continent is nothing more or less than the expression of the reflection of the people living thereon.

Enter the World Court? No; never!—because to enter the World Court means entering the court of intrigue; and entering the court of intrigue, I assert, means entering the League of Nations. Protocols or no protocols, reservations or no reservations, it is a question of whether or not we want to affiliate ourselves with our enemies; and the question has been asked by many, "Can we trust them?"

Are we going into any business of any sort with any man in whom we have not implicit confidence? Why, of course not. Are we going to subject ourselves to the will of those who have betrayed us? Are we going to do business with or affiliate with those who have robbed us, those who have deceived us, those whose words we cannot depend upon? Of course we are not. Is this not a parallel case? We shall see.

During the World War, the greatest war that the world has ever known, the greatest since time first was recorded through the pages of history, the history of this earth whose surface has been soaked in the blood of over 900 wars—of all the wars on the earth since the beginning of history and the recording thereof, the last war was the greatest war of all time, more momentous than all the wars of the world combined.

Then when the allied nations of continental Europe were on their respective knees, when the blood of the sons of all the several nations of the Allies had been spilt upon the fields of battle, with drooped heads and with uplifted hands and with prayerful faces and meek entreating cries, they said to our Uncle Sam: "Come help us or else we are lost, we are crushed, we are forever doomed; come and fight for democracy and for the world's deliverance." Then America entered the war. The sound of the trumpet, the march of the soldiers, the throbbing of the great engines of the ships carrying us to shores 3,000 miles beyond the border lines of our America were heard! Had it not been for our country, had it not been for our manhood, had it not been for our mothers, had it not been for our sons of America, the efforts of America, the Allies would have been defeated, and they knew it.

Then again there was the sound of a trumpet, and the great heavy overhanging clouds of war and despair and destruction lifted, and there came the warm mellow golden sunshine so long desired, and the dove of peace hovered over the fields of the murdered. No sooner had that conflict ended than we found those who would have us enter the League of Nations and the World Court by way of the cellar door were assuming an attitude quite different and distinct.

What was that attitude, Mr. President, I respectfully inquire? It was the attitude of the ingrate; it was the attitude of one who does not appreciate the friendly act of a foreign nation, because no sooner had those nations gathered limb together than they said: "You did not win the war; you did not do us any good; you came over here after we had already won the war."

What about the $11,000,000,000? What about it, Mr. Frenchman? What about it, Mr. Englishman? What about it, Mr. Belgian? What about all that money? They virtually say that it was our duty as citizens of the world to have financed them in the hour of despair. We loaned them $11,000,000,000. The World War cost the taxpayer, the citizen of this country, approximately $43,000,000,000—forty-three thousand millions of dollars, including, I shall grant, the $11,000,000,000 that we loaned them with which to finance their respective interests as best they saw—and now, after having borrowed that money from the taxpayers of this country, after having spilled the blood of the sons of the mothers of this country, after having accepted aid at the hands of this great America, those who would have us enter this Court say, "We will not pay $11,000,000,000." Of all times in the history of our great country now is the time that we want those beyond the seas to repay us, to refill our coffers, to stack up our Treasury in order that we may withdraw ourselves from the depression in which we find ourselves at this time.

They will not pay. They are not paying us. They are not paying the interest, much less the principal. I stand here stating without a moment's hesitation that I am thoroughly of the opinion that if we get into the World Court the question of the payment of the debts of these various and sundry countries is certainly to be one of the subjects to be considered by the World Court.

Let us see something about this. World peace? They say we ought to make friends with them. Some advance the argument that we ought to go into the World Court because we will make friends of them. Then they mention world commerce; they claim our exports will increase and that our business will prosper. "Let us settle the thing so that the commerce of the world may be stimulated."

The commerce of the world be stimulated! The big business that we have heretofore done with the countries of continental Europe, in my opinion, Mr. President, is a thing of the past. You can talk all you want from one day to the other and unto doomsday about the great trade that we are going to get from continental Europe; you may discuss various and sundry means by which our exports may be increased; but I desire to say to Senators that I believe the day of our biggest trade with the countries of continental Europe has passed. So what have we to gain there?

It is said we should join up with them because it might help us in the Orient. Help us in the Orient? Let us see about that. Japan is a country of a hundred or more islands. Japan is a country which is adding to its population a million people yearly. Japan, which is finding its way toward the great continent of Australia, has just about tied up the trade in the Orient. Great Britain is desirous of getting the United States into the controversy, of course, and why? Because India, stretching from Bombay to Calcutta and from the seas below to Nepal and Afghanistan above, feeding its 350,000,000 souls; England, from its great textile plants in Manchester, has provided them with the cloth with which to make their garments, has provided them with all their textiles; but Japan, with its cheap labor—one-half of 1 cent or a cent or more an hour—Japan, in its desperation, is manufacturing goods cheaper than any other country on earth can manufacture them; and what is Japan doing?

Japan is finding an outlet for her products by peace or by force. Japan is digging into the English trade from Manchester, England, by the production of goods the quality of which is peculiarly adapted for wearing apparel in that oriental country.

Japan has gone further. Japan by peace or by force has disregarded everything in regard to the League of Nations. She is a member of the League of Nations, but she gave notice some time ago that she wanted to withdraw. When she gave notice to the effect that she was desirous of withdrawing she withdrew and, according to my recollection, not a single country or nation on earth lifted a hand or pointed a finger denying her right to leave the League of Nations.

Japan went into Manchuria. It was said that the League of Nations was going to stop all war and bring peace and good will to and among men. We can only judge of the future by the history of the past or the events of the hour.

Japan took an armed force to Manchuria. Why did she want Manchuria? She wanted Manchuria for three reasons. She wanted Manchuria because she has to have some place for her excess population, which is increasing at the rate of a million a year. She has to have some place to get iron with which to build her battleships. She has to have some place from which to get the oil with which steam might be produced to run the propellers of those battleships. She wanted Manchuria because soldiers' arms are of no value unless the stomachs of the warring men are filled; and there in the broad, fertile valleys of Manchuria, not far withdrawn from the Russian border, she seized lands producing soybeans by the hundreds of thousands of tons annually.

Did the League of Nations do anything to stop the war there? It did not. Japan is fighting her way throughout the Orient and is digging into and consuming the trade of the British and those of the British Isles. England does not like it. England wants to get us into the World Court because if any question arises between nations the United States would probably be a little bit inclined to be with her in particular view of the fact that we of America have sense enough to know that if another war ever comes in this country we have 3,000 miles of border line extending from Montreal on the east to the city of Vancouver in British Columbia on the west which must be guarded, and the British have sense enough to know that. Why are we to become involved in this matter when we are not to benefit therefrom? Who can say that peace will come and be everlasting if we enter the Court? If those who give consideration to that thought are sincere in it, then why do they not now and here make the assertion that the entrance of the United States into the League will everlastingly bring peace to America and to the world? If we knew that all the nations of the world were to be disarmed, and knew that without having to take the word of those who have deceived us, those who have lied to us, those who have cheated us, and those who have deprived us of the just loans we made to them, we might do it, but not otherwise.

If this League business—and when I speak of the League, of course, I embody in my thought the World Court, because the World Court is nothing more nor less than the right arm of the League of Nations, and the people of the United States know it. The people of the United States—and when I mention them I am talking about the rank and file of the people of the country—are set against entering the World Court because they are against affiliation with those who have already deceived us, those who have taken the lives of our sons, of those who have taken our money without even paying the interest; and our people, if they are given any opportunity to express their views about the matter, are not going to permit us to enter either the League of Nations or the World Court.

I listened with much interest to the speech of my friend from the State of Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. He attempted to make explanation of this matter. The judges are selected impartially, he said. Let us see about that. Let us learn a little something about those with whom we are called upon to enter into business, with whom we are to sit on the bench of justice. The people of America are entitled to know. Let us know with whom we are proposing alliance and affiliation, and let us see whether or not they can be trusted.

There are today actually participating in the League, I believe, some 57 nations of the world. Some have since their entrance made the statement that they desire to withdraw, and some have said that they are desirous of going in. Let us see who are the members of the League, and let us see whether or not we should join with them.

Albania, Argentina, Australia, Belgium, Bolivia, Bulgaria—by the way, if the League of Nations is such a fine thing, if the League of Nations is that instrument which will keep us out of war, we naturally should assume that it is the implement which will keep other members of the organization out of war. I respectfully bring to the attention of the President of the Senate, I respectfully bring to the attention of the Members of this body, that Bolivia and Paraguay in South America are now engaged in mortal combat and have been for a long time past. We find from the reports which are printed almost daily in the columns of the press of the country that thousands upon thousands of men are being slaughtered. War, war, war everywhere, my friends, and not a single hand lifted to prevent the war. If we are to judge the future by the past, let us judge it likewise by the present, because down in South America there is war waging between Bolivia and Paraguay, and both of them are members of the League of Nations. Stop it? How are we going to do it?

Let us go further right here, while we are on this point. We are told that the League will stop war, that it will bring about universal peace, that it will spare the sons of the mothers of this land and conserve the wealth of our Nation.

I read several days ago that Italian troops were warring with the soldiers of Abyssinia. Abyssinia is a little bit closer to all these countries that want us to join them than is the United States. There was war, actual war, between the troops of the Kingdom of Abyssinia and the troops of the dictator of Italy, Mussolini.

What good did the League of Nations do then? It did not do any good. I wish to say, gentlemen of the Senate, that we may argue all we want to about the League of Nations stopping war in the world, and the League of Nations may legislate against it; and the World Court, the legal tribunal of the League of Nations, may render all the decisions and all the opinions that it wants to render, but it will not have a bit in the world to do with stopping war.

Only yesterday I picked up a paper, and I saw where a horde of Abyssinians had descended a mountainside and trooped their way into the seaport town of Djibouti, the capital of French Somaliland, and killed 18 French soldiers and about 85 African natives of that land; and then we are told that the League of Nations will bring about universal peace when there is war everywhere; and not one single effect has it had upon providing more methods of insuring peace to the dove about which we hear so much.

Let us see who the other members of the League of Nations are. Bulgaria, Canada, Chile, China. Let us stop right there at China.

China, a country providing life for 450,000,000 souls, almost four times the population of the United States, which, by right of age and partial training, should be one of the most powerful nations on earth—China! Is not that laughable? China, with its 450,000,000 of souls, a member of the League of Nations! What good has it done China? China, with its Shanghai, Hong Kong, Canton, and Suchau, has been raped by Japan—raped by Japan I say without the fear of contradiction, because Japan ran rough-shod over the foreign quarters of Shanghai, and on up the valley to the fertile fields and lowlands of Manchuria, and murdered outright thousands upon thousands of innocent Chinese countrymen, and took by force and brawn and muscle and manhood that which belonged to another country, and was not satisfied with that. I picked up a paper of this afternoon, in the lounge a moment ago, in which I saw Japan is not satisfied. Japan wants a part of Mongolia, claiming that in the first instance the portion now desired should have been a part of Manchuria, which they are pleased to term "Manchukuo." They say it belongs to them, and they are going to have it, and if they do not have it by peace they will have it by war; and gentlemen tell us, without the shadow of a blush running through their brows, or a moment's hesitation, that the League of Nations will stop murder and war in the world!

Mr. President, we can only judge the future by the history of the past and the events of the present.

Getting back again to Japan, let us see something about that. I want to say a few more words, Mr. President, because my constituents in North Carolina are interested, as are the constituents of the other Senators representing the 48 States of the Union. The American people are interested—interested in seeing that no more blood of the innocent, courageous sons of America is spilled uselessly to soak the fields of another country; interested, Mr. President, because at this time we realize that last year the Congress of this country was called upon to make appropriations in the sum of something like $8,000,000,000 to feed the hungry, to clothe the cold, to minister to the ill, the feeble, and the maimed. This is the time of all times in the history of the Nation when we need friendly help, when we want those who pretended to be our friends to pay us; and they will not do it. They think a lot of us! They are using honeyed words. The American people are sick and tired of that.

Go out into the highways and the hedges of this country if you want to find out the sentiment of the American people. Do not go into the great melting pots of the cities to ask the opinion of those who are there; but go out in the highways and hedges and along the creek banks and into the farms and small towns, and ask your constituents there what they say about the World Court, and they will say, "I am against now, once and for all and forever, entering into the World Court, because it means entering the cellar door of the League of Nations. I am against it", they will well say to you, because they have been tricked, because they have been deceived, because they have been robbed, because no appreciation or gratitude has been shown to them; and they will tell you, "I am against getting entangled with those foreigners."

The League of Nations did not stop war in Bolivia. It did not stop war in Paraguay. It did not stop Japan from taking Manchuria. It is not stopping Japan now from taking a part of Mongolia, and adding it to Manchuria, and putting it under the Manchukuan Government. Japan is going further, Mr. President.

By mandate there are 1,400 islands over which Japan has control and possession and supervision. Where do those islands lie? Part of them, I understand, are called the Caroline Islands. They lie between Honolulu in the Hawaiian Islands and Manila in the Philippines, right in our steamship-line courses; and it is interesting to note by the map of the world that those 1,400 islands surround almost bodily our base of Guam, of which we hear so much.

That only means, Mr. President, that Japan is wending her way Australiaward, because she recognizes the fact that all the land in Australia is owned by a very small percentage, about one-fifth or one-sixth of the people therein, and therein lies virgin territory, a country which some day Japan will attempt by force of arms to acquire, because she must expand. She is preparing for that now. She is taking England's trade away from her in the Orient. She has a great portion of the trade in the Philippines. She has a great portion of the trade even in the property of the Netherlands—Java. She is doing a big trade in Borneo and Sumatra. It has been said that she is even digging into Hong Kong, the city island owned by the British Government.

Great Britain would like us to get into this League. Why? Great Britain is more interested in getting us into it than any other nation on earth, for this reason: Now, let us see about it. Let us see whether or not that statement is a fact.

Great Britain has control of more of the earth's surface than any other nation upon the top side of this hemisphere. Great Britain commands India, with its 350,000,000 souls. Great Britain has in her possession not only northern Africa along the Mediterranean from Port Said, but she has her possessions in southern Africa from Capetown a thousand miles and more into the interior, reaching where? Reaching to Johannesburg and the gold and diamond fields. England is interested in far-away Australia and in New Zealand. England is interested in the Dominion of Canada. England is interested and has its interest all over the world.

And last but not least, Mr. President, England has her possessions within a stone's throw of our own shore, in the form of 1,500 islands coraled over, the largest of which we find to be Bahama and Bermuda. She has her interests all over the world, and she knows that the time will come when there will be rebellion throughout the world, rebellion against the yoke placed around the necks of those people under her dominion, and England wants to get into the League of Nations so that if any trouble shall ever befall Australia, that they might share that; or Canada, India, or Egypt, or any other place where she may call upon the League of Nations to settle it in a friendly fashion, because we all know that if there were trouble in Australia, if there were trouble in Canada, if there were trouble in Africa, or trouble in any other territory over which she has a protectorate or a guardian hand, that she could never emerge from the heap that would be piled upon her head.

Mr. President, England recognizes the fact, as we do, that the day will come when they will have trouble in India. They have had trouble there since the episode of the Black Hole, and they are having trouble even now, and yet they tell us the League of Nations is a good thing.

I believe that Afghanistan is on this list. Let me see. No; Afghanistan is not a member, but Afghanistan requested admission to the League on September 26, 1934. Afghanistan is now having troops on the border in northern India; the soldiers of the British Government are there—war is there—and yet they say that the League of Nations will guarantee universal peace.

Let us see further, Mr. President. Let us go into this thing. Here are Chile, China—I discussed China—Colombia, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, the Dominican Republic, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Guatemala, Haiti, Honduras, Hungary, India, Iraq, Irish Free State, Italy, Japan, Latvia, Liberia, Lithuania, Luxemberg, Mexico, the Netherlands (that is Holland), New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Panama, Paraguay, Persia, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, El Salvador, Siam, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

I wonder if my friends down in Avery County, I wonder if my friends over in Beaufort County, I wonder if my constituents living on the highways and the byways all over North Carolina, from the majestic hills of the west, so frequently looked upon by my friend the senior Senator from Illinois, and through the Piedmont section and the fertile lands of the east to the lovely shores of the east—if they are interested in preserving the peace of Ethiopia. I wonder if they are interested in preserving the peace of some countries of which the great majority of the people in this country have never heard. Let us see. What do my constituents and what do your constituents—what do the constituents of any Member of this great body care about spending money and time and energy and life and blood for the interest of Estonia, Ethiopia, Iraq, Latvia, Liberia? They have all these little bits of countries in there so they can influence them. Take that list right there and check upon it, and it will be found that three-fourths of them have borrowed money from the big powers; and if they have borrowed money from the big powers, you know they are going to listen to them with open ears. Everyone knows that. They are going to listen with open ears.

There is the little country of Liberia. Years upon years ago, Mr. President, those of a nobler caste of the colored race in this country—if I recall correctly, my dear Senator from Illinois—emigrated back to the shores from which they first came and set up there a Republic of their own. They called it Liberia—and by the way, if my memory serves me correctly, the capital is called "Monroe."

Mr. LEWIS. Monrovia.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Monrovia—named after the great President Monroe. Why, down there in Liberia they are practicing slavery today. Of course, a lot of them will deny it, but go and see for yourselves. Send your emissaries, your investigators, there. They are practicing slavery down there in Liberia; practicing it right there among themselves—those people who left our shores to establish a nation of their own. And little Liberia is brought into the League. There is not a thing in the world to Liberia except several hundred thousand acres of plantations owned by the Firestone Rubber Co. That is all there is to it. But they get in the League. I do not know whether Mr. Firestone is for the League of Nations or against it, but they are having an awful trouble with their internal debt and the paying of their debts to other countries in the world. By the way, if I recall correctly, they either borrowed or were trying to borrow some money from France. I know they had a representative over there last year endeavoring to get some more money from France, and she is unquestionably obligated to France.

Let us see what else do we find? Latvia. Latvia is up near Russia. By the way, they say the League is going to stop war. Let us see about that. Senators who have visited the Continent recently, and particularly Senators who have visited Germany, know that on every boulevard, on every highway, on every street are heard the sounds that come as the result of the goose step, which is being practiced far and wide, not only in Berlin on state occasions, but in Hamburg and Dresden and Heidelberg, and all along the line and all over that country.

By the way, speaking of Germany reminds me, Mr. President, that Italy but recently made some sort of treaty or pact or entered into negotiation with France; and England is flirting with Germany right now. If the League is going to bring about universal peace, why all over Germany, Mr. President, do we find great regiments, thousands upon thousands of duly constituted militaristic men, practicing for the fray that may come? If it is going to bring about universal peace, why inject the United States of America into it? If it is bringing about universal peace and in the future there will be no wasting of lives as the result of war, why is the dictator, the high almighty of Italy, Mussolini, training now the children and the youth of the land from 4 years and over, and having those from 8 on wear the black shirts? Why? Because he is developing the trigger eye for the rifle; because he is developing the strong arm for the saber; because he is developing those muscular limbs so that his soldiers may climb from the valley to the highlands of the other parts of the Continent, over the Alps and elsewhere.

If the World Court and the League of Nations are going to bring about peace, why have they not done it among the nations of the world which I have mentioned?

Mr. President, there are others. Here is Paraguay, which is at war with Bolivia; Persia and Peru; Poland and Portugal; Rumania and El Salvador; Siam, South Africa, Spain, and Sweden. There was a terrible revolution in Spain last year, and they are having trouble now. Hundreds upon hundreds were killed in internal war there. Nothing has been done about it. I ask again if we are to be led into this in the belief that it is going to spare the lives of our sons and not empty the Treasury of the land, why is not something done?

Then we have Switzerland, Turkey, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia, also members of the League and the Court.

Japan announced her resignation from the League of Nations in 1933. Japan will not abide by anything the League of Nations does because Japan has said so. A big ranch in Japan comprises hardly any larger portion of land than might be enclosed within the walls of the Senate Chamber. Japan has to have more room for her population, and she is going to get it regardless of what the League of Nations or the World Court tell her by decision or by advice. She is going right ahead. But there is no use worrying about Japan jumping on the United States. She would not have a bit of show against us. Once upon a time she could have whipped Russia, but she has waited too long. If Russia ever sends 50 bombers or a hundred planes over to Yokohama, or Tokyo, or any of the other 25 cities in Japan, it will be all over with Japan. Japan needs a spanking badly.

Next we have Afghanistan. She made request to come into the League, but, according to my understanding, she has not yet entered.

Germany resigned from the League on October 21. Germany is going to say, "If we come into the League and participate again"—mark you this, Mr. President—"If we come into the League it has to be distinctly understood that we can manufacture and hold and have in the grasp of our citizens arms equivalent to those of the other nations of the world, according to our population and standing." If this is going to bring about universal peace, why should Germany say, "We will only come in with the understanding that we may increase our armament, that we may manufacture more poisonous gases, more rifles to place upon the shoulders of our men, more cannon for the enemy's breast", if she really thought her entrance into the League or the activities of the League are going to bring about universal peace?

If we go into the World Court or the League of Nations it will cost us more lives and more money and more grief. We have not a thing in the world to gain by going into it.

Russia was admitted to the League on September 18, 1934. Russia covers a big part of the earth. Russia is three times the size of the United States. It is difficult to picture a country so large. She has 175,000,000 of people. She says she wants peace. The record from the State Department reveals to me that she was admitted to the League on September 18, 1934. As to the part she has played, I am in ignorance.

But I ask, Mr. President, when these nations aline themselves and sign on the dotted lines as members of the World Court and affiliate with other countries in the League of Nations and the World Court, why do they continue to war? Russia is a member of the League of Nations. Russia a number of years ago under the Czar constructed a railroad from Moscow to the coast, thousands of miles away, along the Manchurian border. But Russia has done more since then. Russia has just completed another railroad which parallels the Trans-Siberian Railroad from Moscow to the Pacific.

We find all over the world, in countries great and countries small, throughout the nations of half a hundred or more speaking in languages different from the others, that those who are affiliated with the League have said, "Come in and there will be world peace." But we find likewise that they are constantly increasing their armies and increasing their navies. I have but recently observed in the columns of the press that some are advocating the construction of a hundred thousand airplanes for America. What is that for? Surely not for the purpose of carrying passengers, surely not for the purpose of transporting the mail, but, according to their own admissions, 100,000 planes are to be built with the money of the people of this country to protect 3,000 miles of border to the north of us, to patrol that border line for the safety of the inhabitants of this country, that lengthy strip from the Atlantic to the Pacific dividing the two great Republics of North America, the United States and Mexico. People are advocating increasing the Navy of this country and the building of all sorts of vessels, and yet cry "Peace!"

Mr. President, may I bring this to your attention? The other night I attended a moving picture, and I saw in one of the newsreels the Queen of England smashing a bottle of champagne upon the nose of the largest passenger ship in the world. I saw the Queen of the great British Empire dedicating to posterity and happiness and success the queen of the seas, the largest passenger ship afloat, costing $50,000,000 and more—$50,000,000 for a passenger ship! Does anyone have so little sense as to think that they spent $50,000,000 in building that ship at one of the docks in Scotland for the purpose of transporting passengers with a view to making money? Why, of course not, Mr. President.

Anybody who knows anything about the shipping business knows that the day of the immense, mammoth passenger ship is past. It does not pay. But England has put $50,000,000 into one steamship and heralds to the world that she will build a sister to that ship costing an equal sum, $50,000,000—for the purpose of making money out of the passenger business? No. What is the purpose of it? For the purpose of having ready transports that will carry thousands upon thousands of soldiers from the British Isles to India, when there is no longer passive resistance by Gandhi; of carrying thousands upon thousands of soldiers to Australia, when Japan tries to take charge of that continent, and to other sections of the world. Almost every other country on earth is doing the same thing, and the record will reveal that I speak facts.

What about the Rex, which belongs to Italy? Why did the Italian Government subsidize the concern which built that ship and put so many millions of dollars into building the largest steamer plying between the ports of Italy and those of the United States? To make money? No; to have that vessel ready when she had to send her troops to war.

Why is Russia, in the harbor of Leningrad, training thousands of men in the construction of passenger ships now plying, some of them, between Leningrad and Southampton? So that she will have those ships ready when the time comes.

Why has Russia paralleled the Trans-Siberian Railway between Moscow and the Pacific at the north? So that she will have a medium through and over which she may move her troops when war comes.

So, Mr. President, disregarding these honeyed words, these words which are music to the ears of a great many people, let us simply look underneath all that and ask the question: If the League of Nations is such a good thing, why are the countries of the world paralleling their railroads? Why are the countries of the world building these big transport ships, said to be passenger ships? Why is the world all the time preparing for war?

Mr. President, do not let the mothers, do not let the fathers, do not let the great masses of this country be deceived by the request made of us to enter the World Court, which will be nothing more or less than an entrance into the League of Nations.

Is that true? Let us see. If the League of Nations were destroyed tomorrow, how long would the World Court stand up? It would not stand up at all.

I am glad I have been permitted the opportunity of giving expression to my sincere thoughts upon this subject. I am glad I shall soon likewise be permitted an opportunity to give expression to my real thoughts by recording myself as being against our entrance into the World Court, so that when the time comes that I go back to my beloved Commonwealth of North Carolina—a great State, made up of a great people who were interested from the very first conception of independence in this country by way of the Mecklenburg declaration of independence, a State which gave liberally of her sons and her money that we might have everlasting peace—those people in North Carolina may know where I voted on this question, may know that I stood with the American people, its sons and its finances, against those abroad who hate us and despise us; and to make this matter sure I ask but this:

A while ago, when I stepped out into the lounge, I read in the paper that a statement had been issued by one of the departments of the Government saying that last year, during the year 1934, 186,000 Americans had crossed the seas for the purpose of touring Europe. I venture unhesitatingly to state that if every one of those 186,000 people who visited over there were called upon to vote his or her convictions as to whether or not we should enter that "court of intrigue," ninety-nine out of one hundred would say "No", because they realize that while abroad they were held in utter contempt and despised by those whom we befriended.

TENTH CONFERENCE ON THE CAUSE AND CURE OF WAR

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, this afternoon at 3 o'clock, in the absence of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, there was presented to me a brief resolution which I desire to have read. The resolution was presented by a committee of American women representing, as I am informed, 47 States, and serving as delegates to the Tenth Conference on the Cause and Cure of War.

The resolution was unanimously adopted. It relates to the adherence of the United States to the World Court protocols, a subject which is very near to the hearts of the committee referred to and of the members of the conference mentioned.

I ask that the Secretary read the resolution, and that it be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, do I understand correctly that the resolution is one of some organization that is meeting here?

Mr. ROBINSON. Eleven organizations.

Mr. JOHNSON. Well, let us say 40; I do not care about the number. I do not inquire as to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Eleven organizations comprising the Tenth Conference on the Cause and Cure of War. That is the title of the general organization.

Mr. JOHNSON. But that is not an appropriate resolution to be printed and lie upon the table of the Senate, is it? It may be appropriate for reading for propaganda purposes and printing in the RECORD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is all I am asking for.

Mr. JOHNSON. No; I understood the Senator to ask that the resolution be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have no idea of asking for the adoption of the resolution by the Senate, if that is what the Senator has in mind. I did not ask to have it referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, because the committee has already acted. I ask that the resolution be read and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection at all to that, any more than to any other propaganda.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON THE CAUSE AND CURE OF WAR.

Whereas each one of the 11 national organizations comprising the National Committee on the Cause and Cure of War has supported the proposal of American membership in the Permanent Court of International Justice; and

Whereas both dominant political parties have endorsed this action and a wide expression of popular opinion has indicated general advocacy by the people of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the delegates to the Tenth Conference on the Cause and Cure of War urge that the Senate without further delay advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to the protocols of the Permanent Court of International Justice.

CARRIE CHAPMAN CATT,
Honorary Chairman.

JANUARY 22, 1935.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have observed that when a resolution expressing the sentiment of a large number of citizens of this country is presented to the Senate, as in the present instance, the Senator from California refers to it as "propaganda." The Senator from California has availed himself of the privilege of submitting recommendations, resolutions, and statements adverse to the proposal to adhere to the World Court. I assume he will admit that such resolutions are just as much propaganda and just as much entitled to be so classified as is the resolution which I have submitted.

Mr. JOHNSON. Of course, Mr. President, it is all propaganda. None of it influences me, and, of course, none of it influences the Senator from Arkansas. It is all of like character. There is no question on that score at all. The only reason why I spoke in reference to the matter is because I thought, through a misapprehension or a misunderstanding, the Senator from Arkansas had suggested a course in reference to it which was utterly different from the course that otherwise would have been pursued.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I explained to the Senate that, the subject matter being before the Senate, I did not seek to refer the resolution to a committee.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; that is all right.

Mr. ROBINSON. I did want the Senate to have the advantage of the information which the resolution contained, and I am happy to have had the privilege of presenting it.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am delighted by it, too.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think we are both delighted, and everything is harmonious.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is always so with me.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in executive session, took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 23, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 22, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art a Being of Light, Love, and Truth, whose footstool is the whole earth and whose sphere is the infinite universe. In these moments of separation from the tasks that await us, refresh us in the higher joys of a spirit made free. Bestow upon us a blessing that shall be a treasured memory, like the unfaded flower with its unwasted bloom. Heavenly Father, as the National Congress of our fair land, we are bound by the solidarity of duty. Lead us to spread our influence to life and humanity, until our fellow men shall turn sunward faces with happiness and with the comforts of success. Blessed Lord, do Thou most graciously remember the despised and the dejected; quicken every fiber of our being that we may heed the injunction, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them, for this is the law and the prophets." Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 267. An act for the relief of certain officers and employees of the Foreign Service of the United States who, while in the course of their respective duties, suffered losses of personal property by reason of catastrophes of nature; and

S. 859. An act to provide for loans to farmers for crop production and harvesting during the year 1935, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. TRAMMELL and Mr. SCHALL members of the Joint Select Committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments", for the disposition of useless papers in the Post Office Department.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBER

Mr. SEGER appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

REAR ADMIRAL SAMUEL M'GOWAN

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD concerning the public service of Rear Admiral Samuel McGowan, deceased.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a few remarks concerning the late Rear Admiral Samuel McGowan (retired), of the United States Navy.

Our subject, son of Capt. Homer L. McGowan, who served as captain of the Confederate Army, and Julia Farrow McGowan, was born September 1, 1870, at Laurens, S. C. He attended the public schools of his native community, and later the University of South Carolina, from which institution he was graduated in 1889 with the degree of A. B., and thereafter in 1891 received the degree of LL. B. from said institution, being admitted to the bar in the same year. Subsequently he was engaged in the practice of law, and later joined the reportorial staff of the State, a leading South Carolina newspaper.

On March 15, 1894, he was appointed assistant paymaster of the United States Navy, and his career was marked by efficient service. In 1903 he was promoted to Assistant Paymaster General of the Navy; in 1910, to rear admiral; and in 1914 he was appointed Paymaster General of the Navy. It was in the latter capacity that his services to the Nation were conspicuously valuable. In recognition of such services during the World War, he was retired in 1920 by a special act of Congress.

In 1925 he accepted the position of chief highway commissioner of South Carolina, which position he admirably filled until 1926, when he resigned. Thereafter until his death he was a resident of New York City, manifesting great and active interest in affairs of public nature, and especially in his native city of Laurens, S. C.

On November 11, 1934, while on a visit to Laurens, S. C., his native city, always so dear to him, Admiral McGowan was fatally stricken with a heart attack. His body was interred in the Laurens City Cemetery, alongside the graves of his father and mother, on November 13, 1934.

Admiral McGowan was a man of marked ability, integrity, and dynamic force and possessed great simplicity, that rare attribute which always characterizes the truly great. He acquitted himself from every station in life with honor. Among the decorations conferred upon him were the Distinguished Service Medal of the Navy and the cross of a commander in the French Legion of Honor and the degree of doctor of laws of the University of South Carolina.

No words can more fittingly pay tribute to the character of Admiral McGowan than those offered at his funeral by the Reverend Walter Carl Subke, of the Greenwich Presbyterian Church, New York City, of which he was a regular and devoted attendant, from which I quote as follows:

OUR TRIBUTE TO THE MEMORY OF REAR ADMIRAL SAMUEL M'GOWAN

Here we have gathered a large company of people representing all walks and conditions of life. Distinguished officers from the great Navy of our country are here. Professional men, lawyers, doctors, clergymen, and others are here. Officials of this community, State, and from other parts of our country are among us. The Governor of New York was on the same train bringing our little party here. He had served under our friend during the World War. Though unable to be present, a generous token of his love and esteem is part of this gorgeous floral tribute before us. The President of our country is likewise represented here. Also here are the wives, mothers, husbands, fathers, and children representing all stations of life.

What is the most significant reason for our being here? Is it not that a great man of unusual qualities and of exemplary integrity has traveled over the roads in our hearts? Is that not why all the roads in our hearts have been cleared today so as to be highways of devotion? These highways, these roads, all of them, have led us to the Rome of this great and good man's life.

Are you expecting to hear a eulogy generously employing the rich adjectives descriptive of a great character? Many could be used without violence to sincerity. But he would not have it so. He was a man of deeds more than a man of words. His achievements humble us, for they speak more eloquently of him than any words of ours could do. The most eloquent accounts of them are recorded in our souls. In the solemn silences of our souls we are reverently aware of him who has a glorious immortality there, who is with us there, who will always be with us there. In days ahead there will be times during the rush of life when we will enter those solemn silences of our souls and commune with our friend who has won his right to be there.

How did he win that right? Why have the portals of our souls gladly opened to the strength and power of his rugged personality? Is it because he was glorious in achieving unusual successes in life? Indeed, they are unusual. They are great. Those closest to his life know that. His achievements are among this grateful Nation's records of exemplary services to our country. During the last few days in particular, the newspapers of this State and in many other parts of our country, have listed his many striking achievements of full-souled service. I doubt that there is a man or woman among us who has not eagerly and reverently read these accounts of his great successes. But are we here because of them alone? We are grateful for them, but primarily we are here because of the personality of sound integrity that was expressed through them. In all that he did, this was his motto, "A thing must not only be right, it must look right."

Here, during this hour, at one insistence, the dictates of our grateful hearts have made us ideally democratic. All the differences represented here in social standing and of personal merits have been hushed into the silence of reverence, leaving us just a company of sincerely devoted human beings. All differences in religious convictions represented here have been eclipsed. The memory of his sound religion of practice, the only kind that really matters, has obscured all theological and philosophical differences among us. We are here today in the spiritual fellowship of united and devoted men and women.

Looking into our hearts we know why we are here. I know why I am here. It is why most, if not all, of you are here. One grand word spelled with a capital "F" is why we are here. That word is "friend." Can anything be more eloquent than the word "friend" when one has filled it as full of meaning as this man's life has done? Above everything else, the memory of our friend fills us with gratitude overflowing into one grand chorus of solemn praise for this good man. Many of us know that he lifted the word out of its usage in everyday parlance and placed it into the noble realm where but comparatively few have lifted it.

Jesus found in the word "friend" all of the time-enduring virtues designating the most sacred things of life. When Jesus came to the time to give more of Himself and of His service to those loyal to Him, He said, "I have called you friends." The great Eternal Father of us all conferred the highest honor upon an ancient character when, through an inspired writer, He said, "Abraham, the friend of God." So was our friend in his own rugged way. He was not perfect but he exceeded the perfections of many of the best in the things that really matter. One of his most intimate friends paid him this tribute: "If Jesus had come in the flesh during our friend's lifetime, He would have been welcome in his home."

Many here have had written into their hearts rich treasures of thought from our friend. One of these is simple, yet greater than all the others: "If you want a friend, be one." He was one. That, above every other reason, is why we are here. Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt once wrote to him and said, "How I wish you could be multiplied a few dozen times and scattered impartially throughout both the War and Navy Departments."

Those of us who have known him intimately wish we could have multiplied this man, this soul of sound integrity, into all the departments of our National Government and country. What he has done for his country, was done because he was a great friend to his country. What is a great patriot if not a great friend to his country? What he has done for his kinsfolk was done because he was a great friend to them. Of what significance is a blood relationship if the evidences of a true friend's heart are not present? What he has done for many of us as individuals was done because this friend called us his friends. As a friend he was never superficial or sentimental. He was a sincerely frank friend who could hurt us for our good while yearning to heal us of our weaknesses. When he gave anything, and he gave much, he gave himself with it and that was the greatest thing he has given to us, the thing calling us together, the thing that will remain with us when we leave here. He was a great friend because he was a generous friend. He withheld nothing from his friends save that which was out of accord with the dignity of a man whose integrity was the hard bones of justice made mobile by the surrounding warm flesh and blood of love and affection.

While he was yet with us, could any one of his friends recompense him for what he had done for them? You could never have done it. I know I could never have done it. Jesus once appealed to His followers that their generosity be expressed to those who could never repay the giver. We are among those who could never repay our friend for what he has given to us and to our country. What Jesus said of those who are generous in this way is that in which we all concur when we think of our friend, Rear Admiral Samuel McGowan. "Thou shalt be blessed; for they cannot recompense thee." Our friend, "Thou shalt be blessed", for we, your friends, "cannot recompense thee."

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1936

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 3410) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. WOODRUM, Mr. BOYLAN, and Mr. WIGGLESWORTH.

OLD-AGE PENSIONS—5-DAY WEEK, 6-HOUR DAY BILL

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record a couple of brief resolutions passed by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California relative to old-age pensions and the 5 days of 6 hours each bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following resolutions passed by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California relative to old-age-pension and the 5 days of 6 hours each bills:

OLD-AGE PENSIONS

STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
DEPARTMENT OF STATE.

I, Frank C. Jordan, secretary of state of the State of California, do hereby certify that I have carefully compared the transcript, to which this certificate is attached, with the record on file in my office of which it purports to be a copy, and that the same is a full, true, and correct copy thereof. I further certify that this authentication is in due form and by the proper officer.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and have caused the great seal of the State of California to be affixed hereto this 16th day of January 1935.

FRANK C. JORDAN,
Secretary of State.
By CHAS. J. HAGERTY,
Deputy.

Assembly Joint Resolution 4

Adopted in assembly, January 9, 1935.

ARTHUR A. OHNIMUS,

Chapter 5, relative to memorializing the President and Congress to enact old-age-pension legislation

Whereas the United States has, for the past few years, passed through a most severe period of depression, hardship, and destitution; and

Whereas as a result of said depression many aged persons have seen their savings wiped away after a lifetime of service to our society; and

Whereas many such unfortunate citizens now find themselves destitute and with no hope of supporting themselves or recouping their fortunes because of advanced age; and

Whereas the establishment of a system of old-age security by the payment of pensions to worthy citizens would obviate the need for public charity in this direction and restore self-respect to the persons receiving such assistance, increase purchasing power and economic revival, and carry out the principles of humanitarian social justice upon which our country was founded: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California jointly, That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby respectfully urged to enact as quickly as possible such suitable legislation as will provide such a national system of old-age pensions and old-age security as will accomplish the purposes above set forth and which will be adequate for a respectable existence; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that such Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully urged to support such legislation.

Chapter 11: Assembly Joint Resolution 9, relative to memorializing the President and Congress to carefully consider and enact legislation to provide for a working week of not more than 5 days of 6 hours each, without any corresponding reduction in the present compensation or salary

Whereas there exists not only in our own State of California but also in every State of this great Nation a condition of unemployment, which is depriving millions of our citizens of an opportunity to engage in productive effort; and

Whereas this condition, by destroying the purchasing power of so many citizens, hurts them economically, physically, and morally, and will tend to harm, in the same way, the Nation of which they are a component part; and

Whereas those citizens who are working, by sharing the benefits of steady employment, could aid those citizens less fortunate and, at the same time, enhance their own prosperity and the prosperity of our country: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and the Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the President and the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully urged to carefully consider and enact legislation to provide for a working week of not more than 5 days of 6 hours each, without any corresponding reduction in the present compensation or salary; and be it further

Resolved, That the Governor of the State of California is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that such Senators and Members from California are hereby respectfully urged to support such legislation.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR RELIEF PURPOSES

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (No. 13) for printing in the RECORD:

House Resolution 65

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 117, a joint resolution making appropriations for relief purposes, and all points of order against said joint resolution are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, the joint resolution shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendment shall be in order to said joint resolution except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. Amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Appropriations may be offered to any section of the joint resolution at the conclusion of the general debate, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the joint resolution to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman from New York inform the House when this rule will be presented to the House and what the program will be tomorrow?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is expected to take up the resolution tomorrow.

Mr. SNELL. The first thing?

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is my understanding.

Mr. SNELL. Then immediately following we will take up consideration of the bill?

Mr. O'CONNOR. We will take up consideration of the House joint resolution making the appropriation.

Mr. SNELL. May we depend on that as being fairly final?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, it is at least tentative.

Mr. SNELL. It will depend on how well you can bind them this afternoon.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, FISCAL YEAR 1936

Mr. ARNOLD, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 4442) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. TABER reserved all points of order on the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting an editorial on Boulder Dam, which appeared in the Washington Herald this morning, written by Arthur Brisbane. I know this is an unusual request, but may I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], who is on his feet, that I do not often put extraneous matter in the RECORD. However, this is one of the most elucidating and informing discussions of one of the world's greatest projects I have ever read.

Of course, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to do so, he may object; but I certainly hope he and every other Member will read this article if he does object.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say to the gentleman from Mississippi that he has made requests heretofore for matter to be inserted in the RECORD that I believe could be read in the newspapers and not make the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a newspaper. I can see no reason why the editorial should be inserted in the RECORD, because every Member of Congress who wants to insert extraneous matter in the RECORD does so because of the fact it is important to him. This is only going to fill the RECORD with a lot of newspaper articles. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman withhold that a minute?

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania that this editorial is in line with a great national movement by which we are attempting to release the American people from the implacable clutches of the Power Trust that is robbing the people of every State in the Union, including the State of Pennsylvania. The Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania certainly need to read this article. If I cannot get it in the RECORD here, I think I can get it inserted over in the Senate.

Mr. RICH. May I say that Pennsylvania is no worse than Mississippi or any other State in having the Power Trust take away from the people the things that are due them? Pennsylvania people are just as honorable as those from any other State.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; the people of Pennsylvania are just as honorable as the people of any other State. But that is no excuse for letting the Power Trust plunder them, as is now being done. The people of Pennsylvania are paying, on an average, five times as much per kilowatt-hour for electric lights and power as the people of northeastern Mississippi are paying under the T. V. A. rates.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN. Reserving the right to object, upon what subject?

Mr. SHORT. I desire to address the House on the state of the Union and on the general subject of preserving the situation in general.

Mr. COCHRAN. I am not going to object.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, the Appropriations Committee is ready now to report to the House the annual appropriation bill for the Post Office and Treasury Departments. We have been very liberal up to the present time in allowing a great many speeches, and some of them have been as long as 30 minutes. The patience of the House is becoming strained almost to the breaking point with these speeches, especially the long ones.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Not for the present. I am only announcing and following the course that has been followed by the majority leaders on both that side of the House and this side of the House for many years objecting to long speeches when appropriation bills are before the House and requiring speeches of more than 5 minutes to come in under general debate. Moreover, I feel that gentlemen desiring to make extended speeches should consult the members in charge of the bill on both sides of the aisle and arrange as to the time when they can be recognized for that purpose.

In the consideration of the large annual appropriation bills we are going to have plenty of time for general debate. There is no intention to cut off Members from making speeches, provided they make them during general debate on some 1 of these 10 appropriation bills that are coming along. All Members have such an enormous amount of mail and so much department work heaped up on them that they cannot stay on the floor and listen to long-winded speeches. [Applause.] There is no disposition to be discourteous. But for the purpose of preserving orderly conduct and expediting business on the floor of the House, we must require these long speeches to be delivered under general debate.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I appreciate the fact that it has been the custom of the House, when we have had appropriation bills pending, to have general debate at that time, but as I understand from the gentleman's former statement this afternoon he proposes to adjourn the House immediately and bring no other business before the House. Under such circumstances, when there is no business before the House, I do not know that it has ever been the policy on this side to cut off any Member who desired a few minutes to make a statement.

Mr. SHORT. I will make it 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I object.

Mr. SNELL. Very well, remember that.

Mr. SHORT. I will remember it as long as I am here.

UNITED STATES LEGATION, HELSINGFORS, FINLAND

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with regard to a bill introduced for an appropriation for the erection of a Legation building at Helsingfors, Finland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill and asking for an appropriation of money for the building of a United States Legation at Helsingfors, Finland, for two principal reasons:

First, because the United States does not have at the present time a legation home in Finland. I am told that the American Minister to Finland has, today, to maintain his official headquarters in Helsingfors on the top floor of a department store. More than once objection has been voiced that the housing facilities in Helsingfors were not only hopelessly inadequate and dissatisfactory but that this very condition was something of a disgrace to the United States. There should be complete agreement with the point that it does not fit well with the dignity, power, and respect of the United States, for that Nation to maintain its representatives abroad in establishments that are devoid of any semblance of comfort and convenience. No one will argue that our foreign representatives should make a show of ostentation or that they should try to impress unduly, or to overawe the nations to which they are accredited, but we will agree that the United States not only should, but must maintain itself with dignity and propriety in all matters. I have information to the effect that at present at least seven nations own their legations in Finland, among them Great Britain, Italy, Russia, Germany, Norway, and Sweden. Surely the United States wishes to maintain itself with the same respect as these.

I have said that our present facilities are not in keeping with the dignity of the United States. More than this, I believe it is something of a mark of disrespect toward Finland for our Nation to maintain its diplomats to Finland in quarters such as we now have. Our representatives to Finland, their deportment, and their establishments are to the people and Government of Finland indicative of the attitude of the United States toward that people and Government.

If we house our diplomats shabbily, it is more difficult than it should be for our representatives to continue the friendly feelings and cooperative spirit that now exist between Finland and the United States.

Relations between the United States and Finland are friendly and cooperative, and this raises the second principal point of my argument.

Of all the nations who were indebted to the United States as a result of conditions growing out of the late war, only one—Finland—has met her payments with promptness and regularity. On May 1, 1923, a funding agreement was negotiated between the United States and Finland setting Finland's indebtedness to the United States at $9,000,000. This was to be paid off in annual installments. It was the same kind of an arrangement worked out with Great Britain and other European countries who were indebted to us, and last December Finland was the only nation to meet the installment on her debt.

This speaks emphatically as to the honor, integrity, and friendship of the nation of Finland. Finland is a small country, so far as territory goes, but the nation is one of the largest in the world when we consider the matter of respect for international obligations.

In spite of all the adversities of the post-war period, and Finland has suffered as have the other nations of the world, she has consistently kept faith with the United States and lived up to her agreement with our Nation. We in the United States appreciate these facts and the building of a respectable legation at Helsingfors would be a tangible expression of good will to a sister republic.

The people of Finland would appreciate this friendly act, for after all it is the people of Finland who have made the payment of her debts possible. Undoubtedly the people of Finland have submitted to heavy taxation and to privation in order that their nation might maintain its integrity inviolate. The people of Finland have the qualities of loyalty, honesty, and consistency of purpose necessary to achieve this end. These qualities are the very essence of good citizenship.

I speak of the Finnish people from a very real acquaintance with them. In the district that I have the honor to represent a large proportion of the population are of this nationality. Finland has sent many of her sons and daughters to the United States. They have made their homes in North Dakota and in Minnesota, where they have become industrious, intelligent, and honest farmers. As I have said, they have come to Michigan, where they have helped to convert wilderness into civilization. They have worked in mines, they have cleared the land of its forests, and farmed. Always they have been pioneers in the true spirit of the American. They have been loyal citizens to our Nation.

Naturally they still remember their homeland. They rejoice at the friendly relations that exist between their new nation and the nation which once they called home. It would be a mark of respect for these people of Finnish nationality in our country as well as a mark of respect for the people and Government of Finland to build a legation to house our diplomats and consular officials at Helsingfors.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MANSFIELD, indefinitely, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce to the members of the majority that there will be a caucus at 4 o'clock today in this Chamber.

With this announcement, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. FISH and Mr. SHORT rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 280, nays, 108, not voting 42, as follows:

ADJOURNMENT

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, January 23, 1935, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

160. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to amend the War Department appropriation act relative to the operation of motor-propelled vehicles; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

161. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to amend section 47c, National Defense Act, as amended, relating to military training required to entitle members of the Reserve Officers' Training Corps to receive commutation of subsistence; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

162. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to provide further for the maintenance of United States Soldiers' Home; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. O'CONNOR: Committee on Rules. House Resolution 65. Resolution for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 117. A resolution making appropriations for relief purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 13). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ARNOLD: Committee on Appropriations. H. R. 4442. A bill making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 14.) Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GAMBRILL: A bill (H. R. 4440) to provide medical services after retirement on annuity to former employees of the United States disabled by injuries sustained in the performance of their duties; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. IGLESIAS: A bill (H. R. 4441) to amend section 38 of the act of March 2, 1917, entitled "An act to provide a civil government for Puerto Rico, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

By Mr. ARNOLD: A bill (H. R. 4442) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BULWINKLE: A bill (H. R. 4443) to amend section 5e, chapter 8, act of January 22, 1932, as amended; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. FADDIS: A bill (H. R. 4444) to create the Reserve Division of the War Department, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HILDEBRANDT: A bill (H. R. 4445) to provide for the appointment and promotion of substitute postal employees, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a bill (H. R. 4446) granting to the State of South Dakota for institutional purposes the property known and designated as the "Canton Asylum", Canton, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. KNUTE HILL: A bill (H. R. 4447) to exempt the mining claims of disabled veterans from the requirements that labor be performed or improvements made on them; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. HOOK: A bill (H. R. 4448) to provide funds for acquisition of a site, erection of buildings and the furnishings thereof, for the use of the diplomatic and consular establishments of the United States at Helsingfors, Finland; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. LEMKE: A bill (H. R. 4449) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCORMACK: A bill (H. R. 4450) to provide for the purchase of the pneumatic mail-tube systems in New York and Boston; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H. R. 4451) to amend section 1044 of the Revised Statutes to provide a 10-year period of limitations on prosecutions for offenses involving frauds against the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, a bill (H. R. 4452) to regulate the detailing of Army officers to duty in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 4453) to prohibit Army officers from rendering outside services for pay or reward in connection with Government contracts, property or business relations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 4454) to amend the Articles of War to provide a 10-year period of limitations on prosecutions by court martial for offenses involving frauds against the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 4455) to repeal provisions of law authorizing the exchange of Army airplanes and aerial material; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 4456) to provide that the property and accounts covered by property returns of officers of the Government shall be open to inspection by the Comptroller General, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

By Mr. MITCHELL of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 4457) to assure to persons within the jurisdiction of every State the equal protection of the laws, and to punish the crime of lynching; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In accordance with the provisions of title 20, chapter 3, section 43, United States Code, the Chair appoints the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] a Regent of the Smithsonian Institution, to fill the vacancy caused by the expiration of the term of service of Hon. David A. Reed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Assembly Joint Resolution 1, relative to memorializing Congress to enact proposed legislation directing immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates of sailors and soldiers of the World War

Whereas a period of depression exists in the State of California, throughout the United States, and the world; and

Whereas the immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates of the sailors and soldiers of the World War, some of whom are in dire need owing to the present economic conditions, will alleviate suffering and increase tremendously the purchasing power of millions of the consuming public, distributed uniformly throughout the Nation, and lighten immeasurably the burden which States, counties, and cities are now required to carry for relief; and

Whereas the payment of such certificates will not create any additional debt, but will discharge and retire an acknowledged contract obligation of the Government; and

Whereas the Government of the United States is now definitely committed to a policy of spending large sums of money for the purposes of hastening recovery from the present economic crisis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California most respectfully urges and petitions the President and the Congress of the United States to enact legislation for the immediate payment, at face value, of the adjusted-service certificates; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that such Senators and Members from California be urged to support such legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by a money institute, representing three cooperating churches of the community, held in Davison, Mich., under the auspices of the American Science Foundation, favoring enactment of legislation taking away from banks now organized and to be hereafter organized for private profit the privilege of issuing money, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate the memorial of Clair Pahl and several other members of the National Union for Social Justice, of Edgerton, Ohio, remonstrating against the ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the United Irish Societies, an organization composed of officers of Irish Societies of Brooklyn and Long Island, N. Y., opposing the ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the Twentieth Kansas Infantry Association, assembled at Topeka, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation providing for the deportation of aliens as a means of alleviating the unemployment situation, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. COPELAND presented a resolution adopted by members of the Caledonia-Mumford Lions Club, of Caledonia, N. Y., favoring prompt action by the Government to prevent the further spread of the Dutch elm disease as being a menace to the American elm, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution of the Manufacturers Association, of Syracuse, N. Y., opposing the enactment of legislation providing a 6-hour day and a 5-day week for labor, with the same rate of pay per week as now obtains, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Institute of Arts and Letters, New York City, N. Y., favoring the prompt ratification of the pending copyright convention, so as to admit American producers of copyrightable property to the security of all the countries represented in the Berne Union, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by A. A. Harris Council, No. 66, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Amagansett, N. Y., favoring enactment of legislation requiring aliens seeking asylum in the United States to declare their intention of becoming citizens and to register with the proper Government official every 6 months, and at the end of 5 years and 6 months, if they have failed to become citizens, to be deported, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Rochester (N. Y.) Division, No. 149, Order of Benefit Association of Railway Employees, favoring enactment of legislation to modify the fourth section of the Interstate Commerce Act so as to permit the railroads to compete with unregulated forms of transportation, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a letter from Frank Cooper, judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of New York, Albany, N. Y., relative to and favoring the ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a newspaper article from the Block papers of Monday, January 21, 1935, entitled "Join the World Court—Another Experiment", opposing the ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 1175) to extend the functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for 2 years; to authorize loans or renewals or extensions to mature not later than January 31, 1945; to empower the Corporation to buy railroad obligations, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in aid of railroad reorganization and in certain other circumstances; to empower the Corporation (a) to aid the mortgage situation generally by the purchase of nonassessable stock in mortgage-loan companies and similar financial institutions, and to authorize the sale of stock, capital notes, or debentures purchased by the Corporation; and (b) to purchase any portion of the assets of closed banks under certain conditions; to increase the authorized investments in preferred stock and capital notes of insurance companies, or loans thereon, from $50,000,000 to $75,000,000; to continue the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Export-Import Banks of Washington, D. I ask consent to have the bill, together with a brief digest of its provisions, printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1384) to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, and to amend the Farm Credit Act of 1933, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to amend the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, and to amend the Farm Credit Act of 1933, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Farm Credit Act of 1935."

SEC. 2. (a) Section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1016), is further amended by striking out of the third sentence the following: "and made for the purpose of reducing and refinancing an existing mortgage."

(b) Such section 32, as amended, is further amended by striking out the fifth sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Loans may be made under this section for any of the purposes for which Federal land banks are authorized by law to make loans, and for the following additional purpose, and none other: Refinancing, either in connection with proceedings under chapter 8 of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, as amended, or otherwise, any indebtedness, secured or unsecured, of the farmer, or which is secured by a lien on all or any part of the farm property accepted as security for the loan."

(c) Such section 32, as amended, is further amended by striking out the seventh sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "As used in this section, the term 'farmer' means any individual who is at the time, or shortly to become, bona fide engaged in farming operations, either personally or through an agent or tenant, or the principal part of whose income is derived from farming operations, and includes a personal representative of a deceased farmer."

(d) Such section 32, as amended, is further amended by striking out the eighth and ninth sentences and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Until February 1, 1940, the Land Bank Commissioner shall, in his name, make loans under this section on behalf of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, either in cash or in bonds of the Corporation at his election, or, at the option of the borrower, in consolidated farm-loan bonds; but no such loans shall be made by him after February 1, 1940, except for the purpose of refinancing loans previously made by him under this section. As much as may be necessary of the assets of the Corporation, including the bonds (and proceeds thereof) issued under section 4 of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act, may be used for the purposes of this section."

(e) Such section 32, as amended, is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following: "Any Federal land bank, when duly authorized by the Land Bank Commissioner and the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, shall have the power to execute any instrument relating to any mortgage taken to secure a loan made or to be made under this section, or relating to any property included in any such mortgage, or relating to any property acquired by the Land Bank Commissioner and/or the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation. Any such instrument heretofore or hereafter executed on behalf of the Land Bank Commissioner and/or the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation by a Federal land bank, through its duly authorized officers, shall be conclusively presumed to have been duly authorized by the Land Bank Commissioner and the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation."

SEC. 3. The third sentence of paragraph "Twelfth" of section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 771), is amended by striking out that portion of the sentence following the semicolon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "but in any case in which the Land Bank Commissioner finds that the amount of interest payable by such bank during any quarter subsequent to December 31, 1934, has been reduced by reason of the refinancing of bonds subsequent to June 30, 1934, the amount of the reduction so found shall be deducted from the amount payable to such bank for such quarter under this paragraph."

SEC. 4. The fourth sentence of section 24 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 913), is further amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: "Provided, That the declaration and payment of any such dividend shall be subject to the approval of the Land Bank Commissioner."

SEC. 5. (a) Paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of section 202 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1031), is further amended by striking out that portion of the paragraph which follows the second semicolon and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "and to discount for, or purchase from, any production credit association or bank for cooperatives organized under the Farm Credit Act of 1933, or any production credit association in which a production credit corporation organized under such act holds stock, with its endorsement, any note, draft, bill of exchange, debenture, or other such obligation presented by such association or bank, and to make loans and advances direct to any such association or bank secured by such collateral as may be approved by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration."

(b) Paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of such section 202, as amended, is further amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "at such rates of commission as may be approved by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration."

(c) Subsection (d) of such section 202, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1034), is hereby repealed.

SEC. 6. (a) Subsection (a) of section 203 of the Federal Farm Loan Act (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 1041), is amended by striking out the proviso and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That the aggregate amount of the outstanding debentures and similar obligations issued individually by any Federal intermediate credit bank, together with the amount of outstanding consolidated debentures issued for its benefit and account, shall not exceed 10 times the surplus and paid-in capital of such bank."

(b) Such section 203 (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 1041–1043) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(d) Whenever it shall appear desirable to issue consolidated debentures of the 12 Federal intermediate credit banks and to sell them through a common selling agency, and the Federal intermediate credit banks shall, by resolutions, consent to the same, the banks may issue and sell said debentures subject to the provisions of this section and the provisions of section 21 of title I of this act, insofar as applicable. As used in this act, the term 'debentures' includes such consolidated debentures."

"(e) All debentures issued by Federal intermediate credit banks shall be lawful investments and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or of any officer or officers thereof."

SEC. 7. Subsection (a) of section 204 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1051), is further amended to read as follows:

"(a) Any Federal intermediate credit bank may, with the approval of the Intermediate Credit Commissioner, from time to time establish rates of discount and interest which, except with the approval of the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, shall not exceed by more than 1 percent per annum the rate borne by the last preceding issue of debentures which it issued or in which it participated. Any Federal intermediate credit bank may be required by the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration to acquire, upon such terms as he may approve, loans and/or discounts of any other Federal intermediate credit bank."

SEC. 8. Section 208 of the Federal Farm Loan Act (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 1091–1094) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) The executive departments, boards, commissions, and independent establishments of the Government, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Federal Reserve banks are severally authorized, under such conditions as they may prescribe, to make available to any Federal intermediate credit bank, in confidence, upon the request of the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, such reports, records, or other information as they may have available relating to the condition of any institution to which a Federal intermediate credit bank has made, or contemplates making, loans, or which it is using, or contemplates using, as a custodian of securities or other credit instruments or as a depositary."

SEC. 9. Paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of section 7 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1141e), is further amended to read as follows:

"(2) The construction or acquisition by purchase or lease, or refinancing the cost of such construction or acquisition, of physical facilities."

SEC. 10. Paragraph (1) of subsection (c) of section 7 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1141e), is further amended to read as follows:

"(1) No loan shall be made in an amount in excess of 60 percent of the appraised value of the security therefor."

SEC. 11. Subsection (a) of section 8 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1141f), is further amended to read as follows:

"(a) Loans to any cooperative association shall bear such rates of interest as the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration shall from time to time determine to be necessary for the needs of the lending agencies and shall by regulation prescribe (but in no case shall the rate of interest exceed 6 percent per annum on the unpaid principal): Provided, however, That the rate of interest on any loan made under the provisions of section 7 (a) (1) hereof, other than upon the security of commodities, shall conform as nearly as may be practicable to a rate of 1 percent in excess of the prevailing interest rate paid by production credit associations to the Federal intermediate credit bank of the land-bank district in which the principal business office of the borrower is located; and that the rate of interest on any loan made under the provisions of section 7 (a) (2) hereof shall conform as nearly as may be practicable to the prevailing rate on mortgage loans made to members of national farm-loan associations."

SEC. 12. Subsection (a) of section 15 of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1141j), is further amended to read as follows:

"(a) As used in this act, the term 'cooperative association' means any association in which farmers act together in processing, preparing for market, handling, and/or marketing the farm products of persons so engaged, and also means any association in which farmers act together in purchasing, testing, grading, processing, distributing and/or furnishing farm supplies and/or farm business services: Provided, however, That such associations are operated for the mutual benefit of the members thereof as such producers or purchasers and conform to one or both of the following requirements:

"First. That no member of the association is allowed more than one vote because of the amount of stock or membership capital he may own therein; and

"Second. That the association does not pay dividends on stock or membership capital in excess of 8 percent per annum.

"And in any case to the following:

"Third. That the association shall not deal in farm products, farm supplies, and farm business services with or for nonmembers in an amount greater in value than the total amount of such business transacted by it with or for members. All business transacted by any cooperative association for or on behalf of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof shall be disregarded in determining the volume of member and nonmember business transacted by such association."

SEC. 13. Section 34 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 34. Subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the chairman of its board of directors, the central bank is authorized: (a) To make loans to cooperative associations, as defined in the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, for any of the purposes and subject to the conditions and limitations set forth in such act, as amended; (b) to make loans (by way of discount or otherwise) to banks for cooperatives organized under section 2 of this act; (c) to buy from, and sell to, any such bank or any Federal intermediate credit bank any note, draft, bill of exchange, debenture, or other obligation; and (d) to borrow from, and discount or rediscount paper with, any and all such banks."

SEC. 14. Section 41 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1134c) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 41. Subject to such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Governor, the banks for cooperatives are authorized: (a) To make loans to cooperative associations as defined in the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended, for any of the purposes and subject to the conditions and limitations set forth in such act, as amended; (b) to make loans (by way of discount or otherwise) to any bank organized under this act; (c) to buy from, and sell to, any such bank or any Federal intermediate credit bank any note, draft, bill of exchange, debenture, or other obligation; and (d) to borrow from, and discount or rediscount paper with, any and all such banks."

SEC. 15. (a) The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 35 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1134k) is amended by striking out the period at the end and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "except that, in connection with any loan made on the security of commodities, the borrower shall be required to own, at the time the loan is made, only such amount of stock as may be prescribed by rules and regulations of the Governor."

(b) Subsection (a) of such section 35 is further amended by striking out the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Upon discharge of the loan, stock held by the borrowing association may be, and upon the concurrent or subsequent request of the borrowing association shall be, retired and canceled, and the association shall be paid therefor an amount equal to the amount paid for such stock or loaned to subscriber therefor, as the case may be, minus the pro rata impairment, if any, of capital and guaranty fund of the central bank, as determined by the chairman of the board of the central bank."

(c) Such section 35 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) In any case where the debt of a borrower to the central bank is in default, the bank may, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Governor, retire and cancel all or a part of the stock of the defaulting borrower at the fair book value thereof (not exceeding par), in total or partial liquidation of the debt, as the case may be."

SEC. 16. Section 66 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 12, sec. 1138f) is amended by inserting after the word "paid" in the first sentence thereof the following: "by any such bank, corporation, or association."

SEC. 17. (a) The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 30 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 is amended by striking out the words "2 years" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "4 years."

(b) The fourth sentence of subsection (b) of such section 30 is amended:

(1) By striking out the words "occurring more than 60 days after the date of enactment of this act"; and

(2) By striking out the words "a period of 2 years from the date of enactment of this act" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "a period of 2 years from the date of the enactment of the Farm Credit Act of 1935."

SEC. 18. (a) The first sentence of subsection (a) of section 31 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 is amended by striking out the words "for 2 years from the date of the enactment of this act" and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and the following: "until May 13, 1937."

(b) Subsection (b) of such section 31 is amended by striking out the words "such 2-year period" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the period of postponement."

SEC. 19. (a) If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

(b) The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The accompanying digest of Senate bill 1384 was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DIGEST OF AMENDMENTS CONTAINED IN PROPOSED FARM CREDIT ACT OF 1935

Section 1: Provides short title for the act.

Section 2: Amends section 32 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act.

Paragraph (a), by eliminating the phrase "and made for the purpose of reducing and refinancing an existing mortgage", will authorize the Commissioner to make loans with maturities exceeding 13 years, where secured wholly by first or second liens on real property.

Paragraph (b) will authorize the Land Bank Commissioner to make loans for the purpose of financing the purchase of farm property, and the construction, alteration, etc., of farm buildings and other improvements.

Paragraph (c) will make the definition of the term "farmer" in the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933 identical with the definition of that term in the Federal Farm Loan Act.

Paragraph (d) has three purposes: (1) To extend until February 1, 1940, the time within which loans can be made by the Land Bank Commissioner; (2) to remove the present $600,000,000 limitation on the amount of bonds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation which may be used in making such loans; and (3) to permit such loans to be made, at the option of the borrower, in consolidated farm-loan bonds.

Paragraph (e) will facilitate execution, by the Federal land banks, of releases and similar instruments affecting Land Bank Commissioner mortgages.

Section 3: Amends section 12 of the Federal Farm Loan Act.

Will reduce the amount of interest reimbursement payments which the Secretary of the Treasury is directed by law to make to each Federal land bank, by the amount of savings in interest payable by the bank for any quarter after December 31, 1934, resulting through the refunding of outstanding bonds accomplished subsequent to June 30, 1934.

Section 4: Amends section 24 of the Federal Farm Loan Act.

Will subject the payment of dividends by national farm-loan associations to the approval of the Land Bank Commissioner.

Section 5: Amends section 202 of the Federal Farm Loan Act.

Paragraph (a) will enlarge the authority of the Federal intermediate credit banks to include the discounting of paper for banks for cooperatives and the making of loans to such banks.

Paragraph (b) will authorize Federal intermediate credit banks to charge commissions for accepting drafts and bills of exchange.

Paragraph (c) will repeal subsection (d) of section 202, substituted provisions being embodied in section 7 of this bill.

Section 6: Amends section 203 of the Federal Farm Loan Act.

Paragraphs (a) and (b) will authorize the issuance of consolidated debentures by the Federal intermediate credit banks, and will make all Federal intermediate credit bank debentures legally acceptable as lawful investments and security for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds held under the authority or control of officers of the United States.

Section 7: Amends section 204 of the Federal Farm Loan Act.

Provides that rates of discount and interest charged by any Federal intermediate credit bank shall be subject to approval by the Intermediate Credit Commissioner; and that, except with the approval of the Governor, the rates shall not exceed by more than 1 percent per annum the rate borne by the last preceding issue of debentures which the bank issued or in which it participated.

Section 8: Amends section 208 of the Federal Farm Loan Act.

Will authorize various Government departments, boards, commissions, independent establishments, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the Federal Reserve Board, and the Federal Reserve banks, upon request of the Governor, to furnish certain confidential information to any Federal intermediate credit bank.

Section 9: Amends section 7 of the Agricultural Marketing Act.

Will broaden the present authority of the Governor and the banks for cooperatives, with respect to the making of physical-facility loans to eligible farmers' cooperative associations, to include loans for physical facilities for all cooperative purposes.

Section 10: Amends section 7 of the Agricultural Marketing Act.

Will permit any physical-facility loan to be made in an amount not exceeding 60 percent of the appraised value of the security.

Section 11: Amends section 8 of the Agricultural Marketing Act.

Will enable the Governor to permit loans on the security of commodities to be made at rates of interest lower than 1 percent in excess of the discount rate of the Federal intermediate credit banks.

Section 12: Amends section 15 of the Agricultural Marketing Act.

Will clarify the definition of cooperative associations eligible to borrow from the Governor and from the banks for cooperatives; will broaden such definition to include cooperative associations in which farmers act together in furnishing farm business services; and will enable the Government and governmental agencies to use the facilities of large cooperative purchasing and marketing associations without jeopardizing their status under the Capper-Volstead Act and the Agricultural Marketing Act.

Sections 13 and 14: Amend sections 34 and 41 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933.

Will authorize each bank for cooperatives to borrow from and to buy, sell, or discount paper with any Federal intermediate credit bank and other banks for cooperatives.

Section 15: Amends sections 35 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933.

Paragraph (a) will authorize the Governor to except from the stock-ownership requirements of section 35 (a) borrowers from the banks for cooperatives whose loans are secured by commodities.

Paragraph (b) will authorize each bank for cooperatives to permit the retention of stock in the bank by borrowers who have discharged their loans.

Paragraph (c) will give each bank for cooperatives the authority to realize, in partial or total liquidation of indebtedness, upon the stock of such bank held by defaulting borrowers.

Section 16: Amends section 66 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933.

Will make the present limitation on compensation which may be received by any officer or employee of a production credit corporation or association or bank for cooperatives, applicable only to the compensation paid by him by such institution, and thus will permit any such institution to participate in the payment of a salary in excess of $10,000 per annum to the general agent, who serves as a coordinating officer and is the joint employee of the four major district institutions.

Will extend until May 12, 1937, the time within which the land bank commissioner may make loans to joint-stock land banks for their orderly liquidation; will provide that no such loan shall be made unless the bank agrees that the required reduction to 5 percent in the rate of interest to be paid by its borrowers shall be effective on the next regular installment dates; and will provide that the required forbearance from foreclosure of mortgages for default in the payment of interest or principal shall extend for a period of 2 years from the effective date of this amendment.

Will extend for 2 years the period within which the land bank commissioner may make loans to any joint-stock land bank for the purpose of securing the postponement of the foreclosure of first mortgages during that period, except with the specific approval of the commissioner, and except in cases where the property covered by the mortgage is abandoned.

Section 19:

Contains the usual constitutional saving clause, and expressly reserves to Congress the right to alter, amend, or repeal the act.

WITHDRAWAL OF RECOGNITION OF THE GOVERNMENT OF SOVIET RUSSIA

Mr. BARBOUR submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States that the diplomatic recognition by the Government of the United States of America of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics should be withdrawn.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR LONG

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Senator HUEY P. LONG, of Louisiana, over the network of the National Broadcasting Co., of Washington, D. C., on January 19 last.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OUR GROWING CALAMITY

Ladies and gentlemen, the only means by which any practical relief may be given to the people is in taking the money with which to give such relief from the big fortunes at the top. The common people haven't anything worth having; and when you put a tax that falls on them for the purpose of unemployment relief or for old-age pensions, or for anything else, you are giving nobody any relief, because you are taxing the same people who have nothing, on the pretense that you are going to give it back to them. And as a matter of fact, it all never does get back, but much of it would remain in the hands of these Washington bureaucrats and politicians.

Now, we have been clamoring for a number of relief measures. Among them was the old-age pension. We did not propose any unreasonably high old-age pension as some other plans have suggested, but we did propose that every person who reached the age of 60 should receive something around from $30 to $40 per month. We excluded from the list all people who owned $10,000 worth of property or who earned as much as $1,000 per year.

Now, along comes Mr. Roosevelt and says that he is for the old-age pension of $30 a month, but he says that it shall be paid by the States. And he says up until January 1, 1940, this $30 a month may be paid by the States to those who are over 70 years of age and after that time to those who are 65 years of age. Then he says that before they can get the $30 a month that the State government has got to put up one-half of the $30, and then it shall be paid only to those who are needy. And then he says that in order to get the money for the part the Federal Government is going to put up, that they will put a tax on all payrolls, so that the money would be taken from the very source and class to whom it is intended it would be paid.

What the Roosevelt pronouncement for old-age pensions means is that he would scuttle it inside and out. In other words, he will proceed to show how unreasonable, how impossible an old-age pension system can be, and how much harm can be done by trying to bring it about.

His plan contemplates that the Federal Government will contribute $125,000,000 for old-age pensions throughout the United States. That is not a drop in the bucket. It will take three and a half billion dollars to pay an old-age pension to all people who are 60 years of age; and unless the United States Government puts up all of the three and one-half billion dollars, you will not have any old age pension system that is worth anything.

Now, the only way you can get three and one-half billion dollars is by taxing the billionaires and multimillionaires, and nobody else, because if you tax the poor wage earner, who is barely making a living now, you will do more harm than good in trying to build up an old-age pension system. All the worthy movements that have been advocated throughout the United States are always praised by Mr. Roosevelt, who prescribes, in order to carry them into effect, a remedy that means you try to pull yourself up by your own bootstraps.

He admits that most of the people of America are impoverished because the rich people have all the money. He says they ought not allow them to have it all, but in the next breath he gives out a statement that the big rich must not be taxed very much, and that is as far as we ever get with him.

He rode into the President's office on the platform of redistributing wealth. He has done no such thing and has made no effort to do any such thing since he has been there. There is only one relief that can come to the American people that is of any value whatever, and that is to redistribute wealth by limiting the size of the big men's fortunes and guaranteeing that, beginning at the bottom, every family will have a living and the comforts of life. We can pass laws today providing for education, for old-age pensions, for unemployment insurance, for doles, public buildings, and anything else that we could think of, and still none of them would be worth anything unless we provided the money for them. And the money cannot be provided for them without these things doing twice as much harm as they do good unless that money is scraped off the big piles at the top and spread among the people at the bottom, who have nothing.

Any man with a thimbleful of sense who would be trying to help the poor people today by taxing the poor people so as to give the money back to them, ought to be bored for the hollow horn. Now, Mr. Roosevelt has better sense than that, but he is faced with a proposition. He has made the promise to the people that he will tear down these big fortunes by putting some reasonable limit on them, and he has further promised to build up the little man from the bottom. But he feels he doesn't dare keep that promise; he doesn't dare to keep that promise, and so, what is he doing? He makes every kind of move showing he is for this and for that; that he wants to appropriate a little money—so much for this and so much for that—but when you wind up, you find what he actually does is, that if there is any tax that can be levied on the poor people to give these things back to the poor people, that then he prescribes that kind of cure that never has cured or will cure.

The big interests realize Roosevelt's plan would not cost them anything, which is the same as saying it will be no relief to the poor. Here is the proof of that admission from the financial page of the New York Times of January 18, 1935:

"The action of the stock markets yesterday indicated that Wall Street was not alarmed by the President's message to Congress on social-security legislation. The financial community had been hopeful that the plan would not be so ambitious as to retard recovery. By its freedom from liquidation, when the message appeared on the news tickers, the market indicated that Wall Street did not feel that the plan would increase taxation unduly, since it would be largely self-sustaining."

What Wall Street is saying by this dispatch is that the big men of Wall Street were a little bit apprehensive for fear Roosevelt would provide some relief or social legislation that would cost them something, but they are glad to see whatever he does will be self-sustaining. That is, the poor people who get relief will pay for it. In other words, the poor people will be allowed to help the poor people, a poor wage-earner will be allowed to help his aged father or mother and take away a little more from his wife and children. "Ain't" that grand? Yet Wall Street says they are much pleased with it because it means they will not be touched for the necessary money to cure the ills of our people.

Now, our conditions today are much more deplorable than they were in Hoover's depression. The Roosevelt depression is just a double dose of the Hoover depression. In 1929 we started out with the public debt under Hoover of $16,931,000,000, and we wound up under Hoover with his depression showing a public debt of $19,487,000,000, or an increase of two and a half billion dollars, practically all of which increase under Hoover, however, was covered by loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, for which it had adequate security and collateral, and so, in fact, there was scarcely any such thing as an increase in the public debt under Hoover as compared to Roosevelt.

So we started in, in 1933, with the Roosevelt depression, starting from the Hoover national debt figure of $19,487,000,000. Now, when we got to December 31, 1934, the national deficit had been raised by the Roosevelt depression to $28,478,000,000, or an increase of approximately $9,000,000,000, and most of it is just that much more debt, good and simple.

Now, how much good has been done with it? Has it cured unemployment? Get ready to laugh, if crying will do it. I will give you some unemployment figures that will shed the light as it ought to be. Here they are as they exist today:

UNEMPLOYMENT FIGURES

Half the people in America are unemployed today.

|---|---|
| Industrial unemployment: | |
| American Federation of Labor—1934—November | 10,659,000 |
| Farm unemployment: | |
| Figure farm unemployment on the basis that 1929 was a normal year. That year the farm population was 30,257,000 and earned $11,941,000,000, or $394 to every farm person—that much in Hoover's first depression year. In 1933 the farm population increased by 2½ million to 32,509,000 persons who earned for the whole year $6,256,000,000 less $271,000,000 given by the Government, or the sum of $184 to the person, or 46 percent as much per farm person as under Hoover's first depression year. So the only thing that we can say is that the farm labor of 1933, as compared to the farm labor of 1929, was 54 percent unemployed so far as earnings go, and that is all that counts in unemployment figures. Figuring that 40 percent of the farm population does not work, that leaves us to figures that 19,620,000 persons are normally employed on the farm, and if we take 54 percent of them as unemployed, which they are on the basis of 1929 earnings compared to 1933 earnings, we add to the unemployed list farm laborers numbering | 10,594,800 |
| Making the unemployed total | 21,253,000 |

Knowing that one employed person may be the breadwinner of anywhere from 1½ to 5 persons, this figure of 21,253,000 unemployed persons presents a total unemployment picture of nearly half the American people. It is about equally balanced, one-half unemployed to industry and one-half to agriculture. This does not even include the professional man as unemployed. The lawyer, doctor, accountant, architect, dentist, grocer, baker, and candlestickmaker, who cannot make a living because the people have nothing to spend with them, are not even listed as unemployed, though if the proper thing were done they would increase the list another 2,000,000,000 unemployed.

The figure of 10,659,000 unemployed in the industrial class would be materially increased if we included as a percentage of unemployment those working part time, some down to as low as 1 day per week.

Note also that even those who are employed earn a wage which is 43 percent below a fair standard of living. (See American Federation of Labor bulletin of Jan. 12, 1935.)

So you see from the Government's own figures that the estimate of one-half of all our people as unemployed does not near tell the whole story.

It would be very interesting if you would just take a look to see how well the people who are employed are getting along. I have here the monthly survey of business of the American Federation of Labor dated January 12, 1935. It says this:

"Comparing 1934 with 1933, according to the records, we have—

"1. Average yearly wage: The worker's average yearly wage has increased 6.7 percent in these industries, while the price of food rose 11.3 percent and prices of clothing and house furnishings rose 15.3 percent. Clearly, the average employed worker's standard of living was lower in 1934 than 1933, although his average yearly income rose from $1,029 to $1,099 in 1934.

"2. The average worker's income of nearly $1,099 in 1934 is below the minimum necessary to support a family of five in health and decency by $813, or 43 percent."

In other words, according to these accredited figures, those so fortunate as to be employed are living 43 percent below a reasonable standard of living at the end of the year 1934 under Roosevelt's depression.

So we sum up our condition:

We compare the Roosevelt depression with the Hoover depression and we find the Roosevelt depression debt is $9,000,000,000 more than the Hoover depression debt; the unemployment under Roosevelt has eclipsed everything Hoover ever heard about, and approximates more than one-half the whole population of America; the wage earner of today is living further below the standard of a fair living than ever before in the history of the country; the wealth of the country is more in the hands of the big interests and the big men than it has ever been, and the common people and masses in general have less than they ever had; two-thirds of all of the money in the banks is owned by one-one hundred and fiftieth of the people, according to the figures furnished by the Government bureau itself; there are 5,000,000 more people on the dole than there were last year, and another 5,000,000 people trying to get on the dole.

We have the same promises from Mr. Roosevelt now that we had before he was elected, with the exception he says you must not pass any such law as will put them into effect in actual fact.

The only difference in Roosevelt before election and now is that Roosevelt now says he is still for them, but that you must not do anything about them. The only difference between Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hoover is that things are much worse in every degree under Mr. Roosevelt than ever under Mr. Hoover; and you could tell what Mr. Hoover meant to do, or rather meant not to do, whereas understanding what Mr. Roosevelt means to do compared to what he does do is difficult.

There is only one way to save our people; only one way to save America. How? Pull down wealth from the top and spread wealth at the bottom; free people of these debts they owe; God told just exactly how to do it all.

Many other countries have been in the shape that America is in now; many fell and vanished like Rome and Greece, but some cared for their people and were saved.

There was once a country in exactly the same shape as America is today. God's prophet was there and applied the laws as God had prescribed them. If you would just recognize that God is still alive, that His law still lives, America would not grope today. Here is the written record of that country that was in the same fix as America is today. Here is what they did under the command of God's prophet. Hear me, I read from the Bible, Nehemiah, chapter 5:

"And there was a great cry of the people and of their wives against their brethren the Jews.

"For there were that said, We, our sons, and our daughters, are many: therefore we take up corn for them, that we may eat, and live.'

"Some also there were that said, We have mortgaged our lands, vineyards, and houses, that we might buy corn, because of the dearth.

"There were also that said, We have borrowed money for the king's tribute, and that upon our lands and vineyards.

"Yet now our flesh is as the flesh of our brethren, our children as their children; and, lo, we bring into bondage our sons and our daughters to be servants, and some of our daughters are brought into bondage already: neither is it in our power to redeem them; for other men have our lands and vineyards.

"And I was very angry when I heard their cry and these words.

"Then I consulted with myself, and I rebuked the nobles, and the rulers, and said unto them, Ye exact usury, every one of his brother. And I set a great assembly against them.

"And I said unto them, We after our ability have redeemed our brethren the Jews, which were sold unto the heathen; and will ye even sell your brethren? or shall they be sold unto us? Then held they their peace, and found nothing to answer.

"Also, I said, it is not good that ye do: ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God because of the reproach of the heathen our enemies?

"I likewise, and my brethren, and my servants, might exact of them money and corn; I pray you, let us leave off this usury.

"Restore, I pray you, to them, even this day, their lands, their vineyards, their oliveyards, and their houses, also the hundredth part of the money, and of the corn, the wine, and the oil, that ye exact of them.

"Then said they, We will restore them, and will require nothing of them; so will we do as thou sayest. Then I called the priests, and took an oath of them, that they should do according to this promise.

"Also I shook my lap, and said, So God shake out every man from his house, and from his labor, that performeth not this promise, even thus be he shaken out, and emptied. And all the congregation said, Amen, and praised the Lord. And the people did according to this promise."

Hear me, people of America, God's laws live today. Keep them and none suffer; disregard them and we go the way of the missing. His word said that. Here is what He said:

"The profit of the earth is for all." Ecclesiastes: chapter 5, verse 9.

"And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof; it shall be a jubile unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family." Leviticus: chapter 25, verse 10.

"At the end of every 7 years thou shalt make a release. * * * Every creditor that lendeth ought unto his neighbor shall release it; he shall not exact it of his * * * brother; because it is called the Lord's release." Deuteronomy: Chapter 15, verses 1 and 2.

Maybe you do not believe the Bible; maybe you do not accept God as your Supreme Lawgiver. God help you if you do not; but if you do not, then all I ask of you is to believe the simple problems of arithmetic, the tables of addition, subtraction, multiplication, and division. If you believe them, you will know that we cannot tolerate this condition of a handful of people owning nearly all and all owning nearly nothing. In a land of plenty there is no need to starve unless we allow greed to starve us to please the vanity of someone else.

I can read you what Theodore Roosevelt, Daniel Webster, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, Ralph Waldo Emerson, all other great Americans said. Their beliefs might be stated in the following lines of Emerson:

"Give no bounties: make equal laws: secure life and prosperity and you need not give alms."

Or maybe these words of Theodore Roosevelt would be proof:

"We must pay equal attention to the distribution of prosperity. The only prosperity worth having is that which affects the mass of people."

It was the poet Horace who warned that Rome would fall in the days of Augustus Caesar. He expressed the line:

"Penniless and great plenty."

So are our American people today. Too much to eat, to wear, or to live in; too much, and yet we are penniless and starve.

Here are the words of Pope Pius in his encyclical letter of May 18, 1932, which I, a Baptist, caused to be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Hear these words:

"From greed arises mutual distrust that casts a blight on all human dealings; from greed arises hateful envy which makes a man consider the advantages of another as losses to himself; from greed arises narrow individualism which orders and subordinates everything to its own advantage without taking account of others, on the contrary, cruelly trampling under foot all rights of others. Hence the disorder and inequality from which arises the accumulation of the wealth of nations in the hands of a small group of individuals who manipulate the market of the world at their own caprice, to the immense harm of the masses, as we showed last year in our encyclical letter."

I call and ask you now to organize a share-our-wealth society in your community now. Don't delay. If you want to know more about it, write to me in Washington. If you want a copy of this speech, write to me for it. Help in our plan. What is it? I state it to you again:

We propose to limit the size of all big fortunes to not more than three to four million dollars and to throw the balance in the United States Treasury; we will impose taxes every year to keep down these fortunes and to also limit the amount which any one may earn to $1,000,000 per year, and to limit the amount any one can inherit to $1,000,000 in a lifetime, throwing all surpluses into the United States Treasury.

Then from the immense money thus acquired we will guarantee to every family a home and the comforts of a home, including such conveniences as automobile and radio; we will guarantee education to every child and youth through college and vocational training, based upon the ability of the student and not upon the ability of the child's parents to pay the costs; we would pay flat and outright to all people over 60 years of age, a pension sufficient for their life and comfort; we would shorten the hours of work to 30 hours per week, maybe less, and to 11 months per year, maybe less; and thus share our work at living wages and to those for whom we fail to find work we would pay insurance until we do find it; we would pay the soldiers' bonus and give a sufficient supply of money to carry on our work and business.

All this can be done with ease only if we will say to the rich, "None shall be too rich!"

Won't you help in this work? Is not humanity worth the effort? How much do we need it? I will tell you.

Hear me now read you a report from our newspapers. It reads:

"BABE DYING, MOTHER WALKS STREET IN HUNT FOR AID—BRAVES BITTER COLD WHEN CHILD GROWS WORSE; FINDS NO RELIEF AT WELFARE STATION, IS TOLD TO GO TO HOSPITAL, WALKS IN VAIN

"By United Press

"CHICAGO, January 16.—It was bitterly cold. Frail Mrs. Ella Martindale huddled with her four children close to an insufficient stove. The baby, 5 months old, wailed fitfully in fever under blankets on the floor.

"All awaited return of Murrian Martindale, the father, who promised when he left for his shift as a cab driver that 'I'll bring something to eat, some way.'

"The baby's cries grew more frequent but weaker. She refused the warm water offered as a substitute for milk. Paroxysms purpled her tiny face and the older children, from 3 to 12, whimpered in sympathy and fear. Mrs. Martindale paced the floor, wrung her hands.

"A strangling cough wrecked the infant girl. The mother acted in desperation. Whirling blankets around the baby and a ragged coat around her own shoulders, she ordered the oldest girl to watch the other children. She raced from the room, carrying the sick child.

"At an infant welfare station two blocks away she sobbed out her troubles. The women on duty were sorry, but no doctor would be present for hours. They advised her to go to St. Joseph's Hospital.

"Mrs. Martindale had no car fare but she went. She walked—six blocks—with the thermometer at 16 above zero. She stumbled on the steps into the hospital.

"'My baby,' she sobbed to a nurse, 'she's sick.' The nurse peered into the blankets, then took the little bundle.

"'She's dead', she said."

Good night, my friends. I thank you!

SOME PROBLEMS BEFORE CONGRESS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR DUFFY

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered at Washington, D. C., January 18, 1935, by Senator F. RYAN DUFFY, of Wisconsin, on the subject Some Problems Before Congress. It is a very thoughtful address and I think will prove of interest to the Senate.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOME PROBLEMS BEFORE CONGRESS

I welcome the opportunity given by the Columbia Broadcasting System to discuss with the people of this country some problems that are up for decision before the Seventy-fourth Congress. I think the Columbia Broadcasting System is rendering a splendid service to our people by furnishing their facilities to representatives of both the Democratic and Republican Parties in the discussion of the important problems of the day.

Right now, perhaps the most important subject under discussion, certainly in the Senate, is the question of the World Court.

Many of our people do not have a clear idea of just what is involved in this question.

At the close of the World War, when the terrific cost of that war both in lives and in treasure had been seared deep into the souls of the people of the world, it became evident that some movement should be attempted that would lessen the probability of wars in the future; and so an international agreement was signed by practically all of the leading nations of the world, setting up a Permanent Court of International Justice. The fundamental idea seemed to be sound, that if some tribunal could be established whereby disputes between nations might be settled, it would make for peace in the world, because every dispute between nations—no matter how trivial it might seem to be—is a potential cause of war; and the countries of the world are now so close together—due to the development of transportation and communication in all their forms—that a war between two nations is very likely to involve many other nations in that dispute.

The treaty that is now before the Senate is really in three divisions, or protocols, but they are being discussed, and should be regarded, together. The question cannot be considered a partisan one. Republican Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover advocated our adherence to the Court, as does President Roosevelt. Both political parties in their national conventions in 1932 incorporated in their platforms, planks favoring adherence by the United States to the Court. The Democratic platform was brief. It said: "We advocate adherence to the World Court with the appending reservations." The Republican plank, which was more lengthy, was, however, very definite, and a part of same is as follows: "The acceptance by America of membership in the World Court has been approved by three Republican Presidents, and we commend this attitude of supporting in this form the settlement of international disputes by the rule of law."

There must be, of course, a two-thirds vote in the Senate in favor of the ratification of any treaty, and where there is determined opposition, a two-thirds vote is always somewhat difficult to obtain. Although a majority of the Senate at the last Congress favored the ratification of the St. Lawrence Seaway Treaty, yet it failed at that time because there was not a favorable vote of two-thirds. The World Court Treaty has vigorous opposition, and yet I believe from the present outlook that the treaty will pass the Senate. The original agreement for creating the Court was ratified by 49 countries. The second protocol contains amendments to the original agreement which was prepared largely so as to meet the conditions laid down by the United States Senate in its reservations and has been ratified by 46 of the principal nations of the world. I should perhaps at this point invite your attention to the fact that when the United States Senate gave its advice and consent to the original treaty on January 27, 1926, it incorporated certain reservations which, in turn had to be agreed to by the various other nations. Four of the reservations were agreed to outright, and it is really because of the fifth reservation that the matter now again comes before the Senate.

Let me read to you the resolution that now is before the Senate—"That the Senate advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to the said three protocols * * * with the clear understanding of the United States that the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not, over an objection by the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has, or claims, an interest."

There is no question in my mind that much of the opposition to the World Court today is due to the willingness with which European nations have repudiated their obligations to this country. Many of our people feel that, where solemn obligations seem to rest so lightly on the shoulders of nations owing us money, we should keep away from any agreement with them whatsoever.

While I recognize the force of the argument, and while I feel that in many cases the repudiation by European governments of their debts to this country are absolutely indefensible, yet I feel that this Government will be better protected, and in a better position, by agreeing to the ratification than if we refuse to do so. The only obligation that this Government is under if we ratify, is that we shall bear our proportionate share of the expense of operating the Court, and the few thousand dollars involved will be of no moment in a discussion of this question. The important point, as I see it, is if we ratify the treaty that the Court could not, over our objection, entertain any request for an advisory opinion upon any question the United States has, or claims, an interest; while if we are not a member of the Court such an advisory opinion could be rendered; and while there is always the question of how such an opinion could be enforced, yet it seems to me to be far better for us to be in a position to stop the Court from even entertaining such a dispute, rather than standing off on the sidelines, and perhaps have such an opinion crystallize the public sentiment of the world against us.

President Roosevelt sent a message to the Congress on last Wednesday, asking the Senate to ratify the treaty. I agree quite thoroughly with the statement of the President in that message, in which he says: "The sovereignty of the United States will be in no way diminished or jeopardized by such action. At this period in international relationships, when every act is of moment to the future of world peace, the United States has an opportunity once more to throw its weight into the scale in favor of peace."

Disputes between individuals can usually be settled by an appeal to the courts. Disputes between groups of individuals constituting our States in the Union can thus be settled. It should be recalled that in the early history of this country there were at times disputes between the States which became so severe there was possibility of a resort to force, and so it was very fortunate indeed that we had a tribunal in this country which could pass judgment impartially upon such disputes. Nations are only enlarged groups of people, and any means that can be devised whereby disputes between groups of individuals organized into separate nations may be settled, is certainly a long step toward peace.

I do not think that even the most enthusiastic advocates of the World Court believe that it will prevent all wars in the future, but many of us do believe that the Court already has, and in the future will be able to settle disputes between nations, which, if not so settled, might bring on an armed conflict.

If there is one proposition upon which practically all of our people are united, it is that our Nation may continue at peace with the world. The cost and the horrors of the last war have not been—and should not be—forgotten. We can no longer hide our heads in the sand and say that we will live only unto ourselves and will not be concerned with the rest of the world, because we know, if we are honest with ourselves, that any great conflagration between the larger nations of the world might easily involve us. The World Court, properly functioning, and having greater prestige in the eyes of the world by reason of our being a member thereof, will make possible a lessening of the armaments of the nations of the world, and thereby lift a very considerable burden from the backs of the overburdened taxpayers of the world.

I, personally, do not believe that the ratification of the World Court Treaty will be taking us into the League of Nations by the front door, or back door, or down the chimney. If I believed this to be the case I certainly would not vote for adherence to the Court. In addition, if after we make this sincere effort toward world peace, we should feel it advisable for us to withdraw from the Court, we can readily do so without delay. It does seem to me that a ratification of the treaty will not only be a sincere effort on our part to assist in bringing peace to the world, but it will, likewise, place us in a position to more adequately protect the interests of this country.

As my time is very limited this morning, let us discuss one or two of our domestic problems. The first bill that was introduced into the Senate at this session was a bill which I prepared to extend the operation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. It is now known as bill S. 57.

I regard the operation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation as one of the most important and essential parts of the recovery program. Even in the days of the so-called "stock-market prosperity" near the latter part of the year 1929, the ranks of our unemployed were being rapidly augmented month after month, and of course after the October crash, the numbers of unemployed rapidly increased. One of the groups that suffered most is perhaps one of the most important elements that go to make up the citizenship of this country. I refer to the small home owners—those frugal, hard-working, American men and women—who laid aside a little of their income and pay checks each month so they could have a modest little home of their own. This class of people did not have the money to buy a home outright, and so they bought on time. They bought on land contracts or placed mortgages against their property. As long as their employment continued they were gradually paying up the debts on these homes, but when suddenly, without warning, they lost their jobs, they could no longer pay the taxes or the interest on their mortgages or land contracts. When President Roosevelt came into office he found a veritable avalanche of foreclosures in all parts of the country. And so the Home Owners' Loan Corporation law was passed to assist these good citizens in their distress, and I think they have done a wonderful job. We authorized them to issue bonds to the extent of $3,000,000,000, but we now find that the applications were so many that this sum was insufficient; and so my bill authorizes this corporation to issue an additional $1,000,000,000 in bonds, and this will enable the corporation to take care of the large number of people who have applied for help, but whose applications were delayed for one reason or another in reaching the legal department, or who may have struggled on until their small cash resources were gone—trying to avoid asking the Government for help, but finally found it was necessary to do so.

I am not one of those who likes to see the Government enter into competition with private business. If the private financial institutions of this country could or would take care of these people who have not yet received Government assistance in this respect, I would not ask for the extension, but I am advised by people in the mortgage-loan business from various parts of the country that at present there is practically no chance for such assistance. Let me call your attention to this fact—while the Government will become obligated for the additional billion dollars of bonds that are issued, on the other side of the ledger the Government will have first-mortgage security upon property valued greatly in excess of that amount. It is not like an outright expenditure because the Government will have excellent security for every dollar it has to put up in further carrying out this great humane program.

Several other bills similar to mine have been introduced, and I believe that there is an excellent chance for such proposed legislation to be enacted into law. I believe we have just time enough left to comment upon the message of the President, which he sent to the Congress yesterday. You perhaps have noted from the newspapers of last evening or this morning, that he recommends legislation for unemployment compensation, old-age benefits, Federal aid to dependent children, in support of existing mother-pension systems, and additional aid to public-health agencies. Bills have been and will be introduced to carry out these recommendations. It seems almost certain that the President's recommendations will be carried out. The important point to mention in this respect is the statement of the President in his message, as follows: "It is overwhelmingly important to avoid any danger of permanently discrediting the sound and necessary policy of Federal legislation for economic security by attempting to apply it on too ambitious a scale before actual experience has provided guidance for the permanent discussion of such efforts." This shows that the President is pursuing a safe and sane course, and is not being influenced by either the ultra-conservatives or the ultraradicals.

THE WORLD COURT

The Senate resumed the consideration of Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Court of International Justice, the pending question being the amendment of Mr. VANDENBERG to the resolution of adherence as reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in the course of his characteristically able argument on the subject of the accession of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice, remarked:

> Mr. President, the great achievement in government may be said to be the impartial administration of justice. Property rights and personal liberty alike wait upon the success of this achievement. Contentment among the people, the progress and prosperity of a people, are advanced and assured in proportion to the progress made in the full realization of this achievement.

Mr. President, no better words could be uttered on this subject, and they afford me a point of departure, if not a text. I think I might go further than the statement of the distinguished Senator, in that justice is the only justification of government; that justice is the reason for the existence of government; and that justice is the soul of the progress of civilization. We take pride in our governments only in the degree that we succeed by means of them in arriving at and executing justice. The proposition here, Mr. President, is to extend the great principles of adjudication by tribunals of justice beyond the borders of domestic life and national operations into the great, wide realm of international affairs. The same high motives that induce us to erect tribunals of domestic justice move us now to support the resolution of adherence by the United States to the first tribunal in history erected in the interest of international justice.

The Permanent Court of International Justice is proposed by the nations of the earth, I think not less now than 50 in number, and is maintained by them in the interest of extending to the nations of the earth, to their disputes and controversies, the great principles which have justified the existence of the governments themselves. It is a singular commentary, Mr. President, after ages of so-called "civilization" and the existence of almost innumerable governments, each of them dedicated to and existing by reason of their aspiration for and capacity for the administration of justice within themselves, that the world should have waited until the present age, the last 14 years, to devise and set forward a tribunal dedicated to precisely the same principle that has justified the existence of the governments themselves, the principle merely being extended to operate amongst the several nations.

We propose in international affairs to substitute, not by way of arbitration but by way of a court of justice, reason, and righteousness for force and willfulness and war. I am sure there is not a man within this Chamber and very few on the earth who would refuse favorable entertainment of a proposal so justified in the experience of nations within their own domain and so justified by the principles which are native to the breasts of all human beings, civilized and uncivilized. We propose that justice shall preside over the nations of civilization even as it presides over the peoples within those nations.

I take it, therefore, Mr. President, that we have no controversy here, nothing whatever to overcome by way of predilection or argument against the vital and dynamic principle underlying the proposition presented in the Permanent Court of International Justice and put forward in the resolution of our accession.

The Court has now been in existence nearly 14 years. It has succeeded in maintaining itself and commanding a certain degree of respect throughout the earth for these 14 years. Those years have been years of unusual trouble and almost, I sometimes fear, actual insuperable difficulty. So far from decreasing in respect or regard, year by year throughout the period, it has continued to operate and to command the respect of the world and the adherence of 50 nations of the earth, including all the greater nations.

Not only so, but in the progress of the Court in these 14 years, submitted as it has been to the trials of exceedingly troublous times, every President of the United States from the day of its institution to the present hour has commended it to the Senate of the United States and to the American people. Moreover, with the Court in operation, with the objections put forward as they have been put forward here, each of the great political parties—and our country is still governed by means of two great political parties—has proposed the adherence of the United States to the World Court and each has won elections with that proposal in its platform.

The party now in power won its election by a majority of 7,000,000 votes with the pledge of its faith in behalf of the adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice. The Republican Party, under the leadership of President Hoover, at that time their candidate, pledged its faith likewise and won an election, as I recall, by a majority of about 8,000,000 votes. While I would not undertake to stress too much this particular point, I think I am safe in saying that the policy, the principle, and the great idea presented by the Permanent Court of International Justice has been approved as very few propositions have ever been approved in our land, not only by both parties, but by immense majorities of the American people.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to invite attention to the fact that in the last Democratic convention I was a member of the resolutions committee which drafted the resolution which was presented to the convention, but the resolution was presented because there was a fight over the World Court coming in the resolutions committee. It was expressly considered, and the only way we could get the resolution adopted was to have it embrace the appending reservations. What were those appending reservations? The appending reservations are not in the resolution as reported by the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. BAILEY. I shall come to that, but I remind the Senator that at this stage of my remarks I was speaking of the approval of the principles and the ideas and the consummation rather than the details. However, I promise the Senator that before I shall take my seat I shall undertake to go into those details.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. In connection with the remarks just made by the Senator from Montana, I think it is easily demonstrable that the reservations referred to by the Senator from Montana are the five reservations to which the signatories have agreed.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes.

I may observe, in passing from these introductory remarks, just the one fact that President Woodrow Wilson did more than any other President of our country to bring forth this noble conception; that President Harding approved it in specific language; that President Coolidge approved it; that President Hoover approved it; that President Franklin D. Roosevelt approves it. I may go further and say that in principle, by definite statements, President McKinley approved it as far back as 35 years ago. After him, President Theodore Roosevelt approved the principle. I add to that the statement that the political parties of the United States, the two greater parties, have approved it, and, rather remarkable to say, each of them has been placed in power upon platforms approving it.

I add to that that practically 50 nations of the earth have approved it, and continued to approve it after giving their adherence to the Court itself. Strange to say, however, the one country whose President brought the conception into definite form, the one country whose political parties have submitted the question to the people, the one country in which the proposal has received, so far as it can receive, the approval of the people in at least two great elections, the one country in which this great principle and consummation of extending the domestic standards of justice to the nations of the earth, and substituting the reason and the righteousness of tribunals for force and willfulness and war, should make the greatest appeal—the one great country that remains aloof is, strange to say, the United States of America.

Only the Senate of the United States has stood between our country and this great consummation. If there has been delay, and if there is delay, if there has been apparent defeat—not ultimate defeat—it is due to the fact that this Chamber has stood in the way of the consummation.

Now we come once again to consider it, no longer an experiment, tried by 14 troubled years, approved by 50 nations of the earth, with a line of its decisions and its actions and some conception of its character before us. I think, Mr. President, it is time that the Senate of the United States, which has delayed this consummation so long, should take very grave thought as to its attitude.

I propose now to go into some rather elementary considerations, because I have observed from the press and from some portions of the discussion here that there is somewhat of misapprehension and misunderstanding of the character of this tribunal.

What is this Permanent Court of International Justice? It is nothing more nor less than a tribunal of judges dedicated to truth and to justice. The very statement of that fact should disarm all reasonable men. Here we in the United States are used to courts. We rely upon the courts. They are, in a very great sense, the source of the life of the American people. They mean more to commerce than any legislation of which we can conceive. They mean more to order than all the armies we could employ. Courts of justice, at any rate, are not strange and new things in America, that Americans should recoil from the prospect of erecting one that will extend the great principle of national life and domestic well-being to the great realm of international relationships.

This Court consists of 11 judges and 4 deputy judges, and they are chosen by the nations that adhere to the Court and its jurisdiction. The Court is supported by those nations.

What is the jurisdiction of the Permanent Court of International Justice? The jurisdiction is set out in article 36 of the statute of the Court, and I propose to read it into the RECORD.

The jurisdiction of the Court comprises all cases which the parties refer to it—

There is mutuality—which the parties refer to it—

That is, the parties to the cases—and all matters specially provided for in treaties and conventions in force.

The members of the League of Nations and the states mentioned in the annex to the Covenant may, either when signing or ratifying the protocol to which the present statute is adjoined, or at a later moment, declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other member or state accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all or any of the classes of legal disputes concerning—

(a) The interpretation of a treaty.

(b) Any question of international law.

(c) The existence of any fact which, if established, would constitute a breach of an international obligation.

(d) The nature or extent of the reparation to be made for the breach of an international obligation.

The declaration referred to above may be made unconditionally—

That is, the declaration as to recognizing as compulsory the jurisdiction—

The declaration referred to above may be made unconditionally or on condition of reciprocity on the part of several or certain members or States, or for a certain time.

In the event of a dispute as to whether the Court has jurisdiction, the matter shall be settled by the decision of the Court.

There is the statement in the unchangeable statute—for the statute is unchangeable under the special protocol which is proposed here, save by the consent of all the nations adhering to the Court. So here is the statement of the jurisdiction; and on the very face of it the jurisdiction relates wholly and exclusively, specially and particularly, to international controversies and questions; and insofar as it might relate to other questions in the general statement of the first paragraph of article 36, it cannot possibly take jurisdiction save by the reference to it of the parties in interest. That is voluntary; and as for the compulsory features of the jurisdiction, it is specifically provided with reference to the particular items of the jurisdiction that no nation may be compelled to the jurisdiction save by means of a specific stipulation voluntarily entered into by the nation itself.

What could be fairer than that? What could be more prudent than that? Are we to argue here that there is something special about the United States of America that we cannot afford to adhere to a court which will take no jurisdiction save by and with our consent? If we take that position, Mr. President, we shall be simply taking the position that there are no circumstances under which we are willing to submit our cause in a controversy to a tribunal of justice.

I have heard a good deal said here about Americanism. If that attitude be Americanism, then it might be pleaded in the courts of the world as evidence that we are not a civilized people. The only alternative to accepting that voluntary jurisdiction is the alternative of sitting back here upon our shores with a strange conceit that we alone are capable of deciding disputes between ourselves and others and that the other nations must either whip us in battle or we whip them.

To reject the character of jurisdiction outlined here is to reject the principle of justice in international relations; and to reject the principle of justice in international relations is to reject the principle of justice altogether, because justice is not a national affair.

Justice is universal. It rests in the heart of every man. The prophet of the nineteenth century, Thomas Carlyle, remarked as far back as 1835 that justice was the one universal instinct that could surely be found in the heart of every man; that even though one should go to the heart of the wilderness of Africa, and find himself in the midst of a benighted tribe, there would be no difficulty there in discovering the universal instinct for justice.

So I make my argument here that justice is a universal aspiration; it is a universal necessity; and the nation that undertakes to defeat justice in the universe, or in the international realm, fights against the stars that fought against Sisera.

Mr. President, so much for the jurisdiction. Now, with respect to the advisory opinions, I wish to get that into the RECORD.

Mr. President, it is contended in the Senate that the advisory opinions open up the doors to doubt, in that they probably enlarge the jurisdiction of the Court.

I read the new article 65, chapter IV:

Questions upon which the advisory opinion of the Court is asked shall be laid before the Court by means of a written request, signed either by the president of the Assembly or the president of the Council of the League of Nations, or by the secretary-general of the League under instructions from the Assembly of, or, the Council.

The request shall contain an exact statement of the question upon which an opinion is required, and shall be accompanied by all documents likely to throw light upon the question.

I concede that the article is general and is in no aspect of it specific. I concede that there is possibility—I believe I would go so far for the purposes of the argument as to agree that economic and political questions might be presented under article 65 touching the advisory opinion. But, Mr. President, what is an advisory opinion? It is without force, save the force of advice, which one may accept or reject as he will upon its value. There is a very great distance between an opinion of a court or a decree of a court or a judgment of a court and an advisory opinion of a court. It could have in the mind of the nations involved nothing more nor less than the quality of light, and not remotely the quality of force.

On that point, however, Mr. President, I believe I will digress just a little, returning to the resolution which is proposed in the Senate, in order to show that even with respect to advisory opinions not one of them may be entertained touching any questions in which we are involved or have an interest over the objection of the United States of America.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator would not say "involved"?

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to read the resolution itself, and I will let it stand, and then we can undertake to interpret it:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring), That the Senate advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to the said three protocols, the one of date December 16, 1920, and the other two each of date September 14, 1929 (without accepting or agreeing to the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction), with the clear understanding of the United States that the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not, over an objection by the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest.

The distinguished Senator from Idaho raised an objection to my use of the word "involved." The resolution speaks for itself. If we object on the ground that we have or claim an interest, that ends the matter; and if it is our view that we are involved, our objection will be an estoppel under this resolution, and we would be the judges of that; and if we were not the judges of that, our doors are wide open under two sections, one the right of absolute withdrawal and the other the right of withdrawal without prejudice.

So, Mr. President, with a great deal of respect for my distinguished friend from Idaho, whose judgment and eloquence and nobility of character I honor as highly as any human being could, I think I am justified, in the light of the resolution and the exposition that I have given, in the statement that our resolution of accession, upon which we are to pass, gives us the power of preventing action upon an advisory opinion on any matter in which we have or claim to have an interest, in using the word "involved" as I have; and, to be sure, if we have an interest, we would be involved, or if we should be involved within our conception, we would interpret that as interest, and that would be our interest and justify the objection, which would be an absolute estoppel upon the action of the Court.

Mr. President, again, What is the power of this Court? I believe that question would go almost to the heart of a good deal of the argument I have heard in the Senate. I have heard Senators speak here as if this Court would be some sort of supreme power over the United States of America; that this Court could interfere with our affairs; that this Court could determine our foreign policy; that this would be a supercourt imposed upon the great fabric of the American Government. There is nothing in that. This Court has only the power of jurisdiction which we may choose to give it to start with. And it has also only the power to enforce its judgment that lies within the moral realm of truth.

To put the matter in perfectly plain language—there are no marshals in this Court; there are no sheriffs in this Court; there is no power of execution of judgment in this Court. The controversy is voluntarily submitted to it. It resolves the controversy as only the Court may. The opinion is stated to the world, and its validity and its force rest only upon the moral power of truth. I do not minimize that power. That is a greater power than the sheriffs have, and that is a greater power than our domestic courts have. Probably the supreme power in the world is the power of truth.

Is the United States of America afraid of the power of truth? Are Senators of the United States disposed to cringe before the prospect of the moral power of the universe? I cannot believe it. I cannot entertain the thought.

I think I shall make a little departure here to say that the Man of Galilee, to whom the ages have looked and ever will look, upon being questioned by the presiding officer of the Roman court, Pontius Pilate—"Are you a King?" said, "My kingdom is the kingdom of truth." And that was the only kingdom existing then that exists today. It is the only kingdom that mortal men cannot resist. It is the only kingdom that armies cannot cope with. It is the only kingdom that survives all the vicissitudes of life, that resists the puny attacks of mortal men. So I do not intend to minimize this great moral power of the Court, but on the other hand I rejoice that we are reaching a stage in the progress of man when that moral power may be invoked in definite form, and may preside over the nations of the earth and the multitudes of their populations.

It was Matthew Arnold who said years ago on the question of the Deity and of his faith that—

There is an eternal making for righteousness.

There is an eternal making for righteousness. It cannot make for righteousness by means of force and of war. Certainly not save at the cost of the destruction of men and of civilizations, as all of us can bear witness from recent experience. But it does make for righteousness by means of the reason in the brain of men and the instinct in their hearts for justice.

That is the only power the Court has—that is all the power the Court has. So far as I am concerned, I would be ashamed before the people who sent me here and of the civilization which I represent in the Commonwealth of North Carolina if ever I should give to any man the slightest intimation that I had reason to recoil from or to seek to evade the force of the moral power of the kingdom of truth. So much for that phase of the matter.

I am coming now to the objections that have been put forward in particular with regard to the adoption of this resolution at the present time.

The first objection of which I will speak is the objection that our adherence to the World Court will affect or in some degree impair the historic American policy, especially with reference to other nations. I shall overlook the statements made here on the floor about oil companies running the courts, running that Court. I think men who put forward arguments of that sort get credit for only one thing, and that is the capacity to portray themselves in perfect character, from which nothing can be taken and to which nothing can be added, and I give them credit for perfection in self-portraiture.

But what is the historic American policy with regard to other nations? I realize, Mr. President, that to answer that question would invite me to go into a long discussion, but I am going to resolve it into a brief generality. We have faithfully sought to avoid responsibilities in the Old World, though not absolutely. We have entered into the nine-power pact and five-power treaty, and I raise no quarrel about that, and I think with fair accuracy I may say that we have undertaken to avoid responsibilities among the nations of the Old World and all manner of their controversies.

Over here we have assumed a larger responsibility, especially with respect to Central and South America, than any nation on the earth ever undertook to assume with respect to other nations, save perhaps the recent policy of the kingdom of Japan with respect to the Far East. If I had anything to say on that subject I would say that Japan in the Far East is emulating the example of the United States in the southern half of the New World.

If I have stated, Mr. President, fairly well in general terms what our foreign policy has been, I wish to raise the question, How could our adherence to this Court affect that foreign policy? There are those who say that the adherence to the Court would immediately involve us in the political questions that arise continuously in Europe.

Mr. President, how would our adherence to a tribunal of justice involve us in any question whatsoever save the question to which we are a party and to which we submit? Do we assume because we agree to help maintain an international court, because we agree that we may accept its jurisdiction at our will, that, therefore, we participate in its decisions and are responsible for its policies? I cannot see how it follows. The Court, in my conception, will be a thing apart, as courts must be. The fact that we have a vote in the election of judges or that an American may sit on the bench of the Court, as two Americans have sat, cannot affect the United States in the remotest degree in respect to the opinions or the decisions of the Court.

I make an analogy which, I will agree, is not perfect. I vote for the judges of the supreme court in the State of North Carolina, but I am not responsible for their decisions. North Carolina assists in the election of a President and participates in the election of Senators who have their respective shares in the appointment of judges of the Supreme Court of the United States, but the people of North Carolina are not involved and cannot be involved by way of any responsibility whatsoever for the actions of the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States. I fear that the impression has gotten abroad that by some means when we adhere to the jurisdiction of the Court under the reservations, the voluntary aspect of which I have described, we become responsible for its decisions. We do not even have to accept its decisions with respect to ourselves, and certainly we are obligated to give to its decisions with respect to other nations only that support which the moral law demands in the hearts of men.

So I see nothing in the argument that adherence to the Court, even in contemplation that it may pass upon economic and political questions, would tend in the remotest degree to involve us or make us in any degree responsible for advisory opinions or actions or decisions of a great court of international justice passing upon controversies which probably could not be settled otherwise save by willfulness or might or force. The idea that that adherence would involve us is not supported by any conception of courts of justice in any nation. It is not supported by any facts or any statute or any action of the Permanent Court of International Justice itself. So I think, Mr. President, we may dispose of that. I will, however, add one more word.

I hear the general talk of Americanism. We have a favorite way in America of using a word or slogan without rhyme or reason, and Americanism is one of those words. What is Americanism? It would be a subject of discussion all to itself; but Americanism never has been the rejection of justice.

Woodrow Wilson was an American, and out of his brain sprang this great conception. Theodore Roosevelt was an American, and probably a more typical American than any of the modern famous men; and yet he put forward this conception. Warren Harding was an American; the American people made him President, and he supported the World Court. Calvin Coolidge was an American, and he supported the World Court. Herbert Hoover is an American, and he supported the World Court in his Presidency. And Franklin Roosevelt is an American. The man who takes it upon himself to draw the line of Americanism in this controversy likewise takes upon himself the burden of showing wherein he is an American and all the Presidents of the United States from 1899 to the present hour are not such Americans as he is. I mention that just in passing.

Now, Mr. President, I come next to the argument that to adhere to the World Court is to join or to become a member or to become involved with the League of Nations. I think that is put forward with the utmost seriousness and commands our most respectful and grave consideration. No one could have put it forward better than the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho, and I am going to read a little of his language:

> Here is a tribunal of which we are a member—

I disagree with the Senator from Idaho; we are not a member of it; but—

> Here is a tribunal of which we are a member—a tribunal having advisory jurisdiction upon which the League may call when it chooses for an opinion. Where does this power of advisory jurisdiction come from? Does it come from the statute of the Court? Certainly not. It comes from the League of Nations.

Insofar as the United States of America is concerned, insofar as the Court takes jurisdiction with reference to us, its power comes from us. We are not in the League of Nations. It gets no power save that which we give it. I think that clears it of any suspicion or imputation that the jurisdiction of the Court relative to us could possibly associate us with the League of Nations. The League of Nations is in the nature of a collection of other nations under a covenant which we have not signed, to which we are not a party. There is a definite way to become a member of it. If they create a court and we give accession to the jurisdiction of the Court, the League of Nations has no power over the decisions of the Court. So far as the jurisdiction is concerned only we ourselves can accept or reject the jurisdiction respecting us at our will and not the will of any other nation whatsoever.

Again the Senator from Idaho said:

> This tribunal was created by the League, its members are elected by the League, paid by the League, and pensioned by the League.

We will pay our part in the maintenance of the Court. I do not get the word "pensioned." As I understand the expenses of the Court, the maintenance is drawn from the nations which adhere, and if it happens that 50 of the nations are in the League of Nations, one may argue that that means the League is paying the expenses, but it is getting the expenses from the respective countries.

> It is a tribunal designed in the first instance to be and actually has been created as a department of the League.

Mr. President, that is an interpretation put upon it by the distinguished Senator from Idaho. I will agree that it is called forth in the Covenant of the League, but I deny that it is a part of or is dependent upon the League. It is not a part of anything, no more than the Supreme Court of the United States is a part of the Congress which wrote the Constitution. The Court proceeds out of the matrix in which it is conceived and molded. It takes its character as a court, and maintaining that character it must forever stand apart from all else. Where could we find a better illustration than this which we have here? Here is the great Supreme Court of the United States, no part of the Congress, no part of the States, no part of the Presidency, separate and alone, guarding peace and justice in America. It would do justly by an alien as readily as by a citizen.

The Permanent Court of International Justice is intended precisely and has so far conducted itself regardless of its origin—it had to originate somewhere—as an independent judicial tribunal dedicated to the settlement of controversies between contending nations under the standards, not of accommodation or of politics but of justice. That is why it makes its great appeal to me.

I read on:

> It is a tribunal dependent for its continued existence upon the continued existence of the League.

I am sure the Senator from Idaho believes that, but I believe quite differently. The League might dissolve tomorrow, but the aspiration of mankind, the desire of enlightened nations to avoid the rule of force and willfulness of war, to find the rule of truth and righteousness and peace, would disturb the heart of man until he found another international tribunal. I think, Mr. President, that the League may go, and I hold no brief for the League, but mankind will never let go its hopes of justice duly administered in international affairs. Once now that 50 nations of the earth have seized upon the achievement, mankind will never again let go its hopes of guiding nations and civilizations under the judicial process and take the unspeakable risk of the sword and the cannon and the gas and all the inconceivably horrible things by means of which stupid governments have for ages sought so vainly to settle the disputes and controversies between contending nations.

If I may say so, nothing is better established on the earth today than that nations are incapable, of their own will, of settling their disputes. War is no remedy. I question whether in all the history of men there has ever been a settlement by means of war in which the price paid for the war was not a thousand times more than the value of the cause that was won.

Mr. President, I think this great conception came forth from the brain of Woodrow Wilson as he, with that historian-statesman's eye, beheld the wreck and ruin of settlement by war—came forth in order that mankind might at last realize, upon the ruins wrought by the rule of nations red in tooth and claw, the ancient way established by the God of Hosts when He set up for mankind the standards of righteousness.

Again the Senator from Idaho said:

> Is it fair to say to the American people that in becoming a member of this important department of the League we are not in the League and a part of the League—a part of the machinery of the entire organization?

I assert to my distinguished and honest friend the senior Senator from Idaho it is perfectly fair. I say it with utmost respect. I would say it to my little 6-year-old girl, and fathers do not deceive their little children. I would say it to my constituents. I say it here. I would not say to the American people that in becoming a member of the Court we become a member of the League of Nations.

We do not become a member of the Court in the first place. By adherence to its jurisdiction we do not become a member of the Court. I take it that the members of the Court in the ordinary conception are the judges. They are the members of the Supreme Court of the United States. I have heard lawyers described in the United States as "members of the court", and they are officers of the court. As such officers their foremost duty is to minister to the demands of justice.

How do we make ourselves or conceive ourselves as members of the Court merely because we agree at our own will to submit a controversy to it? I do not think it follows. I cannot make the connection.

> If we desire to maintain the Court of this tribunal after we have joined it, must we not maintain the League in order to maintain the Court?

I quote that from the distinguished Senator from Idaho. I do not think it follows. I just now said that the League might disappear, but never I hope will the tribunal of international justice disappear. I can conceive of a time when such tribunal may be rejected and denounced by reason of national feeling. But even so, if we should strike one down, the Senator from Idaho himself would be the first to lead the way to create another to take its place. He has said no less in his address here. If he had not said it, I would have known it anyway. I would not hear his foremost enemy say to the contrary.

So much, Mr. President, for that objection. The other objection is that by adhering to the Court we may become involved in European questions.

I quote again from the distinguished Senator's address:

> Again, Mr. President, let us suppose that when the German-Austrian Treaty came before it we were a member of the Court; suppose that we had become a member in 1926, what would have been the situation? Here was a tribunal of which we were a member which was dealing with a question which was purely European in character, which did not concern us in the slightest, which was purely European in its import and in its effect; we would not have entered into a discussion of the matter of our own voluntary action; but as a member of the Court, a member of the tribunal, the League calls upon us for an advisory opinion.

Imagine that—the League calling upon the United States for an advisory opinion!

> And we join with the other members of the Court in passing upon a purely political European question. If we would not be acting under the auspices, under the direction, and under the influence of the League, I do not know what would bring us under the influence of the League.

There was the Senator's conception. I differ utterly from him in my conception. He speaks of us as a member of the Court and a member of the tribunal. We are not members. He speaks of the League calling upon us for an advisory opinion. It calls upon the Court, not upon us. He speaks of our joining with the other members of the Court. We do not join.

Assume that there is a member from the United States of America, as there is now a member. Are we responsible for his decisions? Assume that this resolution of adherence shall pass, and we have a vote, and we cast that vote, and the man for whom we cast it is elected. Do we join the Court? Do we join the League? Why, no. We vote for a judge. And it is of the very essence of jurisprudence and of justice that the judge, when elected, must be indifferent to his electors. He ministers in the temple of justice. His attachment would not be to the United States. He would not be a representative of the United States. His attachment is to justice and to truth.

The Great Word said to all men—said most of all to judges, by the Almighty—

> What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?

That is all that we can require, all that any nation can require, all that the mighty Father Himself could require of any judge anywhere, international or local.

So, Mr. President, I cannot see wherein our adherence under this resolution could possibly make us in any degree responsible for the adjudications or actions or advices of the Court. We help maintain it, and we help maintain the Supreme Court of the United States. We help elect its judges, and we help elect judges throughout America. But courts are courts, and they serve but one master; they have but one source of validity; they have but one justification for their existence; and that is truth—in other words, justice.

I will pass by the remark made here, speaking of Earl Grey, that he went home after he had visited America and wrote a letter to the London Times, saying, "Let them"—that means America—"come in with their reservations; we will construe their reservations." That was a strange thing for Lord Grey to say. He was a very noble man. He enjoyed the love and esteem of the British people as few of its statesmen have ever enjoyed the love and esteem of a great people. I cannot account for it. When the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] says that Lord Grey said it, I am sure that he did say it. I raise no question about that; and, accepting the statement that he did say that they would construe our reservations, very well. We also would construe them. Upon any act that would seem to us unjust or unfair we have the right, inherent and of our own will and arbitrarily, to withdraw from the Court. I do not hesitate to say that should the Permanent Court of International Justice undertake to tell us what we meant, we would still have the capacity to tell them what we meant, and our word would be the last word. So that gives me no trouble.

There was an objection on the ground that the Court cannot be trusted; that it is human. It is true that it is human, and that is true of the Supreme Court of the United States; but it can be trusted. The argument of the fallibility of men gets us nowhere. The whole treasure of government is in earthen vessels. We are not going to turn from the adherence to a great tribunal of international justice simply because men elect it and men preside over it. That is the best we can do. We cannot call gods or demigods to help us on earth; and men have done quite well, Mr. President.

We stand here under the shadow of a great court, on whose altar fires have burned the lamps of justice for nearly a century and a half. Cynical men have said about the Supreme Court that it was made up of mortal men. I saw a statement the other day that one of the Justices had said that the members of the Court were human, but some were more human than others; and, you know, Mr. Dooley said, away back yonder in the last 5 years of the nineteenth century, that he did not know whether or not the Constitution followed the flag, but he understood that the Supreme Court followed the election returns.

Mr. President, I want to dwell on that. That statement found lodgment in the brain of practically all the American reading public. We rolled it under our tongues as a sweet and humorous morsel; but it did not impair in one one-hundredth of 1 degree the universal respect in which the Supreme Court of the United States is held.

I am glad courts are human. If they were not human, I do not know from what source I would obtain justice, for they judge me remembering that they are as I am; and I do not care that they are fallible. I question whether life itself would be very greatly worth while in an infallible universe.

So, Mr. President, I conclude this portion of my argument with the simple statement that there is nothing whatever in the argument that the Court is made up of men, is human, and is therefore fallible. On that argument we would never have anything. We would not even have a Congress of the United States or a President.

I come now to my conclusion, Mr. President. I have presented no arguments for the Court except by way of answering other arguments, but the argument may be very simply stated.

In the world, as it is now constituted and has been constituted ever since record was made of the activities of men, there are controversies between kingdoms and peoples and tribes. These controversies must be settled in one of two ways—either by willfulness and force or by reason and righteousness.

Choose ye this day whom ye will serve.

As for the constitution of the Court, it must be international in character. We cannot constitute it. No man, no nation, ought to be judge in its own cause. We have a concert of 50 nations which has constituted it. We cannot build another. We cannot destroy it. If we are actuated by the reason and the righteousness which prompts us to set up indifferent tribunals for the trial of controversies between our nationals at home, then why should we hesitate to give adherence to an international tribunal indifferent in character, so far as the nations are concerned, for the settlement of international controversies and questions?

Mr. President, I began my remarks with a word or two on the subject of justice. I think I may safely say that the distinction between the natural creation of the brutes and the beasts and the civilized creation of human beings lies in that one word "justice."

Out yonder in the winter day the sparrow has no law and no court. If the hawk is stronger that he, the hawk prevails. The sparrow becomes a meal for the hawk.

Yonder in the wilderness the rabbit has nothing to protect him save his cunning; no army and no power, no court of justice, and no refuge save his speed and the instinctive capacity for deceit. If they fail him when he is young, he is food for the hound; and when they inevitably fail him in his age he is food for the fox.

So all the way through the whole realm of nature we have the rule of force and the consequence of blood and of suffering.

They call that the "survival of the fittest." The great German philosopher, Nietzsche, put forward that doctrine for men and nations in his philosophy in the early years of the present century, proclaiming to the German people the exaltation of the superman and telling them to be hard and to be strong and to rely upon hardness and to rely upon their strongness. If I had to explain the plunging of a noble people into a great war, if I had to explain many things going on over there of which I would prefer not to speak, if I should have to explain the substitution of persecution for a great and noble culture which produced the noblest literature and most perfect music of the generation that lies behind us; if I should have to explain those things, I would explain them in the fact that Nietzsche succeeded in injecting the virus of the barbaric spirit of nature in the blood of a great and noble people, with consequences which horrify mankind—which I often fear will wreck civilization.

But the instinct for justice in the breasts of men creates governments, protects the weak, takes care of the children, lays a helpful hand upon the stooping shoulder of the aged. It negatives the ruthless rule of nature.

I speak not only of justice in commerce, justice in courts between men and the law, between men and men, but of this modern aspiration for social justice. They are all one. It is that justice which lies at the root of the tree of civilization itself.

Shall we deny it here? Why is it that we who abhor the cruelty of nature in the wilderness do not abhor it between nation and nation? Why is it that we denounce the brute who beats the woman and sustain an international situation in which the greatest brute can destroy the humblest nation? Why is it that we exalt justice here as the soul of our civilization and deny justice in all the vast international relations? It cannot be answered.

So, Mr. President, I shall cast my vote for this resolution, and in casting it shall remember in the years that remain that when an opportunity was presented I sought to make one contribution to the moral structure of civilization.

During the course of Mr. BAILEY'S speech,

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. In line with what the Senator is now suggesting, I desire to call attention to a statement made by the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] the other day when he undertook to say that the Court was controlled by the political interests of the judges. To quote him exactly, he said:

I just know politics that well that I can tell the Senator now how they voted, and if I make a mistake I would almost be willing to say I am making a very serious blunder.

Then he undertook to mention how each judge voted, by reason of his nationality, and he mentioned Great Britain and Czechoslovakia and Russia as having voted for the majority opinion. Czechoslovakia had no judge in the Court at the time; neither did Russia—that was mentioned by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]—and Great Britain voted for the minority opinion. So the Senator from Louisiana not only made a blunder but, indeed, according to his own admission, a very serious blunder.

I desire now to put in the RECORD how the judges voted, so far as their nationality is concerned, on the customs-union advisory opinion involving Germany and Austria. The judges who voted for the minority opinion were from Japan, Holland, Great Britain, United States, Belgium, Germany, and China; those who voted for the majority opinion were from Spain, Italy, Cuba, France, Salvador, Rumania, Poland, and Colombia.

I wanted to make that correction and call the attention of the Senator from Louisiana to the fact that he did make a serious blunder in his guess, in the event he ever comes back to get the information.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, let that come in at the conclusion of my speech, if it is agreeable to the Senator; and I think it also should go in the RECORD that if the Senator from Kentucky thinks he can correct the blunders of the Senator from Louisiana, I quickly confess that I am quite incapable of it. [Laughter.]

After the conclusion of Mr. BAILEY'S speech,

Mr. MCNARY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. LEWIS. I beg to reannounce the reasons for the absence of the Senators whose names I gave this morning as being absent from the Senate, and ask that the announcement I then made stand for the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a matter that I think is of public interest in view of the fact that it involves the public-school system of our country.

I think it was in August of 1933 that an effort was made by the authority of the National Industrial Recovery Board to put a text on N. R. A. in the public schools. That met with very serious opposition. Only a few days since I found that an effort is being made, in my judgment, to interest the National Education Association in another type of political propaganda which I believe should be frowned upon.

I have a letter from the National Education Association of the United States, 1201 Sixteenth Street, Washington, D. C., dated December 18, 1934, as follows:

Hon. L. J. DICKINSON,
Algona, Iowa.

DEAR SENATOR DICKINSON: You will be interested in the attached study of the Tennessee Valley project which is reprinted from the Journal of the National Education Association for December. This will be used in thousands of schools. If you wish additional copies we will be glad to supply them.

Very cordially yours,

Upon examination of this article, I find that it is an article written by Walter E. Myer, editor of the American Observer, under title "The Tennessee Valley Looks to the Future." This article is written, of course, purely from the standpoint of the interest of those wanting to make everything look rosy in behalf of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

When the appropriation for T. V. A. comes before this body for approval I shall bend every effort to obtain adoption of a special prohibition that no moneys expended by T. V. A., either out of its borrowed funds or from direct apropriation, shall be used in secret propaganda either in the American school system or in any other manner.

Recently I was astounded to discover the broadcast manner by which the doctrines proposed by this association are being spread in this underhanded manner, the same as we found the public utilities were doing only a few years since.

I feel sure that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who does not happen to be in the Chamber just now, and who, more than any other person, is responsible for the existence of the Tennessee Valley Authority, will join me in the suppression of such a pernicious practice. Certainly he will object to practices by the Tennessee Valley Authority which he has so vehemently denounced when carried on by utilities. I am sure he will agree with me that the commission of a sin by the utilities cannot justify the same sort of activities by a Federal agency.

I am sure that none of those in this Chamber who, like myself, voted for T. V. A. contemplated such activities by that corporation any more than we realized the threat toward socialistic activities and competition with business which the administration of T. V. A. has manifested.

Every American school teacher, every American parent, every American taxpayer, will be gravely concerned to learn the latest attempt to prostitute our public-school system for the purpose of spreading the propaganda of a public-ownership doctrine by writers secretly subsidized out of Federal moneys to prepare public-ownership "study units" published by the Journal of the National Education Association and distributed to the school teachers of the country.

We have in this article by Mr. Myer a detailed description of what it is expected will be done under the Tennessee Valley Authority, but we find that this article was prepared by Mr. Myer at the instance and request of those in the Authority. We have this on the admission of Dr. Joy Elmer Morgan, editor of the Journal. Dr. Morgan was asked, before publication, according to Herbert Corey, in the current issue of the New Outlook: "How much are you going to pay the correspondent for writing it?" "I do not know", Dr. Morgan replied, "the T. V. A. is taking care of that. It will be a matter of bargaining between the correspondent and the Authority."

Thus is revealed an agency of the Federal Government engaging in a propaganda trick that amounts to a public fraud—a deception as black as any charged against its public-utility opponents. T. V. A. has employed a writer of reputation to prepare an article purely for propaganda purposes, pleasingly painting its arguments, and has paid this man to place the article within the covers of the Journal of the National Education Association as a bona fide, unbiased study of a great Federal experiment. The deception lies in the fact that the readers of this article—and it has been reprinted for classroom use, large quantities having been purchased for free distribution by T. V. A.—are forced to assume that the writer has written freely from his own observations. It is my understanding that over 50,000 copies of this article have already been printed and that the Tennessee Valley Authority has purchased 25,000 of them. The guileless reader never suspects that he is a victim of a public-ownership propaganda scheme.

I do not want to commit myself as a public-ownership advocate or as a private-ownership advocate; what I am trying to touch upon is the fact that the public-school systems of the United States ought not to be used to spread propaganda for or against either type of ownership of public utilities.

Equally culpable is the management of the Journal of the National Education Association, which would submit supinely to such a prostitution of the name and prestige of its organization to further the cause of an alien political doctrine.

One wonders what official pressures were brought to bear upon Dr. Morgan that he was willing to participate in a governmentally financed conspiracy to proselyte the Nation's school children.

Other pertinent questions include:

How much money did Walter E. Myer receive from T. V. A. for writing this article?

With whom did he collaborate on the propaganda staff of T. V. A. and to what extent was his copy censored and rewritten by the propagandists for this Government agency?

Let us turn to the article itself.

We read:

"They (utility companies) seek to influence public opinion insofar as it relates to the regulation of utility rates. * * * They carry their influence to the schools and secure the adoption of textbooks which are favorable to utility companies and the elimination from other textbooks of statements they consider harmful." This from a piece of propaganda performing the same kind of mendacious dissembling!

I hold no brief for the utilities companies. Unquestionably some of them may have been mismanaged, and some of them well deserve the castigations that they have received. My own record is clear on that point. But this statement implies that each and every public utility commonly engages in the most pernicious types of propaganda—a statement that cannot be demonstrated and that is obviously false.

The irony is, of course, that such a self-righteous accusation should be contained in a similar attempt to influence the schools.

Such, however, is a minor issue. I take more serious objection to the whole fatuous tone of utopian star-gazing, with which the impressionable youth of this country is given this story in a magazine whose supposed purpose is to mold the child mind. To have been fair, the views of realists on public ownership should have had equal space.

Such an activity on the part of an agency of the Federal Government would be reprehensible and against public policy, even if the statements contained therein were wholly true and undebatable facts. Inasmuch as the real sponsors for this article remain hidden, and accept no responsibility for the opinions expressed therein, it must be assumed that the officials responsible for it did not dare openly to espouse the opinions set forth.

Our children are told how opposition to T. V. A. is to be anticipated and discounted in advance as a natural reaction, not of patriots but of exploiters of the masses, of selfish and disgruntled business interests:

The T. V. A. must expect active hostility at times from business groups who feel themselves adversely affected by its operations. If, as is clearly possible, the dominance of the private power companies in the utility field is seriously challenged by the T. V. A., the companies may throw their great influence into the scales against the practice of governmental competition. Other industrial interests will have their grievances. If the T. V. A. maintains its purpose to encourage industries which contribute to the public good and to discourage those which do not, it would be fatuous to suppose that it will not step on the toes of a good many very powerful business men. It would be equally fatuous to suppose that they will not strike back.

Mark how the propagandists have anticipated the time when T. V. A.'s failures begin to arouse inevitable skepticism:

The test (of T. V. A.) will come when the novelty of the idea wears off and when the absence of quick and tangible results of T. V. A. efforts may try the public patience. It is not enough that the people tolerate the Authority. They must follow its guidance actively if its purposes are to be achieved. Are we on the verge of an "authoritarian state"?

The so-called "yardstick" idea again is used without qualification, with no explanation of how Federal taxpayers' moneys contribute to T. V. A. low rates. In fact, the entire article is a biased hypocritical statement of T. V. A. views offering no opportunity to consider the problem with the critical detachment necessary to true scholarship.

In a personal message to the school teachers of the country, Dr. Joy Elmer Morgan "explains", without explaining, this remarkable document. On the last page of this article I find this statement from Dr. Morgan, editor of this journal:

Cannot the curriculum be so arranged that every student will be studying some current activity, so that his powers of observance and analysis will be trained to look upon the passing scene? Such questions as these were in the editor's mind, when the plan was made to work out in cooperation with the Tennessee Valley Authority, the story of what is being done in that great watershed. By a piece of good fortune, arrangement was made for Walter E. Myer, editor of the American Observer, and a gifted writer and student, to prepare the story. Try it on your classes. Perhaps it will help young people to realize that America has a great future if it wills to have such a future.

I am curious to know if this is just the beginning of such propaganda activities by T. V. A., or how long has this sort of thing been going on?

This special feature in the 15 pages preceding provides specific and abundant teaching material for a study unit based on one of the most significant developments now taking place in the United States. It can be used to vitalize the teaching of many school subjects. It will turn teachers' attention to a study of their own communities—their resources and needs. Perhaps most important is the emphasis this special feature makes on the idea of planning and that a new and better civilization can and is being created in the Tennessee Valley, which is possible in other sections of our country. The potential public usefulness of the entire Tennessee Valley "enters the wide fields of flood control, soil erosion, afforestation, elimination from agricultural use of marginal lands, and distribution and diversification of industry." The implications of all this for education and classroom teachers are far-reaching.

Mr. President, as a matter of fact, there is a noble purpose in the Tennesse Valley Authority. No one objects to having those beautiful hills manicured and the valleys landscaped; the only question is, How far is it the responsibility of the Federal Government or the American taxpayer to foot the bill?

I also find that they have extended their activities into other avenues. Only last night I was looking through the Public Works Administration allocations. I find that they have allocated to the Tennessee Valley Authority $1,000,000, which is being used as capital stock for an equipment corporation, and that equipment corporation is selling to the inhabitants of certain areas electrical appliances on the installment plan, to be paid for at their will.

There are other phases of that development down there which I think ought to have the attention of the country. They are calling in people from all over the area, largely women, who are supposed to be students. They are to take instruction from teachers in the use of electrical equipment for a certain number of weeks or months and then they are to go out and spread the gospel as to the additional uses that people can make of electric appliances. So the Government furnishes the teachers to instruct others how to use the appliances, sells them the appliances on time, and trusts to the Lord that they will be able to pay for them some time; but I do not know how they are going to increase their income. Of course, if they can get enough income from relief allowances, and so forth, so as to pay for this equipment, the Tennessee Valley Authority will not lose any money.

I am not interested, Mr. President, in whether or not we continue only private ownership of public utilities or private and public ownership of public utilities, but I am interested in seeing that the public-school system of this country shall not be subjected to undue influence on the part of either side by means of the type of propaganda they want put out in order to further their own interests.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Adams | Connally | Johnson | Radcliffe |
| Ashurst | Coolidge | Keyes | Reynolds |
| Austin | Copeland | King | Robinson |
| Bachman | Costigan | La Follette | Russell |

| Barbour | Davis | Lonergan | Sheppard |
| Barkley | Dickinson | McCarran | Shipstead |
| Bilbo | Dieterich | McGill | Smith |
| Black | Donahey | McNary | Steiwer |
| Bone | Duffy | Maloney | Thomas, Okla. |
| Borah | Fletcher | Metcalf | Thomas, Utah |
| Brown | Frazier | Minton | Townsend |
| Bulkley | Gerry | Moore | Trammell |
| Bulow | Glass | Murphy | Truman |
| Burke | Gore | Murray | Vandenberg |
| Byrd | Guffey | Neely | Van Nuys |
| Byrnes | Hale | Norris | Wagner |
| Capper | Harrison | Nye | Walsh |
| Caraway | Hastings | O'Mahoney | Wheeler |
| Carey | Hatch | Pittman | |
| Clark | Hayden | Pope | |

Mr. LEWIS. I reannounce the absences, for the reasons then stated, of certain Senators as announced by me this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

THE WORLD COURT

The Senate resumed the consideration of Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Permanent Court of International Justice, the pending question being the amendment of Mr. VANDENBERG to the resolution of adherence as reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is manifest that the Senate is approaching the time when debate upon the general proposition will be exhausted. I have spent most of the day going about the Senate Chamber trying to ascertain who desires to speak and who is ready to speak. When the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] concluded his remarks a few moments ago it appeared there was no one who desires to address the Senate.

In view of the situation, I wish to address to my friends of the opposition to the pending resolution a suggestion that they give consideration to a proposal, which I shall not undertake to make definite at this time, for the Senate to proceed to vote on the issues which are before the Senate. I realize that this is a very stormy day and that a number of Senators, who were anxious to be present before the proposed resolution and reservations are disposed of, are necessarily absent. Senators will all agree that the debate has proceeded in a somewhat leisurely fashion. There has been no effort on the part of anyone to block a conclusion nor delay it. On the other hand, there has been no attempt to press to a conclusion.

In view of all the circumstances, it is my feeling that the Senate should proceed to vote tomorrow or at least the day after tomorrow. I merely make this statement now in the hope that Senators who are interested in the subject may give it consideration.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas is quite right. The debate has proceeded in regular and fairly leisurely fashion. It ought to continue, if it is to be continued, as a debate. There is no question on that score at all. I could not at the moment agree, and the Senator will pardon me for the suggestion, to fixing a specific time to vote tomorrow or the following day. I know there are several Senators who desire to speak, and, as usual in cases of this kind, generally they want to speak "tomorrow." They are not prepared at the moment to proceed, and the difficulty arises from that as much as from any other reason.

There are some things that can be said this afternoon and some things that perhaps ought to be said. I am ready to present a particular article or brief which was furnished me this morning by a very learned gentleman and which under the rule I cannot insert in the RECORD because of its length. It is not lengthy in fact, but it exceeds what the rule will permit to be inserted in the RECORD. I was not aware of that rule until it was called to my attention this morning.

If there is no objection upon the part of the Senator from Arkansas, I shall endeavor to take up with him tomorrow what may be possible in reference to an agreement upon a vote, but saying to him now that I am hoping that on mature consideration by him he may not endeavor definitely to fix that vote until some time in the following week. However, I shall be glad to talk with the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON. I appreciate the spirit in which the Senator approaches the question, but I should like to point out to him that since the debate began we have had the habit of adjourning very early in the day in order to get some Senator ready to proceed "tomorrow." Now we find ourselves at an impasse. I know of only two or three Senators who have indicated that they might speak. The subject has been before the Senate for so long a time that it seems to me the Senator from California should go with me in an effort to bring it to a conclusion. Of course, I am not insisting now upon a vote.

Mr. JOHNSON. I quite agree with the Senator. This matter ought to be voted up or voted down. The only problem is to give fair opportunity to all those who wish to speak upon the subject and not unduly delay it.

Mr. ROBINSON. We have been doing that, and we are doing it again today, with no one ready to speak.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator knows the Senate far better than I do, and he realizes the difficulties we are encountering whenever the debate is in progress here.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but I wish to say to the Senator from California, in view of the statement I made in the beginning, that I have been busying myself today trying to find out who wants to speak and who is going to speak, that I do not propose to proceed in that way any further. Senators who wish to discuss the subject ought to come here and be ready to take part in the discussion. Otherwise it will be necessary for the Senate to attempt to reach a conclusion without the assistance of their suggestions.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, a gentleman who is very learned in the law, who has had not only some personal experience at Geneva but a great deal of personal experience at home, this morning sent me a manuscript upon the subject of whether or not we should join the World Court.

I may say in explanation of his position that he was a very strong advocate of a world court, not this one, perhaps, but that he was in thorough accord with those Americans who during the long years have sought by judicial interpretation and judicial decision to solve controversies which might exist among the nations of the earth. That will be observed from the beginning of what he has to say.

I read this for the reason I indicated a moment ago, that under the interpretation of the rule, as I understand it, a document of this length, perhaps a few pages in length, would not be permitted insertion in the RECORD.

This article is by Mr. Herbert Wright. Mr. Wright is in the department of politics and government, international law and relations in the Catholic University of America, in this city. Here he presents his views.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield to me?

Mr. JOHNSON. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Appreciating the statement the Senator has made that he is reading it because it cannot be printed in the RECORD, if the Senator would like to have it printed in the RECORD, I should be glad to ask unanimous consent that the rules be suspended and that the matter to which he refers be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON. I quite appreciate that suggestion, and I should avail myself of it, if it were not for the fear on my part that few of our Senators would look at it unless it is thus presented.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator desires to read it, of course, he has a perfect right to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state for the benefit of Senators that the rule to which reference has been made is one enunciated by the Joint Committee on Printing and cannot be abrogated by any action of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is the absolute rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the absolute rule.

Mr. JOHNSON. That is what I was told this morning.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not concede that at all.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should think the Senate could abrogate its own rule.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senate is the creator of the Committee on Printing, and, having complete authority over the Committee on Printing, it can suspend its rules or suspend any rule and print anything it wishes to print. I do not wish to subscribe to the legal doctrine that a committee can, for its own procedure, adopt a rule by which the Senate is unalterably bound.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to state further that this matter has been called to his attention by the parliamentary clerk. The statute authorizes the Joint Committee on Printing to make such rules, and abrogation of the rule is not a matter of unanimous consent by the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think the Senate has complete control of its records. But if the rule is authorized by statute, it would be controlling.

Mr. JOHNSON. The only question in that regard might be because it is a joint committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Any question regarding it will be solved by reading the article.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator stated in the beginning the position or employment of Mr. Wright, the author of the article he is about to read. Will he state it again for my benefit?

Mr. JOHNSON. He is in the department of politics and government, international law and relations of the Catholic University of America, Washington, D. C.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. I read:

The suggestion of a permanent court of international justice is not new.

I may not agree with all that is said here, but I am delighted always to have the considered conclusions of any gentleman of standing and repute and anyone learned in the law. The Senator from Arkansas may not agree with some of the conclusions he has reached.

Mr. ROBINSON. I probably shall not.

Mr. JOHNSON. I read:

SHALL THE UNITED STATES JOIN THE WORLD COURT?

By Herbert Wright

The suggestion of a permanent court of international justice is not new. It originated in the proposal of the United States to the First Hague Conference of 1899. In the Second Hague Conference of 1907, at the insistence of the United States, the project was worked out and agreed upon in its essential features, except the method of selecting the judges. A solution of the latter question seemed impossible because of an apparent irreconcilability of the political doctrine of the equality of states with that of the hegemony of the more powerful states. This practical difficulty was overcome by the advisory committee of jurists, which met at The Hague in the summer of 1920 at the invitation of the League of Nations, and it was their plan that formed the basis of the statute of the Court finally adopted by the League. Manifestly, then, the presumption is in favor of the United States supporting the Court, for both self-respect and self-interest require that the United States should stand by its own policy. We cannot decently urge the creation of such a court as this upon the rest of the world through a long series of years and then repudiate the Court when they consent to it, unless we offer some adequate reason for apparently such an absolute change of front.

Moreover, since the project for a permanent court of international justice drafted by the advisory committee of jurists and their accompanying recommendations represents the combined thought of the best legal minds of the world as applied to the problem of world peace, to a consideration of which many of them have given a lifetime, it would seem that no more practical way to peace between nations could humanly be devised.

It must be remembered, however, that the Advisory Committee did not consider the establishment of a World Court as an independent proposition, but as an instrument of the League of Nations, by whose invitation they met. Consequently the project which they elaborated was naturally linked up with the League. It must also be borne in mind that the original project of this Advisory Committee and their recommendations were not adopted verbatim by the League, which, on the contrary, made substantial changes and additions to the project and paid but scant attention to the accompanying recommendations. The present Court, therefore, is not precisely the court proposed by the Advisory Committee, a fortiori, not the court envisaged by the Hague Conferences. Hence there are fundamental objections to the very nature of the Court.

There are now before the Senate, awaiting its advice and consent, three instruments concerning the Permanent Court of International Justice:

1. The protocol of signature of the statute of December 16, 1920.
2. The protocol of accession of the United States of September 14, 1929.
3. The protocol of revision of the statute of September 14, 1929.

Let us examine these, objectively, to see if there are any fundamental reasons why the United States Senate should not advise and consent to these three instruments.

1. THE PROTOCOL OF SIGNATURE

The United States should not adhere to the protocol of signature of the statute if the United States is opposed to entering the League of Nations, and the Court is an integral part of the League.

That the Court is an integral part of the League seems evident from a number of considerations. In the first place, it is a fact that the protocol of signature of its statute was framed under the direction of the League, for members of the League, is signed only by members of the League, and is open for signature by nonmembers of the League only on terms approved by the Council of the League.

Most of these facts require no proof. They need only to be stated to be admitted. The protocol itself admits that it "has been drawn up in accordance with the decision taken by the Assembly of the League of Nations on December 13, 1920." And the decision referred to was taken after the Assembly had deliberated on the report and recommendations of the Advisory Committee of Jurists established by the Council. Moreover, the protocol specifically states that "The members of the League of Nations, through the undersigned, duly authorized, declare their acceptance of the adjoined statute." It is true that it also declares that the protocol "shall remain open for signature by the members of the League of Nations and by the states mentioned in the annex to the Covenant of the League." But that the latter are referred to only as prospective members of the League and not at all as nonmembers is evidenced by the fact that the annex to the Covenant does not include Afghanistan, Albania, Austria, Bulgaria, Costa Rica, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, Germany, Hungary, Iceland, Irish Free State, Latvia, Lithuania, Mexico, Turkey, and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, and a few Arabian and Indian states, although a number of these were subsequently admitted to the League. Article 35 of the statute provides that the Council shall lay down "the conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states." This the Council did in a resolution of May 17, 1922, which provides "that such state shall previously have deposited with the registrar of the Court a declaration by which it accepts the jurisdiction of the Court, in accordance with the Covenant of the League of Nations", and with the terms provided for in the rules of procedure of the Court, and "undertakes * * * not to resort to war against a state complying" with the decisions of the Court. By this same resolution the Council "reserves the right to rescind or amend this resolution."

But the allegation is made that these facts relate simply to the historical genesis of the Court and not to the juridical relationship between the Court and the League. Let us therefore examine the statute itself.

The statute provides (art. 1) that the Court is established "in accordance with article 14 of the Covenant." Article 14 of the Covenant provides that—

The Council shall formulate and submit to the members of the League for adoption plans for the establishment of a Permanent Court of International Justice. The Court shall be competent to hear and determine any dispute of an international character which the parties thereto submit to it. The Court may also give an advisory opinion upon any dispute or question referred to it by the Council or by the Assembly."

This is the only juridical basis for the advisory jurisdiction of the Court. The judges, therefore, sit and render decisions by the authority of the Covenant. They are, moreover, bound to expound and defend the Covenant as the fundamental law of the society of nations, above all other international law, customary or written, for by article 20 of the Covenant—

"The members of the League severally agree that this Covenant is accepted as abrogating all obligations or understandings inter se which are inconsistent with the terms thereof."

The statute provides (art. 4) that "the members of the Court shall be elected by the Assembly and by the Council." Articles 5 to 12 and 14 give the details of this electoral procedure.

The statute provides (art. 26) that the technical assessors in labor cases shall be chosen from a list "composed of two persons nominated by each member of the League of Nations and an equivalent number nominated by the governing body of the Labor Office."

The statute provides (art. 27) that the technical assessors in transit and communications cases shall be chosen from a list "composed of two persons nominated by each member of the League of Nations."

The statute provides (art. 32) that the salaries, allowances, and indemnities of judges shall "be determined by the Assembly of the League of Nations upon the proposal of the Council." The same article also provides that the Council shall decide the salary of the registrar and that the Assembly on the proposal of the Council decides "the conditions under which retiring pensions may be given to the personnel of the Court."

The statute provides (art. 33) that "the expenses of the Court shall be borne by the League of Nations" as "decided by the Assembly upon the proposal of the Council."

The statute provides (art. 34) that "only states or members of the League of Nations can be parties in cases before the Court."

The statute provides (art. 35) that "the conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states shall * * * be laid down by the Council, but in no case shall such provisions place the parties in a position of inequality before the Court." These conditions, as a matter of fact, have been laid down by the Council resolution of May 17, 1922, the principal provisions of which have been set forth above.

The statute provides (art. 36) by implication that only "members of the League of Nations and the states mentioned in the annex to the Covenant" may sign the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction, for it makes no reference to any procedure whatsoever for signature of this optional clause by nonmember states, even upon conditions laid down by the Council.

The statute provides (art. 37) that when a treaty refers to "a tribunal to be instituted by the League of Nations the Court will be such tribunal."

The statute provides (art. 40) that the registrar shall "also notify the members of the League of Nations" of the application of a state to bring a case before the Court. The purpose of this provision appears to be to give such members of the League of Nations which are not actual parties to the case an opportunity to intervene if they consider themselves interested parties. But why should such notification be limited exclusively to the members of the League if the Court is not an integral part of the League?

These provisions of the statute itself seem to show conclusively that the Court is not only an integral part of the League but a very important part. And this nexus, as proclaimed in the very terms of the statute itself, could be corroborated further by the statements of many distinguished individuals engaged in League activities. If it had been intended to have the Court absolutely independent of the League, the term "adherents to this statute" could very easily have been substituted for the term "members of the League" and similar adjustments and substitutions made in other relevant portions of the statute.

"Joining the Court" therefore would be but a step into the League itself. It should not be necessary here to give reasons why the United States should not join the League. The United States Senate has placed itself unmistakably on record against such a step, both by rejecting the Treaty of Versailles and by consenting to the ratification of separate treaties of peace with the Central Powers. Moreover, the political conventions of both major parties in the United States since that time have consistently maintained the same attitude.

But let us examine the text of the Covenant itself for the fundamental reasons for this attitude. The treaties of Paris, of which the Covenant is part I, were essentially treaties of peace forced upon defeated nations by victorious nations, based upon Germany's sole responsibility for the World War and not based upon broad principles of justice. The arbitrary dismemberment of Germany, Austria, and Hungary, the unjust seizure of their colonies, and the exacting of intolerable and impossible reparations could only be executed by the establishment of an armed alliance to maintain the status quo of the peace treaties.

Such an armed alliance is provided by the Covenant. In the first place, the defeated nations were debarred from original membership, which was limited (art. 1) to those signatories mentioned in the first part of the annex to the Covenant. Secondly, it was to be a closed alliance. Although a second group of nations, mentioned in the second part of the annex, were to be allowed to become members of the League, admission to the score or more not there mentioned was to be only upon the agreement of two-thirds of the Assembly, provided that each such prospective member "give effective guaranties of its sincere intention to observe its international obligations and shall accept such regulations as may prescribed by the League in regard to its military, naval, and air forces and armaments." No such conditions are exacted of the original members or of any states mentioned in the annex.

This closed alliance was intended to control the world, for article 3 provides that "the Assembly may deal at its meetings with any matter * * * affecting the peace of the world", and article 4 gives the same power to the Council, a small group controlled by the principal Allied and Associated Powers. Moreover, this control of the world is to be on the basis of the status quo of the peace terms, for by article 10 "the members of the League undertake to respect and preserve as against external aggression the territorial integrity and existing political independence of all members of the League", and by article 11 "any war or threat of war, whether immediately affecting any of the members of the League or not, is hereby declared a matter of concern to the whole League, and the League shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations." Should a member of the League violate the Covenant, the other members, by article 16, "undertake immediately to subject it to * * * the prevention of all financial, commercial, of personal intercourse between the nationals of the Covenant-breaking state and the nationals of any other state, whether a member of the League or not." The same article also provides for military and economic sanctions against a Covenant-breaking state. In the event of a dispute between a member of the League and a nonmember, the latter is invited by article 17 to accept the obligations of the League for the purposes of such dispute, with such modifications as may be deemed necessary by the Council. If it refuses the invitation and resorts to war, the sanctions of article 16 will apply.

Under article 22, the seizure of the colonies of the defeated nations in the World War is cloaked under a system of "mandates", allegedly "a sacred trust of civilization"—

Just recall those words in the light of what we have seen of late—the "mandates" given as "a sacred trust of civilization." Then says this author—but realistically interpreted by most of the mandatory states as outright acquisitions, to be exploited for their exclusive benefit.

Let me digress for just an instant concerning the mandated islands in the Pacific Ocean. This sacrosanct organization at Geneva, which means "the peace of the world", gave as a sacred trust for civilization the Marshall and the Caroline and the adjoining islands in the Pacific under a mandate to Japan. Japan stands now facing the world, saying she intends to hold those mandated islands in perpetuity; and the League of Nations, investigating, hints and insinuates that Japan has fortified those islands so that she might use them for warlike instead of for peaceful purposes; and all the world apparently, and particularly the League of Nations, accepts practically without demur Japan's attitude in regard to the mandated islands in the Pacific. "A sacred trust of civilization" they constitute now!

The articles of the Covenant quoted above prove conclusively that the League is a closed and armed alliance to maintain the status quo of the so-called "peace" treaties, the joining of which by the United States would mean that the United States would be obliged to assist in perpetuating the iniquities and injustices of those treaties and thus become embroiled in every quarrel of Europe.

2. THE PROTOCOL OF ACCESSION

The United States should not adhere to the protocol of accession because it does not comply entirely with the terms of Senate Resolution 5 of January 27, 1926, advising and consenting to the adherence of the United States to the protocol of signature. This resolution contains certain reservations and understandings which are "made a part and condition of this resolution." The protocol of accession of 1929, however, does not include these as a part of the instrument, but accepts the adherence of the United States "subject to the five reservations formulated by the United States in the resolution" of 1926, without including the text even of these reservations, much less that of the understandings which also formed a part of the Senate resolution. Article 1 of the Protocol of Accession declares that the signatories "accept the special conditions attached by the United States in the five reservations mentioned above", but only "upon the terms and conditions set out in the following articles."

But the following articles make no specific mention of reservations 1 and 3. It may be alleged, however, that they are included by implication from the passage quoted above. Let us see how far this is true. Reservation 1 provides that the adherence of the United States "shall not be taken to involve any legal relation on the part of the United States to the League of Nations or the assumption of any obligations by the United States under the Treaty of Versailles." From what has been said above concerning the juridical relation between the Court and the League, it is difficult to see how the adherence of the United States to the Court could fail to involve a "legal relation to the League or the assumption" of obligations under the Treaty of Versailles, unless the other signatories of the protocol of signatures divorced the Court from the League, which they failed to do. Reservation 3 provides that "the United States will pay a fair share of the expenses of the Court as determined and appropriated from time to time by the Congress of the United States." In the absence of any specific mention of the terms upon which this is accepted, it may be presumed that the apportionment of the expenses of the Court, including the share of the United States, will be decided by the Assembly in accordance with article 33 of the statute.

The protocol of accession in article 2 accepts almost verbatim reservation 2, concerning the participation of the United States in the election of the judges.

The protocol of accession in article 8 accepts the first part of reservation 4, concerning the power of withdrawal of the United States at any time, but adds that if two-thirds of the other signatories desire to withdraw their acceptance of the protocol of accession, it "shall be considered as ceasing to be in force." In other words, the protocol of accession is to be regarded as a treaty between the United States on the one side and all the other signatories on the other, instead of being regarded as an individual accession like those of the other signatories. If two-thirds of the other signatories desire to kick the United States out of the Court, they may do so, but no other signatory may be kicked out of the Court with the United States vote or without.

The protocol of accession in article 3 accepts almost verbatim the second part of reservation 4, concerning the amending of the statute, and in article 4 accepts the first part of reservation 5, concerning publicity and hearings for advisory opinions.

The protocol of accession does not comply with the second part of reservation 5, which provides that the Court shall not, "without the consent of the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest." Article 5 of the protocol of accession provides that "with regard to requesting an advisory opinion * * * there shall be attributed to an objection of the United States the same force and effect as attaches to a vote against asking for the opinion given by a member of the League of Nations in the Council or in the Assembly." If the members of the League desire an advisory opinion and the United States is not prepared to forego its objection, the exercise of the powers of withdrawal * * * will follow naturally. In other words, Senate reservation 5 asks for an absolute veto on advisory opinions, while article 5 of the protocol of accession provides for a veto or withdrawal. The signatories misconstrued this reservation of the Senate to be merely a request for equality with the members of the League, but the terms of the Senate reservation are unmistakably clear. The Senate wished an absolute veto on advisory opinions. There are a number of questions which the United States does not desire to have submitted to the Court for advisory opinion without its consent. It is impossible to enumerate all, but mention might be made of immigration, tariffs, relations between debtor and creditor, relation between reparations and war debts, and other political, domestic, or purely American questions. Hence it is not sufficient to allow the United States to object and, if overruled, to withdraw. Withdrawal under such circumstances is bound to injure the reputation and prestige of the United States in spite of the fact that by article 5 it is to follow "without any imputation of unfriendliness or unwillingness to cooperate generally for peace and good will." Simply saying so does not make it so.

Moreover, who is to decide whether the United States has or claims an interest in a proposed advisory opinion? Is it the Executive alone? This question was put to Prof. Philip C. Jessup, who accompanied Mr. Root to Geneva when the Root-Hurst formula was adopted, at the annual meeting of the American Society of International Law on April 24, 1931, to which he replied by making a distinction between disputes to which the United States is a party and disputes to which the United States is not a party. In the former case, "arrangements for that submission must be by and with the advice and consent of the Senate", he admits. In the second case, "if the United States is not a party to a dispute, but there is a question in which we have an interest, and it is proposed to request an advisory opinion regarding that question, I should think it might be quite possible to say that that was within the discretion of the Executive." It is precisely this second group of questions, in which the United States has an interest but is not a party, that Senate reservation 5 was designed to cover. By new article 68 of the protocol of revision the Court will apply to advisory opinions the same provisions of the statute as those which apply to contentious cases to the extent to which it recognizes them to be applicable. This certainly means that advisory opinions will very closely approximate judgments in contentious cases and that their effect upon the United States as precedents will be just as potent and far-reaching as that of judgments. Is the Senate prepared to delegate this power of control to the Executive?

The protocol of accession does not comply with the first paragraph after Senate reservation 5, providing that the signature of the United States to the protocol of signature will not be affixed until the other signatories shall have indicated, through an exchange of notes, their acceptance of the foregoing reservations and understandings as a part and a condition of adherence by the United States. The protocol of accession is virtually a treaty between the United States on the one side and all the signatories on the other, and not an acceptance by bilateral exchange of notes.

The protocol of accession makes no reference to the second resolution of the Senate resolution of 1926, providing that recourse to the Court for the settlement of differences between the United States and any other State or States can be had only by agreement thereto through general and special treaties concluded between the parties in dispute. This is the resolution by which the Senate retains control of the cases to be submitted to the Court by the United States. Does the Senate wish to relinquish this control?

The protocol of accession makes no mention of the third resolution of the Senate resolution of 1926, providing that adherence is not to be so construed as to require the United States to depart from its traditional policy of * * * entangling itself in the political questions of policy or internal administration of any foreign state nor to imply a relinquishment by the United States of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions. This is evidently aimed at insuring the judicial character of the Court and preventing it from exercising political functions. Does the Senate wish to abandon this part of its original resolution of 1926?

3. THE PROTOCOL OF REVISION

The United States should not adhere to the protocol of revision of the statute for the following reasons:

The new text of article 4 of the statute adds a provision to the effect that—

"The conditions under which a state which has accepted the statute of the Court but is not a member of the League of Nations may participate in electing the members of the Court shall, in the absence of a special agreement, be laid down by the Assembly on the proposal of the Council."

Why should the Assembly have the power to decide how states accepting the statute of the Court without membership in the League should participate in the election of the judges? There are many members of the League who have not accepted the statute of the Court. On the other hand, there may conceivably be states accepting the statute of the Court without wishing to be members of the League, who would be debarred from participation in deciding the conditions for others such. If the United States should, by accepting the three instruments now before the Senate, enter such category, it would not thereafter have the right to participate in deciding the conditions for others such.

The new text of article 32 of the statute repeats the provision of the old text that "salaries, allowances, and indemnities [of judges] shall be fixed by the Assembly of the League of Nations on the proposal of the Council." Why shouldn't they be fixed by the signatories of the statute alone? Why shouldn't the United States, if the present protocols are accepted, have the right to participate in such matters?

The new text of article 35 of the statute repeats the provision of the old text that the Court shall be open "also to states mentioned in the annex to the Covenant" and that "the conditions under which the Court shall be open to other states shall * * * be laid down by the Council." This has already been commented on above.

The new text of article 40 of the statute repeats the provision of the old text that the registrar shall notify "the members of the League of Nations" of the application of a state to bring a case before the Court. This likewise has been commented on above.

The new articles 65–68 refer to procedure in advisory opinions and are designed, first, to include in the statute provisions for jurisdiction in advisory opinions, which is now based exclusively upon article 14 of the Covenant, and secondly, to make the procedure in advisory opinions approximate as far as possible that in contentious cases. The substance of these articles, so far as they may be applicable to the United States under Senate Resolution 5, has been commented on above and requires no further comment here.

THE MORAL ARGUMENT

The arguments thus far advanced have been based upon an examination of the three documents now before the Senate. Advocates of the acceptance of these three instruments, as reported by David Lawrence in the Washington Evening Star of January 17, 1935, are wont to minimize the effect of such acceptance by saying that "the United States does not have to submit a case to the World Court, if it is disinclined to do so" and that "the principal value of American membership in the World Court is the moral support given by the United States to a movement to settle disputes by judicial means, instead of by violence." These two contentions involve peculiar, not to mention naive, if not downright hypocritical and absolutely untrue, inferences. If the United States does not intend to submit cases which may arise to the Court, what need is there to join? What need to stultify ourselves by saying, in effect: "This is an innocuous and meaningless step, but nevertheless we take it." Ah, but it is necessary in order to show our moral support of a movement to settle disputes by judicial means, instead of by violence. In other words, the implication is that by failing to take the step, the United States disapproves of the peaceful method of settling disputes and approves of violence.

But let us look at the record. The United States is a signatory of convention I, for the pacific settlement of international disputes, of the First Hague Conference (1899) and the Second Hague Conference (1907). It had the first case before a tribunal operating under that convention, the case of the Pious Fund of the Californians against Mexico, and it had the last case to be decided by a tribunal under that convention, the case of the Island of Palmas or Miangas against the Netherlands, besides several cases in between these (the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries Case against Great Britain, the Orinoco Steamship Co. Case against Venezuela, and the Norwegian Shipping Claims Case).

Furthermore, the United States has, by treaties for the advancement of peace and treaties of conciliation with the following 38 nations, provided permanent commissions of inquiry: Albania, Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Egypt, Estonia, Ethiopia, Finland, France, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxemburg, Netherlands, Norway, Paraguay, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Uruguay, Venezuela, and Yugoslavia. These commissions of inquiry at the present time are available and ready to investigate any fact which may be a source of belligerent activity between any of these nations and the United States.

Moreover, the United States is in the process of concluding or has concluded successful arbitrations with Germany on mixed claims, with Panama on claims, with Spain on claims, with Mexico on claims, with Sweden on claims, and with Canada within the past month on the I'm Alone claims.

Here is an enviable record which challenges comparison with that of any State. Will the addition of the contemplated step, which is alleged to be otherwise meaningless, add anything material to this record?

CONCLUSION

The arguments given above have demonstrated the following points:

1. That the United States should not join the League of Nations.
2. That the United States should not join the Court if it is an integral part of the League of Nations.
3. That the Court is an integral part of the League of Nations.
4. That the three protocols now before the Senate do not satisfactorily comply with the Senate resolution of 1926.
5. That the Senate cannot accept the three protocols without repudiating its resolution of 1926 or reversing its position on the League of Nations.

Why not recognize the issue for what it really is, a step into the League of Nations itself, and settle it squarely on that basis? If the people of the United States wish to join the League, let us join the League and also its Court by a forthright action. Otherwise, let us refrain from accepting these three protocols until their terms are modified to make the Permanent Court of International Justice a real world court and independent of that closed, armed alliance of the League of Nations in fact as well as fancy.

NOMINATIONS ON THE EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of nominations on the Executive Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RUSSELL in the chair). The Clerk will state the first nomination in order.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Adolph C. Miller, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Federal Reserve Board.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Katharine F. Lenroot, of Wisconsin, to be Chief of the Children's Bureau, Department of Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. HAYDEN. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters may be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to confirming the naval nominations en bloc? The Chair hears none, and they are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. ROBINSON. I make the same request with respect to nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I will not object if the name of Gen. John H. Russell is not included in the list of nominations to be confirmed.

Mr. ROBINSON. At the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama, I ask that the nomination of John H. Russell, to be a major general, be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination of John H. Russell, to be major general, will be passed over, and the remainder of the nominations in the Marine Corps will be confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BLACK. I do not see the Chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee here at the present time, but I desired to request that this nomination go back to the committee. I did not know that it was to be reported; I did not know that it was coming out of the committee, and there are some matters that I desire to have investigated by the committee with reference to General Russell. I have talked with the Chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee and told him I would make that request.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not desire to interpose an objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama. While I have no express authority to speak for the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I assume that he would not object to the nomination going back to the committee.

Mr. BLACK. He did not state as to that. I merely told him that I would make that request. He said he did not know, and the committee did not know, of any objection, and, if they had known, the nomination probably would not have been reported, as another one was not reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the nomination referred to be recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. That completes the calendar.

PRINTING OF EXTRANEOUS MATTER IN THE RECORD

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, while the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] was addressing the Senate the question arose as to his right to have printed in the RECORD the statement by Mr. Wright, which he afterward read. The Joint Committee on Printing, under the authority of a general statute, has adopted a rule which provides that—

> No extraneous matter in excess of two pages in any one instance may be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by a Member under leave to print or to extend his remarks unless the same is accompanied by an estimate from the Public Printer of the probable cost thereof.

The Senator from California had a complete right, as I think he understands, to present the matter to be printed, and to procure and submit to the committee, or cause to be submitted to it, an estimate from the Public Printer of the cost of the printing.

Of course, the object of this rule is to dispense with a practice to which there is much sound objection. The custom has prevailed, I think in both Houses of Congress of making the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a kind of warehouse, and in some instances a sewer, for disposition or deposit of political waste matter. I do not mean to imply that there is not much information supplied under leave to print that is of great value to Members of the Congress, but I do mean to make clear that the privilege of printing in the RECORD has been abused to the extent that it was desirable and proper that the Joint Committee on Printing exercise the authority conferred on it by statute, which appears to be to take all needed action for the reduction of unnecessary bulk.

Being in hearty sympathy with the program of the Joint Committee on Printing, but not for one instant intimating that the matter which the Senator from California sought to have published in the RECORD was in any way related to unnecessary bulk, I desire to say that I think the rule is a wholesome one, even though it does occasion sometimes delay and inconvenience. The Senator unquestionably could have had the matter printed, but it probably could not have been printed in time for study or use in accordance with the convenience of the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I think the rule referred to by the Senator from Arkansas a very salutary one. I think if a Senator presents here anything that he thinks of importance that his fellows should know, it is just as well that he should stand here upon his feet and read it and present it in that fashion so that they should all know of it. That is one reason. The other reason is one of economy concerning printing, because, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, the RECORD has been unquestionably stuffed, and frequently with matter that has been very little looked at except by the individual offering it. So I did not want to be the first one to violate the rule that had just been called to my attention, and that is the reason I was perfectly willing to read the matter in question.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator from Arkansas now hold that the rule can be abrogated by unanimous consent of the Senate?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think if the rule is made under authority of statute neither of the two Houses alone could abrogate it, because if the rule is a valid exercise of the power granted the committee by statute—and I believe that it is—neither the House nor the Senate alone, by any action that either could take, could abrogate the rule.

Mr. McNARY. That is the view I entertained this morning; but I thought the able leader had intimated that the rule could be abrogated by consent. If so, it will be nullified every day, because consent will always be given.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, yes; that is undoubtedly true. When the rule was mentioned, I assumed the Chair had reference to some mere rule of the Committee on Printing of the Senate. But this is a rule of the Joint Committee on Printing, promulgated under the provisions of a statute, which gives them general authority to make rules to restrict the bulk of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I overlooked that fact when I first spoke. I think the matter is now sufficiently clear that I need not proceed with it further.

LAND VALUES AND HOUSING PROJECTS—ADDRESS BY IRVING BRANT

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an address by Mr. Irving Brant, editor of the editorial page of the St. Louis Star-Times on the subject of racketeering land values in connection with housing projects.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE GREAT AMERICAN DELUSION

Like Mark Hopkins' college, which consisted of Mark on one end of a log and you on the other, the housing program needs to be brought down to essential matters. It should be discussed and decisions made by men straddling a carpenter's horse.

This national housing conference has nothing to do with decisions, which must be made by Congress and the President, but we can see to it that the discussion is conducted from opposite ends of the carpenter's horse. Across this let us place a plank to represent the low-cost housing program. The carpenter's horse now becomes a fulcrum, the housing program balanced across it. At one end of that plank place a weight representing the houses to be built. At the other end place a weight representing the cost of building those houses. Now we have a teeter-totter. And what happens? As costs go down houses go up. As costs go up houses go down.

Slum clearance must be kept on a low-cost basis because the purpose is to furnish decent housing for the people now living in these districts, and rents are determined by what they can afford to pay. Most slum dwellers, when able to pay anything, can pay $5 per room per month. Very few can pay $7. Keep the rentals at $5 and you will rehouse the people now living in the slums. Raise the rents to $7 and a new class of higher-paying tenants will move in, while the old tenants will go to the vacated district and blight it with their poverty.

For a vivid illustration of what determines housing costs, I want you to compare New York's most famous slums, the lower East Side, with any of the slums that made St. Louis famous. My city of St. Louis leads in many lines. In beer we have outmilled Milwaukee, in smoke we have outpitied Pittsburgh, and in slums we have outblighted Blighty.

Start rebuilding the blighted districts of St. Louis and New York's lower East Side and what do you find? Construction costs are slightly higher in New York, a little more for labor, a little more for materials. A few cents additional per room per month will cover the difference. But what about land? Land costs $1 per square foot in the slums of St. Louis, $12 to $14 per square foot in New York's lower East Side. You can build low-cost housing on land at $1 a foot. You can't do it at $12 a foot.

When slum-clearance engineers held a meeting not long ago with the bankers and insurance executives who hold the $71,000,000 in mortgages on New York's lower East Side, and told them land prices must come down, these financial gentlemen threw up their hands. Land prices already had come down. They had come down to bedrock. They had dropped from $20 a foot, or thereabouts, to $12. Owners had been forced to reduce their mortgages to the bare value of the land. To go lower meant confiscation.

Confiscation of what? Confiscation of money invested at speculative prices in the hope of a speculative profit. At this meeting I have been telling you about, in lower New York, one of the bankers made this remark: "After all", he said, "what is this land? It is just Peter Stuyvesant's cow pasture. It was a cow pasture once, and maybe it will be one again."

Ladies and gentlemen, if we are going to get anywhere with slum clearance in America, we have got to recognize that we are dealing with cow pastures. The main difference between land in New York and St. Louis is one of nationality—Peter Stuyvesant's cows fed in one pasture, Pierre Chouteau's in the other.

But no, it is said, think of the industrial difference. These slum districts, bordering the great business areas, will be absorbed for commercial purposes. They are future industrial areas. Their sale price is a capitalization of future demand for commerce and industry. Aye, so it is. And the price of a ticket in the Irish hospital sweepstakes is a capitalization of future lottery prizes. How many will win? What are the tickets worth when the lottery is over? I say to you that the price of $12 a square foot for land on the lower East Side of New York, and likewise in every typical American slum where prices are fixed by the hope of industrialization, this, I say, is a price on lottery tickets, most of them past due, canceled, the prices already paid or never to be paid.

Washington is not a commercial city, nor an industrial city. When it was surveyed a few years ago by Harland Bartholomew, following a demand for a more extensive business zoning in the northwest, it was found that 2½ percent of the developed area was used for commercial purposes, a fraction under 10 percent for industry, leaving almost 90 percent for residential and public use. How do you suppose that compares with the average for the Nation? The average for self-contained American cities is 2½ percent for commercial development, the same as Washington, and 11 percent for industry. The range for industrial purposes in self-contained cities is from 10 to 12 percent. In other words, the great industrial cities of the Nation use almost as large a percentage of their areas for housing as the residential city of Washington. There is a definite, universal, almost unchanging ratio between business areas and housing areas, with no possibility of enlarging the business and industrial percentages.

Now, what does this signify for landowners who hold on to vacant or poorly improved property, year after year or even decade after decade, adding each year's taxes and interest to a theoretical investment which is to be returned, plus a fabulous profit, when the commercial or industrial development takes place? It means that with rare exceptions, their profit will remain fabulous. It never will come. They would have done better to bet on the ponies, or buy lottery tickets. Sooner or later, moved by financial stringency or plain disgust and exasperation, they will give up this dream of unearned wealth and sell their land at a loss, or write off their loss and capitalize the land for housing at a figure based on its residence value to the people who live in that district.

For a century and a half wealth through land speculation has been the great American dream. European visitors who came to the United States in the years following the Revolution called this a land of speculation. The Duc de la Rochefoucauld-Liancourt, following a visit at the home of John Marshall in Virginia in 1795, jotted down in his notebook the statement that the people of Virginia were so addicted to gaming, and it made them so irresponsible in the payment of their debts, that Virginia lawyers always collected their fees in advance. "Speculation", Le Rochefoucauld wrote, "is the favorite passion of the people of New England." He visited Boston in 1796 when the great Yazoo land grants—35,000,000 acres obtained through bribery of the Georgia Legislature—were being unloaded on the people of Boston. The Yazoo agents "opened a kind of office", wrote the Frenchman, "to which purchasers flocked in such crowds that those gentlemen, taking advantage of this inconceivable infatuation, raised the price each day, often twice in the day, for the purpose of more strongly exciting the general eagerness and taking away all time for reflection. Every class of men, even watchmakers, hairdressers, and mechanics ran eagerly after this deception, in which Boston has sunk about $2,000,000."

That was in 1796. The same speculative principle still rules American thought. The farmer signs a note for land which he expects to sell at a profit. The city mechanic or clerk thinks that if he can buy and pay for a vacant lot it will open the way to riches. All this is a bitter delusion, and it fixes a train of thought in the American mind which immeasurably heightens the difficulties of slum clearance.

The Public Works Administration, if it would make its low-cost-housing program a success, must beat down and explode the great American delusion of wealth through land speculation. It cannot in morals sanction a price for land based on the dream of commercial or industrial expansion. Nor can it do so in practice, because the people who are to live in these houses cannot pay interest on swollen land values. How can this problem be handled? Some will say by a national land tax, levied on land but not on improvements. That is politically impossible at this time. It is made impossible by that century and a half of dreaming I have been talking about. It would start a political battle on the subject of rural land taxation, which has nothing to do with the slum problem.

Brought down to the cities alone, there is no way by which the Federal Government could enforce a policy of land taxation because Federal land taxes must be laid according to the census. Nor will the cities voluntarily adopt a taxation policy, even where they can do so under State law, which will deflate land values outside the slum areas. What remains then?

I would suggest three approaches:

First, a campaign of education among the owners of land in blighted districts, to show them the folly of expecting industrial and commercial expansion beyond the normal experience level. Almost 0.9 of the developed area of self-contained cities is and will continue to be used for shelter. The future of the typical slum is in rebuilding for residence purposes or utter ruin.

Second, use of the Federal Government's power of eminent domain, where it can be constitutionally employed, to acquire land at a price based on its genuine value for low-rent housing, with present normal rents as a guide. There are great difficulties in the way of this procedure, and it has been ruled unconstitutional in a United States district court at Louisville; but constitutionality in such a case depends to a great extent upon what is considered to be for the general welfare, and that varies from time to time, in accordance with the development of public opinion. In the Constitutional Convention, for instance, a proposal that Congress be given a power to cut canals was rejected on the ground that canals were not for the general welfare of the Union. "The cost", Roger Sherman of Connecticut said, "will fall on the general Government, but the benefit will be to the local community." As years passed and the Nation spread westward, new avenues of communication were needed. The time came when Daniel Webster could arise in the Senate and say:

"I look upon a road over the Alleghenies, a canal around the falls of the Ohio, or a canal or railway from the Atlantic to the western waters, as being an object large and extensive enough to be fairly said to be for the common benefit."

So too with slum clearance. In the past it has been a local problem, for the cities and private interests to deal with, and consequently for nobody to deal with. Today it is a theme for Federal initiative, through Federal aid, but for local decision. How soon will a challenging public opinion declare that the decent housing of the American people, the elimination of festering centers of disease, crime, and degeneration, is as much a matter for national decision as cutting a canal around the falls of the Ohio?

The full extent to which Federal power shall or can be used is still to be determined. For the present, reliance must be placed upon a combination of Federal initiative, State authorization, and private agreement. That brings us to the third approach I would offer to the problem of speculative land values in slum clearance, through the terms of Federal aid.

It has been suggested that neighborhood taxing authorities might be created in the blighted districts of cities, similar to drainage districts, giving a majority of property owners legal authority to impose a general tax for the purpose of improving the region. I wish to propose a different use of the same plan of organization.

Let Congress, in appropriating funds for a national housing campaign, grant Federal aid for slum clearance on the following general terms:

That States, to share in the housing fund, authorize the creation of improvement districts in cities, these districts to have the following power:

To impose a special tax upon the value of land, not including improvements, which tax shall be abated upon any land improved or offered for improvement under terms and specifications approved by the national housing authority.

For succesful operation, this would need the active suport of a majority of property owners. Their votes would have the same legal standing as if cast by a majority in an entire city, for the district would be a governmental unit. Would a majority support such a proposition? That would depend, undoubtedly, upon the extent of Federal aid, which might be reinforced by a further tax-exemption of slum-clearance projects after completion. For the coming attitude of property owners, look toward Louisville, where 90 percent of the property owners in a blighted district joined in a slum-clearance program, and were blocked by 10 percent and a Federal court decision which prevented consolidation of the improvement area through condemnation proceedings. How long would this 10 percent hold out against a land tax from which the 90 percent were exempt?

Of course, this would not immediately dispose of the delusion that land in the lower East Side of New York is worth $12 a foot, but such delusions are rapidly being destroyed. In every large city, old buildings are being torn down to reduce tax charges. In St. Louis one group of 14 buildings has just been razed. The Chicago Tribune not long ago published two pages of photographs, pictures of bare land, parking lots, etc., with the ghostly outlines of hotels, apartment houses, etc., destroyed to escape taxes.

Tearing down a city residential building usually reduces the taxes 75 percent. It eliminates a large annual loss, theoretically a temporary one, because it is a loss caused by vacancies in tenantry, but in place of it a smaller permanent annual loss is established. When landowners tear down habitable buildings to escape taxation they are just on the verge of recognizing that the whole speculative jig is up.

That is coming to be recognized in St. Louis. That is why land in the slum areas can be bought for $1 a square foot. It is coming to be recognized in Chicago, where land is being offered for slum-clearance at one-half of the assessed valuation. It will be recognized before long in New York. The lower East Side of New York lost exactly 53 percent of its population between 1910 and 1930, a conclusive answer to those who think American city populations enjoy living in slums, and an ultimate deathblow to the speculative price level of land. Loss of population is the royal disease of the slums—a hæmophilia from which the great families who have inherited these areas can never recover without a revolutionary change in their attitude toward the value and use of land.

Pressure of present taxes, as indicated in this tearing down of buildings, is destroying the great American delusion. Slum landowners are being educated through their pocketbooks, though they still do not know exactly what it is they are learning. Some of them will need a great deal of help in learning. The special, abatable land tax I have suggested for use in the blighted districts of great cities will assist the educational process among those who are slowest to learn. It will force the minority of selfish or short-sighted obstructors to fall in with a policy dictated by good sense and decency. Behind this there must be the stimulus of liberal Federal aid. Even with fictitious values knocked out of these blighted land areas, it will take some governmental benevolence to insure a proper land use, especially the necessary 75 percent of open land spaces. Federal aid must be the prod to action, an aid to those who cooperate, a burden to those who resist.

That, however, is the limit of Federal subsidization. The Government cannot pay off on the lottery tickets of urban-land speculation. The country at large, the Federal and State Governments, and the real-estate owners must recognize this truth, or there will be no Federal housing program. We have reached the end of the great American delusion of speculative wealth for all in city real estate. We have our choice of liquidating our folly through slum clearance or through municipal decay.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there appears to be no other Senator who wishes to address the Senate at this time. I am assured that there is a probability that an arrangement looking toward a vote on the resolution relating to the World Court, now before the Senate, may be entered into on the assembling of the Senate tomorrow. Therefore I now move the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in executive session, took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, January 24, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 23, 1935

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord and Father of mankind, in Thee we live and move and have our being. Unite us this day in the spirit of brotherhood, sincerity, and thoroughness of life. These virtues shall fill many a long day with satisfaction and arrest the wandering mind from the fields of regret. We pray that Thou wouldst chasten the pride of our understanding and of our will, and reveal in us a diviner strength and wisdom. Forbid that our usefulness should ever be disfigured or vitiated by indifference or unreality. O God, spread the olive branch over the nations, ere they grasp the red hand of war. O Prince of Peace, come to the peoples of all the earth, we beseech Thee. We wait in prayer for him who, through the years, has rendered sacred the obligations of a public servant. Our truest sympathy and the tenderness of our spirit are with him. Father of Mercy, make him strong and well again, we pray Thee. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1190. An act to regulate interstate and foreign commerce in petroleum and its products by prohibiting the shipment in such commerce of petroleum and its products produced in violation of State law, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill H. R. 3410, entitled "An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and appoints Mr. GLASS, Mr. BYRNES, and Mr. HALE to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order today on Calendar Wednesday be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WORK RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 65, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 65

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 117, a joint resolution making appropriations for relief purposes, and all points of order against said joint resolution are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and shall continue not to exceed 3 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, the joint resolution shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendment shall be in order to said joint resolution except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, and said amendments shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. Amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Appropriations may be offered to any section of the joint resolution at the conclusion of the general debate, but said amendments shall not be subject to amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the joint resolution for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the joint resolution to the House, with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY]. I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 1, line 11, strike out, after the word "be", the remainder of the line; and in line 12, strike out the word "been"; and in line 13, after the word "to", insert "sections 1, 2, and 3 of", so that the resolution will read:

"The joint resolution shall be read for amendment. No amendment shall be in order to sections 1, 2, and 3 of said joint resolution except amendments offered by direction of the Committee on Appropriations", etc.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this is the rule providing for the consideration of what has been called the "work-relief bill", House Joint Resolution 117. It has been much discussed. It is one of the most important measures that has ever come before any Congress and, as is well known, involves an appropriation of $4,800,000,000, four billion of which is to be placed at the disposal of the President in order to relieve the distress throughout the country and place three and a half million unemployed back to work. It is not my purpose to discuss the merits of House Joint Resolution 117, but to call attention to the rule which, as originally offered as House Resolution 65, provided for 3 hours of general debate, but afforded no opportunity for amendments except those offered by the Committee on Appropriations. The amendments which I have just offered by direction of the Committee on Rules, and which have been read at the Clerk's desk, permits the offering of amendments by any Member of the House to sections 4, 5, and 6 of the joint resolution. About these sections there has been some dispute. Some Members have expressed a desire to have an opportunity to offer amendments to these sections. The purpose of my amendment is to afford the Membership that opportunity by opening up the last three sections of the bill to the consideration of the Committees of the Whole and the House. The rule is also changed in the minor aspect that the House joint resolution will be read for amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I am entirely in accord with the amendment suggested by the Chairman of the Rules Committee, because that goes a long way to help us in the contention that we have made against consideration as originally proposed. Will the gentleman kindly state to the House why, if it is necessary to open up these sections, he will not give us an opportunity to discuss freely and amend all of the sections of the joint resolution?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, by providing 3 hours of general debate we have afforded opportunity for discussion, but section 1 is the meat of the joint resolution in my opinion. It provides for the appropriation of $4,000,000,000 and permits its allocation to project, State, or locality as the President shall see fit. It was thought by the Committee on Appropriations and by the Rules Committee that sections of such a nature should not be opened up for "logrolling" by way of earmarking either the amounts or the nature of the projects upon which this huge sum should be expended. That is why it is thought best in considering this measure that only committee amendments be permitted to be offered to that particular section.

I personally do not believe sections 2 and 3 are of such great importance that they should be closed also, but the fact is that desired amendments to them have not been suggested to any extent.

Mr. SNELL. Then I understand it is the policy of the majority that so far as the meat of this whole proposition is concerned, the House shall not have opportunity to express itself; but so far as the trimmings, which do not amount to anything, are concerned, they may be discussed and amendments offered as to them. Is that the policy of the majority?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not believe that is a policy as much as it is a legislative necessity.

Mr. SNELL. That is the statement the gentleman made.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It sounds strange to me to hear criticism come from the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], the leader of the minority, which, when they were in power, when they were a majority, brought in many tariff bills and many tax bills and many another bill under the same kind of a so-called "gag rule" which prevented any amendments whatsoever except those suggested by their own Republican-controlled committee. It depends on who is "in" and who is "out."

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman will admit that we never brought in any bill of this character under such a rule, and I challenge the gentleman to name one bill similar to this that we have brought in here.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I admit no such thing. If the gentleman's party had brought in a similar bill in those dark days of depression between October 1929 and March 1933, we would not be compelled now to go to such an extreme to save our people from further distress and privation. The gentleman and his side of the House will have plenty of opportunity to discuss the joint resolution under general debate, and to oppose it if they dare. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to yield to answer questions after I have completed my main statement, and I wish it understood now that I shall not yield until such time.

Mr. Speaker, we are considering a rule for the consideration of a joint resolution purporting to appropriate money for a public-works project, for the purpose of putting to work the unemployed by such means. If there were such a proposition to be considered in this House, the Republican Party would support it. The Republican Party stands for a full measure of relief for unemployment and the distress resultant from it. It stands for every measure that can be proposed that will promise real recovery. The Republican Party further stands, with respect to relief for unemployment, for relief by work rather than by dole; and if the majority of this House should propose, if the administration would send down a measure for such purpose, and for such purpose alone, it could be passed by acclamation, because there would not be a Republican vote against it. [Applause.] But what is the resolution sought to be made in order by this rule? Let us consider the circumstances under which this appropriation resolution and the power it confers upon the President comes to us. We know that the new deal has two major purposes. We know that one of its purposes, and the one continuously publicized, is to bring about speedy recovery from the economic disaster in which we are and, in the meantime, to provide for relief to alleviate the distress and want and the suffering resultant from the depression. The other purpose, which is not generally discussed publicly, is to take advantage of the condition of depression and its resultant distress and almost despair among the people, to entirely revise and reconstruct the economic and social structure of the American people. Those two purposes have many times been in conflict with one another, and example after example can be cited whereby the second purpose, and attempts to bring it about in these last 2 years, have measurably retarded recovery and nullified the measures that have been taken to speed it up.

Generally speaking, those in the new deal who are known to favor recovery immediately, before anything else, are known as the "right wing." Those who seek rather to take advantage of the depression and who are not concerned about its continuance until what they conceive fundamental reforms in our American Commonwealth can be brought about are known as the "left wing."

Now, what does this resolution that is sought to be made in order provide? It appropriates money for this purpose, and to appropriate money for the purposes enumerated is to give the administration authority to put into effect those purposes, an authority which otherwise it would not have, because it is delegation of the authority vested by the Constitution in the Congress. This is the authority that is vested in the President:

That in order to protect and to promote the general welfare by (1) providing relief from the hardships attributable to wide-spread unemployment and conditions resulting therefrom.

We will vote for any bill, on the Republican side, having that purpose, and with any reasonable expectation of bringing about that result.

(2) Relieving economic maladjustments.

This is left-wing stuff, which has nothing to do with the employment of those who are now out of work, for the purpose of bringing about speedy recovery. That is permanent, all-time reformation of the economic and social set-up of the American people.

(3) Alleviating distress.

Certainly we are for it. That is right-wing stuff. We have no objection to the right-wing program of the new deal. We are for it.

(4) Improving living and working conditions.

Thus the President can do anything with respect to living conditions and working conditions of the American people that he deems in the general welfare, without any let or hindrance except the say-so of the Supreme Court.

What, for example, can the President do under such powers, entirely unnecessary for any public-works project at all? The President, under the power of this joint resolution, can use the money appropriated to condemn and buy every coal mine in the country, and run it as a Government owned and operated industry. He can do the same thing to piano factories, if he wants to. He can prescribe regulation working relations between the Government and those employees who are intended to be put on those building projects, and he can also regulate the relationship between employees and employers in any and all private industries. Under section 6 he can make rules and regulations that will enable him to throw into jail any labor leader who seeks to modify the regulations concerning the relationship between labor and employer that he may have made. There is not any power not granted in this joint resolution that is not, or cannot be, exercised by Stalin, Mussolini, or Hitler. There is no power that any of those three dictators have exercised that is not contained in that resolution.

It gives the President the right to deem what he considers best for the general welfare as described in the preamble of our Constitution, and then gives him $4,000,000,000 with which to do anything he pleases to bring about what he deems for the general welfare.

Under section 2 and section 4, which have nothing to do with public-works projects, he is authorized to deal with relationships of the economics of our social structure, the relationships between employer and employee. He can even regulate where people may choose to live and can put them in jail if they do not follow his wishes in that direction. He can buy up vast tracts running into a number of States, like the Tennessee Valley project, declare them to be submarginal, move the population off and herd them elsewhere on Government land and in Government built and owned houses; can direct them to till Government-owned fields, to work in Government-owned factories; and if they do not do it, they can be put in jail. There is not any act of tyranny that is not possible under this joint resolution.

The answer of the proponents of this legislation is that the President has no intention of using this power in any such fashion at all. If that is the answer they give, then why put such power in this resolution? Why, when this resolution was written in the administration's chambers, were the left-wingers allowed to put this kind of stuff in this resolution that is entirely aside from the proclaimed purpose of the resolution? Why was it permitted? They hope sometime, under some circumstances, to push the President somewhat along the road which these powers open; and this is more to be considered seriously now than it would be under some other circumstances because of the fact that the President since the 4th of March 1933 has not yet laid down a major policy with respect to any activity, either concerning the depression or concerning the carrying on of the Government generally. He has frankly said that it was trial-and-error experiment that he was using. He said he would frankly acknowledge the failure of such experiments and abandon them. Well, failure after failure has been abandoned. The C. W. A. has been abandoned, the N. R. A. as it used to function has been abandoned, but never a word of acknowledgment of error. The people do not know where the President stands. Otherwise it would not be a common occurrence that in places where gamblers meet bets are made as to whether the next utterance of the President of the United States is going to be toward the right or toward the left. Everybody knows that that is the case, that the newspapers, the publicists, and those who lay bets on uncertain events discuss for weeks or for days, when it is known that the President is going to take the air, what he is going to say and which way he is going to turn.

Now, in such circumstances and with a determined group at his elbow which seeks to push us into State socialism completely, which seeks to prescribe labor conditions and strip the workingman of his liberty to choose means for bettering his condition through his organization, which seeks to take away the real and personal property of any industry and run it as a governmental concern, we are asked to legislate to make such aims possible. Are you going to vote for any such delegation of power? If you want relief, bring in a bill that gives relief; if you want work, bring in a bill that gives work; but do not bring in a left-wing measure of this sort. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, whenever there is brought onto the floor of the House a bill in the interest of the American people we can be sure that the Republican leaders will oppose it. I am, indeed, gratified that today they cannot and do not find fault with the rule. The rule has been explained. It is a liberal rule. [Laughter.] It permits amendment. It is a much more liberal rule than Republicans ever brought in when they were in power. [Applause.] Of course, my Republican friends enjoyed working under Cannon rules, which gave the Speaker the full and complete power over the House and to name the committees and dictate what legislation should be considered, but which gave the Membership of the House no right or privilege.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], the leader of the Republican Party, stated that bills of this character were never brought in by the Republicans, and I agree with him. The Republican Party never did bring in any legislation that was beneficial to the masses or to the country. [Applause.] As a rule the legislation in which the gentleman from New York and the Republican leaders are interested is legislation in favor of the special and vested interests of the United States.

The pending joint resolution is in the right direction. The Nation has the utmost confidence in the President of the United States, and I am satisfied that every dollar appropriated will be expended honestly and wisely for the best interests of the Nation. Why, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] said a moment ago that the policy of the President and the new-deal legislation has retarded the recovery of the country. The gentleman himself, as well as the country, knows that even in 1930–31, when the Republicans were in power under the leadership of Hoover, with a Republican Congress and a Republican Senate, they were sitting here in a complete daze and trance without doing a thing, hypnotized by Wall Street, but absolutely ignoring the pleas of the "Main Streets" of the Nation.

President Hoover and your Republican leadership were immune and cold to the appeals for relief legislation, and conditions continued to become worse and worse during 1930, 1931, and 1932.

It was not until the election of President Roosevelt that there were any indications of a change for the better. On March 4, 1933, President Roosevelt took the oath of office and inherited the wreckage of the previous administrations; 16,000,000 people out of work and millions in dire want and despair, and nearly all of the plants, factories, and banks closed in the Nation. These were only a few of the problems confronting him.

Under his leadership we have put at least five to six million men at work. Contrary to your policy of do-nothing-for-relief, we have taken care of unfortunates all over the United States, and the President proposes to continue to do so. His aim is to find employment for all men who are capable of working, thereby taking them off the relief rolls. You pretend you are in favor of relief, but under various pretenses vote against it.

During the entire Seventy-third Congress you Republicans have assailed us because we adopted some special rules to prevent you from delaying legislation recommended by President Roosevelt to save the Nation from complete ruin, despair, and starvation. You tried to mislead the new Members in making them believe that your vote for these rules would mean your downfall and bring about your defeat. And you are pursuing the same tactics today. But what are the actual facts? The first time in the history of our Nation, the Democratic Party in off-election did not reduce its membership, but has made gains in every section of our country, where the Democratic Party and the Democratic candidates stood by the record of the President and the Democratic Congress, and thereby given approval to our action and the now, by you, despised rule, which secretly you admit is necessary for expeditious legislation.

May I say one or two words to the new Members who feel that the Rules Committee can amend the bills that are submitted or recommended to the committee? The Rules Committee has no such power. All the Rules Committee can do is to grant a rule on a bill recommended by committee, which is your committee, after the committee has given consideration to such legislation and requests such rule.

So do not be misled by the despairing Republicans, who have not yours or the country's interests at heart, but are only trying vainly to create political capital. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DRIVER].

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oregon seems seriously disturbed because there is in progress a very considerable transformation in the affairs of our Nation covering the past 2 years. The Democratic Party and its administration is to be congratulated that such is the fact and now admitted by our friends the enemy.

The argument directed to this rule is against section 1, which carries the authority to the administrative leader of this Nation, by virtue of an expression from its electorate, to allocate $4,000,000,000 to continue the very wonderful recovery work which he has performed during the last 2 years. The minority objects and says that this section of the bill should be thrown open to amendment and that the great power should not be vested in any one man, though he be the Executive. [Applause.]

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this section cannot possibly be amended and yet accomplish the purpose that is in the mind of the Executive. It is impossible for us to earmark any portion of this money and enable the Executive to accomplish the purposes he desires. His announced policy is to employ 3,500,000 idle employables in our Nation on projects that will leave in the various communities values which can be appreciated and which inure by reason of the expenditure of this Federal fund. It is his further purpose to prosecute this work only until industry may absorb this number of idle people. May I ask how it is possible under the circumstances to earmark one special fund which every Member of this House is interested in—namely, the road fund—or the funds that will be provided for slum clearance and the various other activities that will be engaged in with the fund made available to the Chief Executive?

These projects may cover only a very limited area. It is hoped that that will be done. We are not in a position to apologize to any one person for the very wonderful progress that we have made in the way of restoring favorable economic conditions in the Nation. It is true, and we must admit, that the improvement is not spread over the country to a like extent. There are sore spots yet that we must give attention to. There are in some places many unemployed people. There are other places, it is my pleasure to say, where that condition has been practically eliminated.

May I point to the great improvement in the agricultural regions where for the first time in the past 4 years people engaged in such pursuits were able to handle some real dollars flowing from the operation of their industry. The same thing is true in many of the industrial sections of our country. There has been great recovery, but there are spots, we must admit, where the recovery is not spread in equal proportion; therefore, it will be necessary in the proper administration of this fund for the application of so much of it as may be necessary to such particular places and only to the extent that it may be used until further recovery in such particular areas may be accomplished.

So far as the administrative features of this bill are concerned, no one will have reason to complain. We throw that wide open to the Members of the House to make such amendments as in their wisdom and judgment they may deem proper to make. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, this rule has a little more sugar coating than it originally had, but it is still a gag rule, and the three most important sections of the bill are not open to amendment.

I do not object to the President's having the power to expend these funds. I think, perhaps, that the President should have this power, but I do say that this resolution should be left open to amendment so that the Members of this House who believe that an adequate amount of money should be appropriated for public works, may have the power to offer amendments and express their views by their recorded votes.

I also protest against the provisions of the rule that do not permit us to strike out the paragraphs of the resolution that nullify the civil-service law and the Classification Act.

I also wish to say that we will not have an opportunity, under the provisions of this rule, to offer an amendment which will guarantee to those who are placed in employment, as a result of this resolution, a wage equal at least to the prevailing wage in their respective communities, because by the time we reach the place where this resolution is opened for amendment we will have passed the place where such an amendment, in my opinion, is germane and in order. If this resolution were broad enough to employ the 11,000,000 people who are out of employment, then there would not be such great necessity for making provision that the wages should be at least equal to the prevailing wage but because it anticipates employing only about three and a half million of the more than eleven million unemployed, we should have a provision in the resolution to the effect that the wages paid employees under this resolution shall be at least equal to the prevailing wage in such communities.

This is a gag rule. I compliment and commend the members of the Democratic Party who forced at least some concessions, but you have not gone far enough and in the name of true democracy we ought to open these bills and resolutions hereafter for amendment in order to give the people of the country an opportunity to be heard. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Members of the House that in the first session of the Seventy-third Congress, in 1933, we passed another important measure under a gag rule similar to this one. That measure was the so-called "economy bill", which is now conceded to have been unjust and ill-advised. The majority of the Members who voted for a gag rule at that time have either been apologizing or explaining their vote ever since.

I am strongly in favor of adequate relief legislation, but I am unalterably opposed to the enactment of legislation delegating broad powers and appropriating billions of dollars under rules which practically prohibit all debate and prevent the discussion of questions which are vitally important to the welfare of our people. This measure should have deliberate and mature consideration by this legislative body, and such consideration is impossible under the gag rule proposed. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GREENWOOD].

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I have only 5 minutes, and I should like to use that time in making my statement and do not desire to yield.

This is going to be one of the most important measures that is to come before the Congress. It is continuing the program of relief which has been undertaken by legislation of a former Congress.

The emergency of unemployment still exists. One of those who spoke against the rule said that the rule should now be changed because the emergency "should be over", but the emergency is not over, and it will take the efforts of the President in the expenditure of these relief funds to help sweep aside this emergency and bring us back to where employment can be had.

This situation was inherited by this administration from a former administration——

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENWOOD. I said I did not intend to yield, because I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. MOTT. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I did not hear him say that.

Mr. GREENWOOD. And we are continuing a program which has been begun. A lump-sum appropriation is desired because the unemployment is not uniformly scattered geographically or as between classes of industry.

The President feels, and I think he is justified in the feeling, he should have this fund so that he can shift it from one class of projects to another or from one section to another to relieve the unemployment as he finds such a situation needs solution. Could you or I undertake to earmark any particular portion of this fund so it would take care of the unemployment in the most adequate manner? We might satisfy our constituents concerning some project that we hold dear to our hearts, but in the final analysis, in the use of these funds, it might be found that this money should be used in another section or for another class of projects in order to relieve unemployment and satisfy the emergency in the best possible manner.

My friend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] seemed to be greatly alarmed that there would be an economic readjustment. God knows the time has come in this country when there should be some readjustment.

Industry had the opportunity to provide reserves and funds to take care of the unemployed—in their particular class—but they saw fit rather to declare unusual stock dividends and distribute excessive profits.

When the depression came, was there an industrial leader from New Jersey or any other section that came forward to plan a relief situation? No; they closed the factories and took to the storm cellar; and when the man in the White House proposes a plan to bring relief, they are against any new methods or formulas; they are opposed to it. I am one who believes that there should be new methods and new formulas—that we are not going back to the old system of profit taking that existed in the previous administration.

I am willing to follow the President. I am willing to follow him in continuance of the work to bring about relief for the unemployed.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Indiana is not talking to the rule. We who are opposed have been denied an opportunity to present our objections to the rule, and the gentleman from Indiana has been given time and he is discussing the merits of the proposed legislation and not the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will proceed in order.

Mr. SHANNON. I want a ruling by the Chair as to whether he is in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I appreciate the fact that I was proceeding in order as much as every other man who has spoken on the other side.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield? What I want to ask is when are those who are opposed to the gag rule going to get any time?

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman can go to the committee and get time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania use his time now?

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I find it very difficult to speak in a calm and temperate manner upon this most intemperate measure. During the many years that I have been in Congress this is the worst piece of legislation that has ever come before the House. It is an abomination of desolation. What I want to know at the outset of my remarks is this: Who sponsored this legislation?

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman wants to know?

Mr. FISH. Who is the author of this legislation?

Mr. SABATH. The President of the United States.

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman speak with authority?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman say that the President of the United States approves everything that was in this original joint resolution? I wait for an answer.

Mr. SABATH. The principle of the resolution has been recommended, as the gentleman knows, and requested, in the message of the President to the Congress.

Mr. FISH. Then I ask the gentleman who recommended this resolution to the President for his approval?

Mr. SABATH. The people, because of the conditions in the Nation.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, the American people are entitled to know who sponsored this vicious and un-American resolution, who wrote it, and who was behind it before it reached the President of the United States. I have too high a regard for the Membership of the House, particularly the Democratic side, to think for one moment that any Democrat in Congress had anything to do with writing this resolution and thereby helping to betray a constitutional trust and violate his oath of office. This proposed legislation has not been before the House 48 hours. No Member of Congress on either side had anything to do with preparing it, and yet we are told under this gag rule to take this resolution, written by unknown authors, whether the "brain trust" or not I do not know, and rush it through, practically without a hearing, and abdicate 90 percent of the remaining legislative powers of the Congress. The resolution should read:

Making appropriations to destroy representative government, to establish a dictatorial government similar to fascism, Hitlerism, communism, and every other "ism" except Americanism.

You have been elected Members of this House, and you know that I am apt to criticize measures emanating from the majority party when I believe they are unsound, unworkable, and socialistic. At the Republican caucus the other night, conferring on this joint resolution, some Member said, "Oh, you cannot depend upon the Democrats, only 40 or 50 will vote against the bill." I said that I believe there will be twice that number of liberty-loving, Jeffersonian Democrats who have no patronage collar around their necks who will vote against it without fear or favor unless substantially amended. They were not sent here to vote away all of their legislative power at the request of the "brain trust" or the President. It is not a question of the $4,000,000,000. I do not believe in quibbling over sums. I am for the four billion and I would be for five billion if necessary, although I think provision for raising revenue should be included. That is not the real question. The question is the maintenance of representative government and the constitutional powers of the House. You propose to strip yourselves naked, to abdicate the control of the purse and to leave the Members of Congress without any more legislative clothes than Gandhi. The passage of this will make the Members who vote for it a laughing-stock, not only as rubber stamps in Congress, but a laughing-stock as legislators in their own districts. If you persist in voting for this resolution to deprive the House of the only real power it has, the control over appropriations, you stultify yourself and impair the dignity, prestige, and authority of the House of Representatives and might just as well vote to abolish the Committee on Appropriations, if not the House itself. That was the main reason for its existence, its very lifeblood, and now, because some people, we do not know who, have recommended this resolution to the President—and we are unable to find out who they are—the Democratic leaders are ordered to jam the resolution through regardless of the Constitution or our representative form of government. There is no emergency which warrants such action. If there were a war and a foreign army were invading our shores and we had to act in 24 hours, it might present a different situation, but that is not the situation we are confronted with. There are ample funds available in the Treasury to carry on the relief work for several months. There is plenty of time for hearings.

Let me tell you—because your own leaders, who are leading you astray, will not tell you—this resolution, if you pass it, will make a joke and a travesty of the House of Representatives, and it will be kicked full of holes by the Senate of the United States. We will not be able to even recognize it when it comes back and you Members of the House will be left holding the bag. You will be responsible not only for taking away your own legislative powers but for destroying representative government and the liberties of the people—the constitutional liberties of the people given to this House by the founders and framers of the Federal Constitution—and leave the House of Representatives nothing but a shadow and a name.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield. Let us forget completely about the question of the $4,000,000,000. I have voted for every appropration for relief, but nothing in the world could make me vote for this resolution as it is, and probably even if it is amended. I refuse to be a party to destroying the constitutional powers of the House and impairing its constitutional functions and capacity to legislate by taking away the paramount power that is left to it, the control of the purse strings.

The shades of the great men who have served in this House, of Clay, Calhoun, and Webster, the shades of the men who fought for this identical principle of parliamentary control over the purse strings—of John Hampden in England, Mirabeau in France, and James Otis in our own country! Now, when there is no emergency, you Democrats are going to be driven in like a lot of sheep and compelled to destroy the fundamental principles of the Government, the foundation stones of the separate powers of the Government, and help set up some new form of government, whether fascism or Hitlerism of the right, or socialism or communism of the left. One thing we know for certain, and that is, it is not Americanism. That is the vote that you are called upon to cast; and if you put it through for political reasons, it will be the most evil and the darkest day that the House of Representatives has ever seen. Has the flame of liberty burned so low that Members of this House will sacrifice and betray their own constitutional rights at the bidding of the White House? If this legislation did not mean sacrificing the rights of the American people, the country, and the House of Representatives we of the minority would say, "More power to you." Rush into this disaster, put it through, and assume the responsibility before the people for deliberately changing our form of government and giving this uncontrolled power into the hands of a superman, a benevolent despot, if you will, and certify by your vote your incapacity, your incompetence to legislate intelligently and within the bounds of reason and moderation. The matter is in your hands. It is for you to decide whether our free institutions have failed and that we must set up an autocratic and dictatorial government; and if you decide wrongly, it will be an evil day for America. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] asked, "Who recommended this to the President?" Nobody. He asked, "Who suggested it to him?" Nobody. The President of the United States does his own suggesting; he does his own recommending; he does his own thinking; he does his own initiating; he charts out his own program; and the gentleman from New York is not used to that kind of procedure.

After the President determines his program, he has ways and means of putting it into execution. Naturally, he disclosed and evolved his plans to Democratic leaders. Very naturally, he called down to the White House our colleague from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and told him in detail just what kind of bill he would like for Congress to pass—that with which he could put his plans into execution and carry out his program, but without which his program would be impossible.

After learning the President's desires, and being willing to follow the wishes and mandate of the American people, who want the President to be given what he requires, it was an easy matter to have the legislative drafting service translate into this bill the exact provisions wanted by the President. If the Democrats in this House had not had confidence in the President, and had not been willing to trust him, and had not realized that the people back home whom we serve here want us to back the President, there would be no bill such as the one now before us for passage.

The people of the United States did not select the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] or the gentleman from Texas, who now addresses you, to lead them. We were selected from one district only. They selected Franklin D. Roosevelt [applause] as the Moses to lead them from bondage and out of the wilderness. Oh, we had grumblings back in the days of Moses. There were some who did not like his leadership. But those who followed Moses got out of the wilderness, and they had plenty of milk and honey as their reward. Here and there and from across the aisle we hear grumblings now. We have here some of those who want to do the leading. They do not like to follow. They want their own way. They are stubborn and perverse.

I have some very definite ideas of my own. I might espouse an entirely different kind of measure. I might have a different kind of program. I might be in favor of this and against that. But I am not in the White House. The 125,000,000 Americans did not elect me as their leader. But when my constituents elected me, they understood that I was backing their President on his economic policies. I would be an embezzler of power if I came here now and refused or failed to back the President.

Every Democrat whose constituents elected him to back the present administration now has a chance to fulfill that duty; now has a chance to carry out the mandate of the people back home. I should hate for the President's recovery program to fail because I had voted against and thereby denied him essential and necessary means he had requested. Regardless of how I think, regardless of my own program, regardless of my own definite ideas, I feel that it is my duty to carry out the wish and will of the people and to give to the President the means to execute his plans. I am backing the policy of my President at this time and I am going to vote for this rule. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] on the question of who recommended this measure. For 12 years prior to the election of President Roosevelt there was never any question in the mind of anyone as to who were the advisers of the President. It was a group of men interested either in some tariff proposal or some special concession made to the capitalistic group of the country, and this advice has resulted in our present panic conditions.

This proposal is the result of the composite advice of the men who are standing back of the President of the United States with the interest of the people of the United States in their hearts. In the last 2 years those same advisers have raised this country from the depths of the abyss, from the maelstrom which we were in, to the present condition in which the gentleman from New York said there was no emergency. If that remark of the gentleman is true—that there is no emergency now—what a difference it is to the condition which obtained 2 years ago. If that condition does exist, it is due to those advisers who are so diametrically opposed to the advisers of the predecessor of President Roosevelt.

But, gentlemen, there is an emergency. We are not out of the woods yet. This measure calls for the appropriation of $4,000,000,000, not for 1 year but for 2 years. It is a less appropriation than we have been called upon in the past to vote for in carrying out these relief measures. There is no comprehensive building program that can be completed in 1 year. Therefore, we have to provide for 2 years. The departments must know how much they will have, and this is the way it must be done. It is far less than you gentlemen have appropriated before; and if we stand back of the President for the next 2 years, as we have stood in the past, by 1936 the President, with his advisers, will, I believe, have taken this country to a place where there is no emergency. [Applause.]

Gentlemen have spoken about Congress losing its liberty. Well, gentlemen, I was in this Congress during the last Hoover administration session, when we had all the liberty that we could have. We had so much liberty that we went all directions at once. They talk about losing Congressional prestige. Congressional prestige went to the lowest ebb, at the close of the Seventy-second Congress, that it has been to for many years, because we exercised so much liberty. You men who were here when Judge Crisp was trying to pass the revenue measure know that we all turned it into a log-rolling on both sides. It was not all on one side. We all went in to get our districts taken care of. The result was that we had a conglomerate measure that nobody wanted to sponsor after the hearing. If we adopt any measure that will permit the emasculation of this bill——

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I refuse to yield. I only have a few minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I only wanted to ask the gentleman if the low-ebb Congress he was speaking of was not in the control of the Democratic Party and Mr. John N. Garner was Speaker?

Mr. HARLAN. I will say that Mr. Garner was Speaker and that some days we had a majority of one, and part of the time you would have a majority. We had no leadership; no party had any control. [Laughter.] We had a President in the White House who did not have the nerve to come before this Congress and make any suggestion on a revenue measure. [Applause.] He only made a suggestion on the last day that that bill was before the Senate; but that is not in issue. We have before us today, gentlemen, only one question. If recovery is desirable, this is the only way we can have it. The single question is, Do you want recovery or not? These dollars are the soldiers that we are to use in this war on depression.

The President, who is our commander in chief, must be allowed to send those soldiers at the time they are needed, at the place they are needed, and not be hampered by a body of men sitting here 2 years before they will have to be sent. It is humanly impossible for us to adopt now any regulation that will be effective.

The gentleman from New York is disturbed because he believes that this bill will lead us into communism. He has been chasing Communists out of every bush for the last 4 years. The one and only way that these hobgoblins of his imagination will materialize is for capitalism to fail to supply human beings with food, clothing, and shelter. If capitalism fails in this respect, communism will come regardless of anything we do or do not do. If we do not pass the present bill, there is no other measure offered to supply the needy with necessaries. The failure of this bill, and not its passage, will bring us much nearer to communism than the most nervous dreams of the gentleman from New York have ever conjured.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN] has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, feeling that the Republican minority has shed a sufficient volume of crocodile tears over the fear of "the destruction of our Government" by putting our people back to work, I move the previous question on the resolution and the amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the previous question be ordered?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 257, nays 142, not voting 31, as follows:

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call my name.

The Clerk called Mr. BYRNS' name, and he voted "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. GREGORY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. CARY, is unavoidably absent today and has requested me to announce that if he had been present he would have voted "yea" on the matter just presented.

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, for the past 2 years I have consistently voted for all appropriations of moneys for relief purposes, including those for public works and direct relief. I am today, however, voting against this measure before the House which comes to us under the misnomer of "making appropriations for relief purposes."

I will go as far as the President says is necessary in making appropriations to care for the unemployed and needy, but I will refuse to vote for any more measures that take from Congress the powers granted to it under the Constitution and rest them in the President and permit him to delegate the powers conferred on him under this joint resolution to any governmental agency, including a corporation, as provided for in section 4 thereof.

Let us analyze this legislation in a sane and sensible manner and not act too hastily on it. The resolution was introduced but 2 days ago. Brief and secret hearings of but 2 hours' duration were had on it. The witnesses who appeared before the committee were the Secretary of the Treasury, the Acting Budget Director, and the Chief of the Treasury's Procurement Division. No comprehensive plan for the spending of this huge sum to relieve unemployment was presented by any of these men. I recall that we were asked in June 1933 to appropriate $3,300,000,000 for a Public Works program under similar conditions. The wastes and delays that resulted from the uncoordinated and hastily planned projects of the C. W. A. have most certainly demonstrated the need for a carefully prepared plan on which to use the huge sum requested in the resolution. When the C. W. A. program was being carried on Mr. Hopkins, the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator, is quoted as saying:

Some of our directors are incompetent, some of our projects are lousy, the whole thing is a flop, and I know it.

With that experience, are we going to rush into the appropriating of even more money without first planning its expenditure?

The first three sections of the resolution, with some minor changes, are acceptable to me, but I cannot and will not, as a representative of more than 290,000 people, who sent me here to legislate for them, vote for sections 4, 5, and 6, and further delegate my constitutional duties and responsibilities as a Representative to an appointive public official.

Under section 4, paragraph (d), which reads as follows:

The President is authorized to postpone, but not beyond June 30, 1937, the termination of the existence of any existing governmental agency, including a corporation—

The Congress would delegate to the President the legislative power of continuing the operation of emergency set-ups in the Government, including the N. R. A., without any further action upon the part of either the House or the Senate. Rubber stamps, you say—why, it is far worse than that; it is a violation of our oath of office. If this measure passes in its present form, Congress may as well adjourn.

Under paragraph (e) of the same section, Congress proposes to authorize the President, in turn, to delegate the powers conferred upon him to any governmental agency, including a corporation, and, under section 6, it authorizes the President, or any governmental agency named by him, to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the resolution, and any violation of such rules and regulations shall be punishable by a fine of not to exceed $5,000, or imprisonment for not to exceed 2 years, or both. We would thus have a situation whereby an appointive governmental officer would be given a power vested in Congress under the Constitution, to prescribe rules and regulations which, in effect, would be laws, and under those rules and regulations to fine and sentence to the penitentiary any citizen who violated them, and this without even a trial.

We talk of Mussolini, Hitler, or Stalin as being dictators and having dictatorial powers. If this resolution becomes a law, Congress will have granted to the President, and his appointees, during the past 2 years, practically all of its constitutional powers, and may as well adjourn and go home.

Again I repeat that I will go as far as may be necessary in the appropriation of Federal moneys for relief purposes, but I refuse to violate my oath of office, and cravenly surrender the obligations imposed upon me by the Constitution as a Member of Congress.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, this resolution (H. J. Res. 117) will turn over nominally to the President, but admittedly to Secretary Ickes, the Public Works Administrator, the sum of $4,000,000,000 to be disbursed in such manner as seems to him most desirable. It will, of course, be an abdication of the legislative power of Congress and in violation of the Constitution. Not a Member of this House will have any voice or influence as to where this money goes or as to how it is expended. The combined experience of the Members of the House is thrown into the discard and a political marplot will be in the driver's seat. Congress will again become the laughing-stock of the country and Honest Harold will continue to give Members of Congress the toe of his boot when they attempt to obtain public improvements for their sections.

Ickes has wasted several billions of the people's money. He has tied up a vast sum in projects which in their very nature defeat unemployment relief. To hear him tell it, he is the only honest man in the history of the American Government. He writes off Congress in the public press, charging it with being a pork-seeking group. In one year he has allocated more to rivers and harbors than Congress did in a hundred years. In one year he has done more to destroy the American farmer by unsound reclamation projects, which Congress has repeatedly turned down, than Congress has allowed for that purpose in a hundred years. He says without qualification that honesty in the Government service began when he entered public life. In the same breath he perpetrates a deliberate fraud on the Congress and the country when he writes down the Grand Coulee project as power when in fact it is reclamation. This project was rejected by Congress or its committees on several occasions, and was then placed in work by Honest Harold. While the country is plowing crops under, this gentleman is bringing 1,200,000 new acres into production at a cost of $100,000,000. This against the protest of the National Grange and the technicians of the Agricultural Department. Congress repeatedly turned down Casper Alcova, a Wyoming reclamation project, but Honest Harold at one fell stroke of the pen put this project into work.

Honest Harold will spend $50,000,000 at Fort Peck Reservoir in Montana. I am creditably advised that it will take 7 years to fill this reservoir. Few Members of Congress ever heard of it. Honest Harold says that he is as "pure as the driven snow", and to demonstrate that and the imperfections of others, he maintains an elaborate espionage system on Cabinet officers and Members of Congress. The distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] stated the other day that Honest Harold is the most hated and despised man connected with the Government at the present time. I agree with the gentleman and desire to add that Honest Harold has fully demonstrated that he is entirely without the necessary training and experience to erect a sizable gasoline filling station.

"Whom the gods would destroy they first make mad." No more perfect evidence of this could be found than in Honest Harold's attempt to dictate to the people of the city of New York how they should run their affairs. Recently an order was entered which forbade any man in the municipal service from being connected with any part of the Public Works program. This is, of course, a definite invasion of local government. It throws into the discard the technicians and engineers who have studied local problems through the years.

However, the sole purpose of this order was to drive Park Commissioner Robert Moses off the Tri-Borough Bridge Commission where $42,000,000 are being expended for a bridge at New York City. Honest Harold has done many stupid things. Time will tell whether or not some of them are venal and whether he deserves the self-inflicted appellation of Honest Harold. But nothing he has done is so thoroughly contemptible as his invasion of the autonomy of New York City.

Who is Robert Moses? He is a career man, who has devoted his entire life to the public service. When Governor Smith reorganized the government of New York and established the budget system his right arm was this same Robert Moses. He wrote the statutes that made for efficient government. He then came into charge of the park system of New York State. His achievements in that field were epoch making. When Mayor LaGuardia appointed his cabinet he made Robert Moses park commissioner. The construction of a great metropolitan bridge such as the Tri-Borough involves the coordination of parkways and avenues. Robert Moses was appointed to the Tri-Borough Bridge authority and has served there with distinction and ability. He has created parks and bathing pools in the congested sections of New York. He beautified the existing parks, and his work in this respect was recognized as being most extraordinary. It was all done without additional expense to the taxpayer.

Last fall he was nominated for Governor on the Republican ticket. Millions of the people's money were poured into New York to defeat him. In the campaign his spear knew no brother. One of his targets was Jim Farley. Candidate Moses had no illusions about "Big Jim." On Saturday, November 3, at the city of New York, he made the following statement concerning him:

For some reason I always think of geology when I think of Jim Farley. You begin with rock or granite. That's the basic thing his head is made of. The granite breaks up and forms sand or gravel. This, in turn, is glued together to make sandstone, bricks, and other materials, and, lo and behold! you have Sandbag Jim Farley of the Builders Supply Corporation and National and State Democratic Committees, and last, and by all means least, the United States Postoffice Department.

What a lad! He arrives here, like John the Baptist, in a camel's-hair overcoat, announcing the coming of the political savior from Washington—a voice crying out in the wilderness of the Hudson River brick sheds and echoing through the valleys and up the hills of the State.

And, still speaking of geology, he reminds me of those glacial streams which meander, in a tortuous course, through the valleys and cover all the plains with the wreckage, the muck, and filth of dirty politics, patronage, and graft.

On October 19, in an interview published in the New York Times, emphasizing a former statement that Farley was the "bag man" of the administration, Moses stated:

It is no answer to my statements to say that Jim Farley's firm only got a fraction of the building contracts. Everyone knows that the General Builders Supply people control most of the building materials in this community outside of gravel, sand, and trap rock, and that they have intimate relations with the people who control that branch. The General Builders Supply is a good deal of a racket. If you plan to build anything, you play with them, or you don't build.

Robert Moses served as secretary of state, by appointment of Governor Smith. Speaking on that subject, Candidate Moses said among other things:

I had him (Farley) on the athletic commission when I was secretary of state and I had so little confidence in him that I sent for the three commissioners and said that any question on which they are not unanimous would be decided by me. That's what I thought of Jim Farley. Farley must be describing himself when he talks about ghouls in American politics, because if there ever was a figure to be associated with the decay and death of the principles upon which this Government rests, it is James A. Farley.

It is clear that these references to the Postmaster General stung him deeply. It is equally clear that the present order which Honest Harold issued in regard to Robert Moses was issued at the behest, and perhaps the command, of Farley. At the beginning of this administration, the underground was that Farley and Ickes did not hit it off. This rift between these two formidable characters has completely disappeared and we now find Ickes, who maligns the men who shed their blood on the battlefields of the Revolutionary and Civil Wars by stating that patriotism in America began with him, in the camp of genial Jim. What a spectacle! May I state in addition, that this type of technique is thoroughly "Farleyan." Through the now submissive Ickes, Farley is driving Robert Moses out of public life so far as he can accomplish it. He is doing this against the united protests of 147 civic and business organizations in the city of New York who have protested in thunder tones against this invasion of local self-government. Irrespective of party and without regard to station, from the newsboy to the magnate, the citizens of New York are up in arms against this outrageous performance.

Hand this $4,000,000,000 to Honest Harold and every section of the country will be subject to the coercion of the mugwumpian Ickes and the nimble Farley. Incidentally, and repeating what I said before on the floor of the House, in doing this you are laying the foundation of a fascism where there will be no personal liberty and no Congressmen. In the beginning, this was the way Mussolini and Hitler wrote off popular government. In Italy and Germany today there is neither parliamentary body nor free press.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the rule and will vote for House Joint Resolution 117 because I am convinced that great good will result to the American people, including the citizens of my district, from the expenditure of the funds thereby provided—$4,880,000,000—to enable President Roosevelt to carry forward his work relief program.

I am particularly gratified that Rear Admiral Christian J. Peoples, director, Procurement Division, United States Treasury Department, in his testimony at the hearing before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, emphasized the fact that probably no other type of necessary Public Works expenditures will show a greater proportion for labor than that embraced in Rivers and Harbors and Flood Control Works, of which there are a number of very worthy and meritorious projects pending and contemplated in southwest Washington.

Mr. Speaker, the problem of flood control, which has heretofore been confined principally to the Mississippi and Sacramento Valleys, has become Nation-wide. During the past 2 years very disastrous floods resulting in vast loss of property running into many millions of dollars and some loss of life have occurred in almost every State. In order that we may realize more fully the scope and magnitude of the problem we have to deal with, I am going to call attention to the following list of flood disasters compiled from United States Army Engineer and Red Cross sources:

SOUTHWEST WASHINGTON FLOOD, DECEMBER 1933

According to official advices from Brig. Gen. George B. Pillsbury, Assistant Chief of United States Army Engineers, under date of November 28, 1934, the damages caused by the floods of December 1933 were as follows:

|---|---|
| Cowlitz River Basin | $3,340,000 |
| Lewis River Basin | 645,000 |
| Lower Columbia River | 450,000 |
| Chehalis River | 300,000 |
| Crooked, Grays, and Deep Rivers | 31,000 |
| Deschutes River | 9,000 |
| Humptulips River | 7,000 |

FEDERAL AID SECURED

We succeeded in obtaining through Harry L. Hopkins, Administrator of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, funds for repair work, which was the first aid ever extended to our district by the Federal Government, as follows:

Clark County

|---|---|
| Expended for labor | $13,857.55 |
| Expended for material | 51.15 |
| Expended for equipment | 564.60 |
| Total C. W. A. expenditures | 14,473.30 |
| Total expended on project | 14,773.30 |

Number of men employed, 200.

Cowlitz County

|---|---|
| Expended for labor | $63,193.05 |
| Expended for material | 55,005.36 |
| Expended for equipment | 3,197.68 |
| Total C. W. A. expenditures | 121,396.09 |
| Total expended on project | 121,396.09 |

Number of men employed, 1,833.

Grays Harbor County

|---|---|
| Expended for labor | $19,851.80 |
| Expended for material | 4,650.00 |
| Total C. W. A. expenditures | 24,501.80 |
| Total expended on project | 24,501.80 |

Number of men employed, 482.

Lewis County

|---|---|
| Expended for labor | $31,088.80 |
| Expended for material | 1,485.36 |
| Total C. W. A. expenditures | 32,574.16 |
| Total expended on project | 33,124.02 |

Number of men employed, 775.

Mason County

|---|---|
| Expended for labor | $14,782.65 |
| Expended for material | 556.40 |
| Total C. W. A. expenditures | 15,339.05 |
| Total expended on project | 15,625.65 |

Number of men employed, 218.

Pacific County

|---|---|
| Expended for labor | $11,910.57 |
| Total C. W. A. expenditures | 11,910.57 |
| Total expended on project | 11,910.57 |

Number of men employed, 267.

Skamania County

|---|---|
| Expended for labor | $10,991.18 |
| Expended for material | 181.60 |
| Expended for equipment | 22.50 |
| Total C. W. A. expenditures | 11,195.28 |
| Total expended on project | 11,360.28 |

Number of men employed, 350.

Thurston County

|---|---|
| Expended for labor | $16,564.55 |
| Expended for material | 1,494.94 |
| Total C. W. A. expenditures | 18,059.49 |
| Total expended on project | 19,415.39 |

Number of men employed, 427.

Wahkiakum County

|---|---|
| Expended for labor | $5,550.00 |
| Expended for material | 1,000.05 |
| Total C. W. A. expenditures | 6,550.05 |
| Total expended on project | 6,550.05 |

Number of men employed, 215.

Recapitulation

|---|---|
| Expended for labor | $187,790.15 |
| Expended for material | 64,424.89 |

| Total expended on projects | 255,657.15 |

Number of men employed, 4,777.

LEGISLATION FOR SURVEYS PASSED

We also succeeded in securing the passage through Congress of Public Laws Nos. 336, 337, 338, and 339, to provide preliminary examinations of the Cowlitz, Chehalis, Lewis, and Columbia Rivers and their tributaries with a view to the control of their floods, which is the first legislation of this character affecting the rivers of southwest Washington which has ever been enacted. These preliminary examinations are now being made by the United States Army Engineers, and under date of December 22, 1934, I was notified by Maj. Gen. E. M. Markham, Chief of Engineers, United States Army Engineers, in regard to their present status as follows:

The district engineer at Seattle, Wash., has reported that his report on preliminary examination of Chehalis River will be ready for submission to the division engineer at Portland, Oreg., about April 1, 1935. The district engineer at Portland will submit his reports on investigations of the Lewis, Cowlitz, and Columbia Rivers, to the division engineer at Portland, about February 25. The reports of the district and division engineers, when received in this office, must be reviewed by the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors, prior to their transmission to Congress by the Secretary of War, with my recommendations. I may assure you that the reports will be expedited in every way consistent with their proper study.

FLOODS DURING PAST 30 YEARS

Floods have occurred recurrently in southwest Washington every few years during the past 30 years. The reports of the United States Army Engineers show the following flood records:

COWLITZ RIVER

During the past 25 years eight floods of a damaging nature have occurred in the Cowlitz Basin.

Under date of November 16, 1906, the Portland Oregonian stated that the flood at that time was the highest known, the river at Kelso reaching a stage of 20.5 feet above low water. This account undoubtedly had reference to the highest known Cowlitz River flood, as the Columbia River flood of 1894 probably exceeded this height at Kelso.

Cowlitz River floods of a damaging nature occurred in 1906, 1909, 1911, 1912, 1918, 1923—when Longview Bridge was washed out—1927, 1928.

The flood of 1906 was very destructive. In the Kelso vicinity it caused damages to an estimated extent of $50,000, including the loss of the drawspan of the highway bridge over the river at that locality. At Castle Rock the same flood cut a new channel through the low peninsula upon which a portion of the town is situated, destroying a number of residences on the lowlands of the town, and also washed away about 150 acres of land bordering the stream above. The total amount of damages in the vicinity was $60,000. Floods of other years have caused loss of land from erosion at a number of localities, loss of fences bordering the stream, carrying away of log booms, and so forth. The yearly losses have never been less than $5,000.

Three means might be made available for protecting Cowlitz Valley lands from loss from Cowlitz River floods. These are: First, detention reservoirs; second, reservoirs for power and flood control combined; third, levees, bank protection, and channel clearing, straightening, and deepening.

As organizations within counties for protective purposes are practicable, there appears to be no reasons for removing the solution of problems of Cowlitz River flood control from local hands. The Federal Government is not considered justified in bearing a part of the cost of such works (Dec. 11, 1930).

LEWIS RIVER

The Lewis River floods, of a more or less damaging nature, occur practically every winter; during some years two or more damaging floods have occurred.

Flood conditions on the bottom lands along Lewis River below Woodland have resulted in damages to crops and farm property by submergence, to business by interruption of traffic, and to the public well-being by closing of schools and discomfort in living conditions.

Levees at higher grade and storage dams recommended as protective measures.

Bearing of any part of the cost of works for flood control on Lewis River, either storage or levees, by the Federal Government is not considered justified (Dec. 13, 1930).

COLUMBIA RIVER

The flood of 1894 was one of the greatest on record, severe floods occurring every 3 to 4 years.

1923: Higher levees considered as most suitable method for protection of lands in flooded areas.

While flood protection of the lowlands along the tidal section of Columbia River is a matter of concern to the owners and cultivators of the land and of importance to the States of Oregon and Washington through affording means of augmenting the assets of those States, national interest justifying expenditure of funds of the general public in works for flood control or protection of these lands is not present. This case is unlike that of the lower Mississippi Valley, where the area of land subject to overflow is enormous, occurring in many States, and where works of flood protection in one State have adversely affected the conditions in another.

In the lower Columbia case both Oregon and Washington and their citizens can proceed with flood-control plans without fear of adverse effects produced by or in the other State. Nor does the fact that the waters of the lower Columbia come from several States constitute a reason why the general Government should participate in the cost of flood control in the tidal section of the river. No upstream State or agency will, in connection with river flow or works, take action adversely affecting the right of the lowlands in the lower river. On the other hand, some benefits, as stated, may flow from power development and irrigation in the upper river (Mar. 29, 1932).

CHEHALIS RIVER

The most severe flood of record occurred in November 1909. Other floods came in December 1891, 1892, 1897, 1903, March 21, 1908, January 1914, December 21, 1915, 1917, and January 1923. In other words, floods have occurred at the rate of one every 4 years.

The flood of 1897 cut a channel through a farm between Oakville and Porter, and made travel by road difficult for almost 2 months. The flood of November 1909 washed out a 90-foot section of the right-of-way of the Northern Pacific Railroad between Montesano and Cosmopolis and submerged the rails in other places by 2½ feet.

The area now submerged at high stages of the river could be protected by levees and dredging.

Protection of land by diking is possible but is of purely local interest and Federal participation is not warranted (Dec. 9, 1931).

PROPOSED FEDERAL WATERWAYS PROGRAM

Secretary of War George H. Dern has recently announced a huge waterways program for future work calling for the expenditure of $8,000,000,000 on 1,600 projects, "if and when approved", to carry out "navigation and flood-control improvements which will be of continuing benefit to the economic life of the Nation." Three flood-control projects in southwest Washington are listed as meritorious, to wit:

Lewis River, north fork of Lewis River above Woodland, $240,000 for 4 miles of bank protection and channel clearing for flood control and prevention of erosion, 3,000 acres.

Cowlitz River, Cowlitz River from Kelso to Toledo, $120,000 for reconstruction of damaged bank-protection works for immediate flood relief in Castle Rock section, if the combined system of five reservoirs is not built.

Cowlitz River, Big Bottom area, $869,000 for channel improvement to protect 8,900 acres.

VIEWPOINT OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

In a discussion of the subject of economic justification for Federal participation in flood control, Lt. Col. Thomas M. Robins, division engineer Pacific coast division, United States Board of Army Engineers, before the Northwest Rivers and Harbors Congress at Seattle, Wash., on October 12, 1934, said:

In the case of flood control it is well recognized by the Government generally that the special interest of the locality in its own protection is fundamental, and there can be no general benefit unless a national concern has been brought about through interruption of mail and interruption of trade and commerce generally, great loss of life, or some other situation which affects the prosperity of the whole Nation. In general it might be said that the amount of general benefit in flood control in any one case depends to a large extent on the damage done. Colonel Hanson touched a little bit on what has been done for the Mississippi Valley and the Sacramento Valley, and I should like to add just a word. I know you folks think they have gotten a lot of money, but the Mississippi Valley is one-third of the United States, and the Sacramento and San Joaquin are just as long as the Mississippi Valley from Cairo to the Gulf. So you have got to have pretty wide-spread flood-control problems before you begin to talk in figures the same as the Mississippi Valley.

Colonel Robins, in an address delivered a month previous at a meeting of the Lower Columbia Chambers of Commerce, held at Clatskanie, Oreg., pointed out that the Federal Government was absolutely opposed to assuming the burden of both construction and maintenance of dikes. Such a policy would necessitate the expenditure of $5,000,000,000 solely for the tributaries of the Mississippi, it has been shown by requests made from these tributaries.

He held out the possibility that the Federal Government might agree to repair and build dikes, providing local communities cooperated in the original cost and agreed to bear the full burden of maintenance. The present policy of the Federal Government, as exemplified in such projects as the Sacramento River project, has been to make local communities bear a good proportion of the original cost and all the cost of maintenance, Colonel Robins said. Local communities are also required to furnish the rights to land needed for the dike construction, he added.

The matter of local cooperation in financing dike and flood-control work should be considered now while the preliminary report of flood-control needs is being assembled, Colonel Robins pointed out. He also pointed out the vital importance of making the preliminary report as complete and as accurate as possible so that there might be no delay in getting the project before Congress.

One of the things to be considered in assembling information for the preliminary flood-control report and in seeking the project's approval is the necessity of proving that the average annual damages resulting from floods will exceed the average annual cost of protection. Once that is proved, the problem of determining who will pay for that protection can be argued. The preliminary examination of the need for flood control is under way at present and is really a local responsibility, Colonel Robins told his audience.

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavored to sketch in concrete form an outline of the history of flood control in southwest Washington and its status at the present time. I will conclude my remarks by repeating substantially what I stated in my address delivered before the Northwest Rivers and Harbors Congress at Seattle, Wash., on October 12, 1934.

The Federal Government in the past has taken the position that as far as our flood-control problem in the State of Washington was concerned, it was a local problem for local communities. The Federal Government has always refused to render any aid. In December 1933, when we had the flood, it was the first time we ever succeeded in obtaining any financial aid from the Federal Government, and it was important, of course, because it resulted in a lot of repair work being done that was valuable and gave employment. But, in my opinion, it was more important because of the precedent it established. For the first time the Federal Government recognized that we have a flood-control problem in the State of Washington as well as along the Mississippi and Sacramento Rivers. As a result, as we have already noted, we were able to secure the passage through Congress of bills for preliminary surveys of the main rivers and their tributaries in the States of Washington and Oregon. I introduced a bill relating to the Columbia River which was amended to include Oregon. That survey is now being conducted. Similar bills were passed, favored by the Flood Control Committee of the House, signed by the President and became the law of the land, for preliminary examinations of the Lewis, Cowlitz, and Chehalis Rivers, which will soon be completed. These are the first bills for preliminary examinations in regard to flood control that have ever been passed by the United States Congress affecting the rivers in the State of Washington and in the State of Oregon; so, I feel, we are making real progress. Now we are in the picture; and when this national program is carried out, which it will be in the very near future, as that legislation will come before Congress early in the present session, it is going to result in our obtaining protective measures in the Pacific Northwest against floods in the future and against soil erosion. However, we cannot expect the Federal Government to assume the entire cost, as it has not done that along the Mississippi or Sacramento Rivers, as Colonel Robins declared, but I think we will find in many communities that by constructing the dykes, by constructing tide boxes, by building roads and bridges, and making other improvements, we have already made a valuable contribution and the Federal Government will more than match our expenditures, in order that after a delay of 30 years without any action being taken, the property and lives of our citizens will be protected.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if the gentlemen on the other side of the House are not straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel.

They all proclaim most fiercely that they are in favor of spending the four billion called for in the resolution, or even a greater amount, if by so doing they can aid in pulling the Nation out of the morass of depression into which they, when in power, permitted it to sink.

How many of these copious weepers of crocodile tears will vote for this joint resolution in the end I do not know; but I do know that, whether they vote "yes" or "no", the Democratic majority is going to pass this measure and give to President Roosevelt the authority to take three or four millions of able-bodied Americans off the relief rolls and put them on pay rolls in the doing of useful work on wealth-creating projects.

The gnat these gentlemen are straining at is the method we are employing to bring about this highly desirable end. The camel they are willing to swallow is the $4,000,000,000 sum.

The Democratic majority is in sympathy with President Roosevelt's objective. Because of their unbounded confidence in him, they are willing—he being the Executive charged with the doing of this great job—to trust him to do it in the most expeditious manner and without the red-tape and other time-wasting restrictions that the earmarking of the funds would entail.

For that reason, gentlemen, and because I am convinced that the people of this great Nation have full confidence in their President, I am going to vote for House Joint Resolution 117, and I hope that every good Democrat and every fair-minded member of the minority will do likewise and thus tell the people throughout the land in clear and unmistakable terms that we have confidence in their judgment in selecting President Roosevelt to lead them out of this morass of depression, back to a saner and safer way of life in America.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, with great interest I have listened to the arguments presented for and against House Joint Resolution 117, and at the beginning of my remarks I wish to emphatically state that I am in favor of relief measures; that I prefer to have all relief extended by the Federal Government to flow to the recipients thereof through the payment for work which they perform rather than through some kind of a dole, and, that insofar as is possible, this assistance be given to our people quickly so as to bring into constructive work as far as is possible the millions of idle people scattered throughout the land today. At the same time, however, as a practical operator who understands what is involved in the operation of farms, mines, factories, banks, and transportation lines, both rail and highway, I have some comprehension of the difficulty there will be in placing two or three or four or five millions of workers in productive activity within a few months or even within 2 or 3 or 4 years.

No one man living is powerful enough, without staggering waste and inefficiency and graft and racketeering, to go out and plan and put into operation the works necessary for the consumption of four and one-half to five billions of dollars. Do the proponents of this legislation now come to us and recommend that we attempt to change the laws of economics, defy the sound and fundamental forces of natural law, and reverse the procedure followed by all sound economics through having us appropriate in one lump sum almost $5,000,000,000 of the future earning power of this country and all without a plan of procedure or a single project being proposed other than that four or five billion dollars be handed over to the Chief Executive without check or balance, without any plan, without any appropriation of Congress being made for any specific job, without the people of our country, who must provide this money, having any right to say, through their chosen Representatives, one single thing about what job and where the money shall be spent? That appears to me to be the situation. Furthermore, it would appear to me that through this bill it is being proposed to draw away from those of our people who are unable to secure work in any form that subsistence which has been heretofore provided by the Federal Government for their food and clothing and shelter during this time of need. Let me emphasize again that I prefer that all Federal assistance be given to our needy through work rather than through dole, but when Federal Government, through its many bureaus, so interferes with private industry that people cannot secure work, then I do not propose to add my vote to the passing of a bill which will take the food out of the mouths of our hungry people and let them starve when they cannot secure work and while bureaucrats sit up nights trying to devise more and more plans for the further interference by centralized Government with private initiative and enterprises and while those same bureau administrators design hour by hour and day by day more and more legislation, which, when passed into law, further convinces our people that there will be more and more Government competition with private enterprises in all the industrial and economic walks of life.

I ask, What are the unemployed to do while the process of closing private industry takes place through the fear of Government competition and the swinging into line of all the Government action which will be necessary to take over and provide work for the millions of workers now out of work and who will yet be thrown out of work as private industry closes shop? Shall we let those unfortunate people starve, as is proposed in this bill, through the taking away of the direct relief which this administration has heretofore led the people to expect and take for granted? I submit to you, Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, that Government is not big and powerful enough, even if we appropriated 10 times the amount called for by this bill, to replace the private and individual enterprise of our people and thus provide work for their daily activities. There is no bureau or combination of bureaus that can be created by this House. There is no sum of money within the realms of reason that can be voted by this House. There is no plan of action that can be designed by the administrators of an act of this nature that can be comprehensive enough to care for the needs of our people. This country has not developed in a manner which will permit centralized government to replace private industry to the extent here proposed when we take into consideration the destructive influences which must necessarily follow the putting into operation of this kind of an act.

On the introduction of this bill the industries of our country have been served notice that they may expect any kind and every kind of Government competition that can be devised by bureaus and commissions and agencies. The skilled laborers of this country have had notice served on them that a precedent is being established through governmental procedure to reduce their wages to around $50 per month, and this because it is always the custom of private enterprise to bargain for labor as it bargains for any other commodity that is offered on the market, and this I do not agree with at all, but that does not alter the fact. Emphatically I wish to state that I have preached in public and in private life and practiced in private life that labor should be paid on the basis of production and not on the basis of mere subsistence merely because the laborer could not help himself in time of dire distress. I wish to ask how governmental planning commissions expect to go out and spend within a year or 2 years $4,000,000,000 on public works, road construction, and other activities mentioned so briefly in this bill without at the same time setting the wage scale for all industry in that line of work at or about the scale paid for by governmental activity? Who will answer to labor for the destructive influences the administration of this bill will undoubtedly put into operation? To merely say that this bill, providing $50 per month for labor, is better than nothing or better than a dole, is beside the question. That answer does not suffice. So long as Government carries on a program of this kind, just so long our people with money to invest will sit back and watch governmental performance and thus let centralized government carry the load and ultimately fail in its undertakings.

Therefore, it is not reasonable for us to assume that these people are in position to legislate in the interest of the people with whom they have no direct contact such as is maintained by the Members of this House with the people who sent them here.

In conclusion let me make the observation that if you desire to carry on a war of destruction on the battlefield you need powder and bullets and gas and then you need men to use these destructive agencies through and against. If you desire to carry on an economic war you need goods to hurl into the camp of your enemy at a price to the consumer which he cannot afford to hesitate in accepting to the end that you drive your opponent out of the field. In a political war it has been found that dollars are pretty good bullets and I am not unmindful of the way public funds were used in the last election and I shall not overlook, in the consideration of this bill, the power these "dollar-bullets" provided for may have in the 1936 election, for certainly it is not proposed to have this spending spree under way to any great extent before that time. There can be no justification on any ground for this amount of money to be appropriated by this Congress to any department of the Government without specific checks and balances. Four or five billions of dollars will not put five to ten millions of workers back to work and it is reasonable to assume this vast sum of money will not meet the issue that is before our people today—that issue is to find a remunerative job for the 11 millions of workers who walk the streets today looking for the right to earn a decent living and thus create a market for the labor of more than 30 millions of farm folks who are entitled to fair wages for the work they sell in the form of the farm crops placed on the American market.

Furthermore, I am opposed to this bill because I believe it is unconstitutional for Congress to delegate such sweeping and unquestioned and unchecked powers to the Chief Executive. No man is a god and no mortal man has the power to carry on with equity the far-reaching duties delegated under this act. The responsibility goes far beyond that any man should be permitted to assume in the administration of the affairs of a race of people carrying the intelligence, resourcefulness, and private initiative such as that possessed by the people of this great country of ours. It is morally wrong and legally unconstitutional for us to rob our people of their rights in this matter and I for one am willing to stake my support for this statement on the answer which time will give. The vote of the people of my district (the eighth) of Michigan did not give me the authority to vote in favor of such a bill and I am willing to go back to them for their answer as to whether or not they intended that I come here and give away the power of this body, to come here and vote for the entry of Government into competition with their individual enterprises back home, to come here and vote away the relief direct or indirect which they have been led by this administration to take for granted, to come here and set up a scale for skilled laborers of no more than $50 per month, to come here and by my vote in favor of this bill say that I desire wages to be set on a mere subsistence basis to the end that the farmers of my district will not be able to sell their labor in the form of farm goods for more than a pittance and to come here and vote for a bill which will call for a further reduction in the farm crops of my district because private industry is interfered with and industrial workers are set a wage scale which will not permit them to buy and consume the goods from American farms.

Again, I cannot favor a bill which creates bureaus and gives them the power to make rules and regulations which have for the average citizen, the force of law. To me this is something more than the mere shift of legislative duties from where they belong to the executive branch of the Government. I do not believe that is right. It is my understanding that the executive branch of our Government has more than 700,000 employees and that of this staggering number only one—the President—is elected by the people.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, during my service in Congress I have never knowingly voted for a gag rule of any kind whatsoever.

The leaders of the Democratic Party in my section of the country have preached for more than a third of a century the iniquity of Republican gag rules. To me the iniquity of these rules becomes more iniquitous, if that is possible, when practiced by Democrats.

Mr. KNUTE HILL, a Democrat from the State of Washington, put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 11, 1934, the following quotation from a speech of Franklin D. Roosevelt made while he was Governor of New York State:

> There are three ways of defeating proposed legislation. One is the method followed in the early days of our Republic, and which most truly conforms to the correct practice of a democracy. This is consideration of each proposal in open session and serious debate, in an open-minded and nonpartisan spirit and with a sincere desire to weigh its merits. If it is found inadvisable or unwise, it is then slain after a fair and open battle, and the reasons for such action are open for all the voters to examine and judge for themselves. This is the way in which all bills of real importance which have been shown any considerable approval and support by the voters of the State should be treated.
> The second method is by the lash of the party whip, the demand on the legislators by their party leaders that they divide according to their political affiliations and leave to the master minds of their organizations the responsibility as to whether such action is justified or not. In this procedure the bill, when brought up for discussion, is foredoomed to failure, and all debates thereon are of a purely perfunctory nature; nor can any argument of reasoning change the final vote. There is no possible justification for the adoption of this course on bills which are avowedly nonpartisan in character.

The third method, as given by Mr. Roosevelt in the same speech, is:

> Then, there is the third method of killing legislation by secret strangulation, known more politely as "killing a bill in committee." If it is a measure that commands considerable support, or if it is a measure the principle of which no party would dare openly oppose, it is given a mock hearing or no hearing at all. The committee which holds the power of life or death over the measure solemnly meets and behind closed doors and for reasons best known to themselves proceeds, by a vote of its majority * * * to refuse to report the measure for open discussion and debate. * * * This is the most objectionable and least defensible method of defeating legislation of any importance that could well be conceived.

Now let me quote from the founder of the Democratic Party, Thomas Jefferson:

> If Members of Congress are to know nothing but what is important enough to be put into a public message, and indifferent enough to be made known to all the world; if the Executive is to keep all other information to himself and the House to plunge on in the dark, it becomes a government of chance and not of design.

From my observations, I have reached the conclusion that this evil of "gag" rules is being made use of in recent Congresses because the so-called "leaders" lack the intestinal fortitude required to bring their measures out in "a fair and open battle", as suggested by Mr. Roosevelt. Hence, they resort to the despicable rules of former Republican Congresses, the rules which have brought the Republican Party into disrepute all over the United States. We hear it said by every weak leader of the majority, to the minority, "You did this." The inference is that, the Republican Party having done a wrong, we are justified in continuing that wrong. Let me say to these benighted pretended followers of Jefferson what he said on the subject:

> It is more honorable to repair a wrong than to persist in it.

I urge that we cease persisting in Republican wrongs.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, humane considerations alone prompt me to vote for this combined relief and public-works bill. I am for relief for those in distress, and I am against great outlays for public works. I shall vote for this bill because if I were to vote against it I would be voting to cut off relief from the hungry, cold, and naked, thousands upon thousands of whom would be subjected to untold suffering in the dead of winter if this bill should fail. I am looking to our unfortunate fellow citizens who are on the verge of starvation and who have to have temporary assistance when I vote "aye" on the passage of this bill. If they were out of the picture, if their interests were not on my heart, paramount to all things else, I would vote "no."

This bill has two distinct provisions. One provision appropriates $880,000,000 to continue the relief to distressed humanity that is immediately and imperatively necessary. The other provision appropriates $4,000,000,000 for a vast new program of public works. I am for the first provision and I am against the latter. I want to vote to accept one and to reject the other. The gag rule prevents me from doing this. The gag rule ties the two propositions together inseparably. I must vote to accept both or to reject both, such being the peculiar pernicious effect of the gag rule. I opposed the gag rule in caucus and in the House in order that we might be able to divide the bill into its substantive parts and vote on them separately, but in common with others who thought as I do I was voted down and my hands were tied.

I am required, therefore, to decide on one of two alternatives. Either I must vote to let thousands of our people suffer from starvation, nakedness, and lack of fuel in midwinter, or I must vote for the bill as a whole, and I shall do the latter, because humane considerations will not allow me to do anything else.

In my opinion we should have been allowed separate votes, at least on these two propositions—immediate relief and public works. I think we also should have had a bill of particulars showing what the $4,000,000,000 fund is to be used for, so that as Representatives, coming direct from the people, we might have had a chance to vote on the merits of the various items that will enter into the expenditure of that stupendous sum. With all good wishes for our great Executive, I believe that Congress, in order to promote the national weal, should do its own legislating and should not "pass the buck" to the President, as it has so often done. I believe that, with the worst of the emergency over, it should begin to recapture the powers it has abdicated. I do not believe that the branch of the Congress that is charged with responsibility of controlling the purse strings should vote colossal sums en bloc without having some chart or explanation showing what the money is to be spent for.

I supported the various parliamentary moves which, if they had succeeded, would have separated the fund for direct relief from the public works appropriation, because I wanted to vote for the former and against the latter. To break off Federal relief in the dead of winter would be dreadful and unthinkable. It would mean that thousands upon thousands of our fellow citizens would die of starvation, cold, and nakedness, and that there would be widespread suffering on a national scale, because local relief agencies would not be organized or able to take over the load on sudden notice. At the same time I do not think the proposed vast public works program should be adopted.

When I asked recently how many persons had been put to work as a result of the $3,300,000,000 former public-works program, the personnel director of the Public Works Administration gave the number as less than 900,000. At this rate it would require an expenditure of about $44,000,000,000 to give temporary synthetic employment to the 11,000,000 persons now out of work. This, in my judgment, shows the absolute futility and utter hopelessness of the public-works program as a means of solid national recovery.

Mr. Speaker, in this great Republic of ours one of the privileges inherited by every citizen, however humble in the walks of life, is the privilege of writing, as the spirit moves him, to the President of the United States on the state of the Union.

Exercising this cherished right of the common man I have recently sent two communications to President Roosevelt setting forth my idea of how the country, under his leadership, may be led rapidly through what remains of the depression to a solid and permanent recovery.

I believe I am stating a solemn truth when I say that in these days of dire distress nearly all men who feel the weight of responsibility are actuated by the common purpose of trying to serve humanity. We have the same objectives, but differ only as to methods. The Nation's peril is realized by all. Selfishness is content for the time, at least, to slink far back among the shadows and men are united by a nobility of effort for the common good. We have in the White House a leader whose name is synonymous with nobility, whose sympathies are as far-reaching as the human race.

The purpose of my letters to the President was to convey my belief that the time has come to call business and industry to the colors and to make use of business and industry to provide the capsheaf of recovery. Donald Richberg has wisely said, in substance, in recent speeches, that there are two courses open for the future. One course is to return the load of employment to private industry, and the other course is to provide a large program of public works, at the expense of the taxpayers, to further carry that inescapable load. I prefer to return the load to business and industry, where it normally belongs.

Nor do I believe that this purpose is impossible of achievement. I believe that the foremost problem before the new deal now is to bring about the transition from governmental activity to private activity—how to get business to take up the burden of spending and employing the idle—and I believe as implicitly as I ever believed anything in my life that if the President were now to place his powerful support under the business and industrial structure of the country, with a pledge of suitable governmental approval and aid for suitable performance, business and industry would come running to his call.

What the country yearns for is normal employment, not synthetic employment. What the workingman wants more than anything else in the world is the good old job he used to have. I should like to hear factory furnaces roaring. That would be real music. I should like to see smoke pouring out of factory chimneys. That would be a sight worth seeing. Even if it should be black, dirty, grimy smoke of the kind that used to arouse the ire of the smoke abatement leagues. Our millions upon millions of workmen would be happy if they had regular jobs. They do not want to be idle and they do not want relief, except as they are compelled to take it. They want to hear the whistle blow, and they do not see any prospect of the whistle calling them back to normal employment if vast public-works programs are to continue indefinitely, for there are half a million more workmen unemployed in America now than there were a year ago, and they can only see private industry growing more weak and impotent as public works add billions to the Nation's debt burden and throw the Budget further out of gear.

So it was with the thought of contributing at least a little impetus to the idea that the time is at hand to begin making the transition of employment from public-works rolls to the rolls of private business and industry that I wrote to the President, and I can only add that in presenting these letters to the reading public in the columns of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I do so for the purpose, which I believe to be permissible and partiotic, of stimulating thought along that line.

My first letter to the President was as follows:

NOVEMBER 19, 1934.

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I know you will not regard me as presumptuous if I address you on the state of the Union, for our long and friendly acquaintanceship, dating back to your service as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, has taught me that you are ever ready to welcome well-meant, constructive suggestions and to weigh and analyze them fairly and impartially, whether in the final outcome you agree with the proponent or otherwise.

Your administration is already secure in history. In my judgment, you have made a name as a humanitarian second only to Jefferson and Lincoln. No President since Jefferson has done more for the laborer and the common man than you have done. You have written into the social structure certain great and salutary reforms and practices and there they will remain forever. The abolishment of child labor and sweat shops, the guaranty of bank deposits, the establishment of order and security in the banking system, the protection of innocent investors from the rapacity of "blue sky" vendors, the spread of employment and resultant happiness through the shorter work week, these and other great triumphs of social regeneration make up an imperishable record of achievements. While these mighty changes were being wrought the hungry have been fed and the naked have been clothed.

With these things accomplished and the worst of the depression over, I believe the direct way to prosperity is by a cessation of extraordinary expenditures and by such encouragement as the national administration—and it alone—is capable of giving to honest business. We need to instill confidence in business in place of the abysmal dejection that now exists. We need to do something to supplant in place of the gloom and paralysis that now engulf business the old fighting spirit and a willingness among business men to cooperate more freely and actively in bringing the country out of the rut. I believe that you, Mr. President, with such safe and sound advisers as Donald Richberg, have the power to put the business of the country on its feet and make it an important, willing, and militant factor toward bringing about early recovery and reemployment along normal lines.

In my talks with business men I have found that in a vast majority of instances uncertainty is the cause of their halting attitude. They do not know what to expect next, and not knowing what to look for they are not willing to risk anything. This has caused a business stalemate on a national scale, with lethal ramifications into every walk of life. Let me stress what I believe to be the importance of completing your program at the earliest possible moment and announcing it forthwith. Business can adjust itself to almost any program if only it knows what that program is. I hope the time will come real soon when you will be able to announce through the newspapers, over the radio, and from the housetops, figuratively speaking: "This is my program. It is my entire program, and it is going to remain stabilized just as I have given it to you. There will be no further changes in the currency and no additional legislation will be proposed. I have shown you my entire hand."

There must be no lessening of restraints over evil practices in business, but honest business should have encouragement to get on its feet. There cannot be employment unless there is money to meet pay rolls. If honest business could have the benefit of loans—not gifts—from the Federal Government, it would be a great incentive to a rational revival. The law we passed at the last session of Congress providing loans to industry needs liberalization. It has been weakened by administrative restrictions and the loans that are being made under it are so few and inconsequential that they constitute a negligible factor in recovery. The policy of not making loans to any business concerns that have been "in the red" in recent years makes the law virtually a nullity. The concerns that have not been "in the red" are few and far between. It seems to me the character of the borrower would figure in these loans quite as much as the collateral offered, but character counts for nothing under existing administrative policy.

As a Member of Congress with a voting responsibility, and with a little added responsibility due to the fact that I am a member of the Appropriations Committee, I am anxious that the future expenditures of the Government shall be kept within limitations. We must continue to care for the hungry and naked and acutely distressed, never for a moment neglecting them, but in my opinion it would be a collossal mistake to embark upon another enormous program of uneconomic public works, thus adding to the debt burden and bringing us a step nearer to the danger of uncontrolled inflation, for when inflation gets under way the possibility of controlling it is about equal to that of stemming the waters of an impounded stream, once the dam has broken. My anxiety on this score has been intensified by a startling proposal by a Cabinet official which appears in the newspapers under the glaring headline "Secretary Forecasts Spending of Billions." The article goes on to outline an enormous proposed program of national spending, one feature of which is to be "a four-lane transcontinental highway avoiding all cities, with no grade crossings, over a 1,000-foot right-of-way, landscaped to make it the most beautiful road in the world."

Can it be possible that at a time like this, when retrenchment is clearly indicated as the proper national policy, such a proposal is seriously advanced? I cannot imagine that with the country deeper in debt than ever before in its history, with interest and taxes mounting to unprecedented proportions, we will pour out untold millions for such an iridescent dream. More than any other country in the world, America already is spanned with hard-surfaced roads. There is no demand for this glorified Appian Way from the standpoint of economic necessity and the project would not be justified as an employment measure because the employment created would not be commensurate with the vast outlay. In the last analysis, such projects must be paid for by taxes, and taxes are paid by the sweat and toil of the masses. We cannot pull money like rabbits out of a hat to pay these enormous construction costs. In my opinion, the entire proposed public-works program should be scrapped and the country should be spared the great burden of having these additional billions piled on top of our staggering national debt.

I sincerely believe that if business is given the benefit of a definite, stabilized program so that it will have a chart to go by, and if in addition it can have the assurance from the administration and Congress that temporary emergency measures that have served their purpose will be repealed and that every reasonable effort will be made to bring about retrenchment in governmental expenditures so that ultimately tongue and buckle will meet and the Budget will be balanced, an accelerated business momentum will be the turning point of the recovery program, and the result will be a new era of abundant prosperity with jobs for all.

No one is more sincere in wishing you well than I am. That is my excuse for bothering you with this long letter. I believe that your superb leadership in the direction I have indicated would definitely end the depression and bring about a glorious future for America.

Very sincerely yours,

LOUIS LUDLOW.

On November 27 the President sent me a reply which I do not feel at liberty to quote, and I answered his communication with the following letter:

DECEMBER 3, 1934.

Hon. FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT,
President of the United States, Warm Springs, Ga.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I thank you for your courteous reply and I appreciate your gracious invitation to discuss current problems with you at the White House, but I really have but little more to say, and with your indulgence, I shall put these additional thoughts in writing, so that if they are of any value you may have them before you at Warm Springs while you are engaged in the formulation of your program to be placed before the approaching Congress.

So if you will bear with me, I will amplify somewhat my former letter, hoping and believing that whether you can agree with me or not you at least will credit me with an honest and forthright effort to be of some assistance to you in this critical period, when momentous decisions involving the future welfare of the Nation, if not the character of its government, have to be made. To my mind, no less important than that is the issue involved.

Permit me to say that in my opinion it is not an alternative between the cash dole on the one hand and public works on the other hand, but the alternative is between Government relief on the one hand and a return to normal employment on the other hand. I am one of those who believe that prosperity is really near at hand, and that it is actually attainable by cooperation of government and honest business, not by large additional governmental expenditures for public works. In other words, I sincerely, truly believe the time has come to make a start toward transferring the relief load from government to business. I hold no brief for business, and when I take this view I believe I am taking the view of labor as well as business, for the welfare of both is inseparable. I would not for one moment relax the Government's hold on crooked business. If the laws against monopolies and financial pirates are not strong enough, I would enact more laws with more teeth in them, but I would give more freedom to honest business, which is now prostrate, but which wants to do its patriotic part—freedom from governmental restrictions, freedom for creative enterprise, freedom as far as posible from tax burdens.

I should like to see you, as the President of our great country, call the business men of America to the colors. President Harriman, of the United States Chamber of Commerce, who speaks in a large way for business and industry, has said that "business is rarin' to go." I should like to see you call these gentleman to the colors and give them a chance to make good.

Now for a concrete suggestion: I believe, speaking by and large, the way out of the depression from this time on is by adopting a policy of lending, instead of spending. If one-half, or less, of the nine billions proposed by Mr. Hopkins for public works could be loaned to manufacturers and business men under liberal terms, I believe the result would be not only a general reabsorption of the unemployed into regular employment but in the end practically all of the amount would be returned to the United States Treasury as the obligations fall due.

A plan of loaning this money might be devised whereby the granting of a loan would be contingent upon a pledge to employ a certain number of men for 1 year or 2 years. I believe, Mr. President, that if you would call the leaders of the business and industrial world into conference, a system could be devised, based on loans and pledges as stated above, that would wipe out unemployment in record time and make a real start toward a quick national recovery. I firmly believe that under the inspiration and incentive of your call and with the assistance of Government loans apportioned on a basis of employment possibilities business would respond and would, as it should, take over the burden of the relief load by opening the way to reemployment on a large scale.

Let me offer an illustration in point: Some gentlemen from Connersville, Ind., were here the other day to make an appeal for a Government loan for a manufacturing plant there. The visitors were among the best citizens of the community. They have been trying for a year or longer to borrow $150,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for working capital. Their plant is worth half a million dollars. They have actual, bona fide orders already on hand that would enable them to repay the loan with a nice profit, yet they have not been able to get a dime. The tragic part of it, from the standpoint of the public welfare, is that if they can get the loan they pledge themselves to give work to 1,400 men. The question occurs to me: Would it not be much better for the Government to grant that loan and thus give normal employment to 1,400 men who will be happy if they can get work than it is to maintain these good workmen and their families on relief rolls?

Exactly that situation exists over and over again, times almost without number, in the various States of the Union, and I only cite it as an incident which I believe is in point illustrating how business, with the aid of Government, might function to hasten normal recovery. If, on the other hand, billions are added to the Government debt, I fear that next year will find no decrease of unemployment, just as this year finds no decrease of unemployment over last, and the Nation's relief burdens will grow heavier as debt and taxes weaken carrying power and destroy business confidence.

Of course, I realize that the goal of complete business and industrial recovery is not attainable at a single stroke, and until there is full recovery the hungry must be fed and the naked must be clothed. There must not be, and there will not be, any neglect of our humanitarian responsibilities. I believe that when impartial history is written recording your epochal achievements and the conditions under which you wrought, you will be given a place along with the outstanding commoners of all time—Thomas Jefferson, Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln. I am just one Member of the House of Representatives out of 435 whose views as to trends and policies may be unimportant, but I thank you for this opportunity to express myself, and I close by saying, "Lord bless you in your sincere, devoted, and courageous efforts to serve this Nation."

LOUIS LUDLOW.

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave of extending my remarks in the RECORD on House Joint Resolution 117, I desire to submit the following statement of facts and principles upon which I stand.

When our forefathers drafted the Constitution of the United States, they very wisely inserted as one of the provisions of that great document, the division of Government into three departments, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial, each having certain duties and functions to perform and yet all correlating to the working of a harmonious Government.

Article I, section 1, of this Constitution provides for a Congress of the United States consisting of a Senate and a House of Representatives.

When I was elected as Congressman from the Sixth District of Michigan the motivating factor in my thought was the support of the Constitution of the United States and the defense of constitutional government.

When House Joint Resolutilon 117 was introduced I was amazed at the unprecedented dictatorial power which would be given the President of the United States under that $4,880,000,000 public-works bill. From a reading of this resolution I became convinced that the delegation of power to the Chief Executive provided for in said resolution was really a surrender of the rights and privileges of Congress and that the conferring of such power upon one single individual or group was adverse to the principles of American government. I am in favor of worthy relief from the hardships attributable to wide-spread unemployment and conditions resulting therefrom, but when that relief is coupled with principles absolutely reprehensible to American government, then I am opposed to such legislation.

Under the provisions of this resolution, the President of the United States, provided that his actions were motivated by the broad purposes of the act, could:

First. Issue edicts, violation of which would amount practically to felonies punishable with $5,000 fine or 2 years' penitentiary sentence, or both; the provision with reference to the 2-year penitentiary sentence, however, was stricken out by amendment.

Second. Consolidate, change, or abolish existing governmental departments, establishing such new ones as he might desire; which provision, however, was amended by the insertion of the word "emergency" before the words "governmental department"; and continue the provisions of the N. R. A. or other emergency agencies until June 30, 1937.

Third. Acquire by eminent domain any real or personal property which he might consider necessary to carry out the provisions of such resolution, but by amendment the words "or personal" were stricken out.

Fourth. Between now and June 30, 1937, spend $4,880,000,000 not only for public works but in any manner he might claim necessary to accomplish the purposes of the act.

While in my judgment these amendments may have slightly improved the resolution, yet the resolution still stands as an unprecedented delegation of power to the President, and is adverse to American principles.

My first act in coming to Washington was to take the oath of office in which I agreed to support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, and to discharge well and faithfully the duties of the office to which I was elected. This oath I intend to keep inviolate.

In my judgment the power conferred by said joint resolution is unconstitutional, is dangerous, and is un-American, and for that reason I am opposed to this resolution and shall vote against the same.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Speaker, "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau." An aged father, whose eyes are dim, is anxious to give a blessing to a worthy son, one whose birthright has been bartered away. With the cunning connivance of the mother, a savory dish is prepared to satisfy the father's longing. The garments of his brother are put on Jacob, and to make the deception more complete he covers his smooth skin with the hair of a goat. Under the cover of Esau's garment and the masquerade of an animal's skin, Jacob depends upon the blindness of his father to stealthily secure the blessing intended for his brother. With the kiss of a Judas the treachery is complete and a father's blessing debauched. It is an intensely dramatic story, a recital of mockery, an episode of trickery, a narration of craftiness. "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau" has become the legend, the title, the name by which we characterize masquerades of artifice and programs of deception.

No other story quite so accurately describes the circumstances attending the resolution before the House today as this recital of how an old parent was played upon by an artful son.

It is unfortunate that the efforts of the present administration have not been effective enough to relieve the distress of unemployment. In spite of the expenditures of vast sums of money and the imposition of extraordinary exactions upon industry, we are faced today with a most acute and serious unemployment problem, a problem which demands sympathetic, constructive, and capable consideration and action on the part of all who are able to aid in its solution. I do not yield to any man in my conscientious endeavor to find a solution for this problem, or in my willingness to approve the use of every legitimate and sound means for the relief of those upon whom misfortune has come as a result of the world cataclysm. Nor have I been content to still my conscience with the acquisition of political theories of the causes, and the charting of statistical records of the results of the depression, but on the contrary I have endeavored to sympathetically discharge my portion of the obligations of neighborliness and brotherhood. I crave the opportunity of supporting any sane measure, irrespective of party lines, which will insure the reemployment of idle wage earners in my district and bring to the homes of my people contentment and security.

It is my conviction that the resources and credit of the Nation should be utilized to the fullest possible extent to secure the speedy solution of our economic problem. Were the resolution before us today a measure of this character, I would give it my whole-souled and energetic support, but this is not the case; for while it is clothed in the raiment of relief and masks itself with the hairy skin of reemployment pretense, the strident tones of a political Jacob are the accents which reveal its true purpose. That purpose is to strengthen and develop the political fortunes of the majority Members of the House in the name and under the caption of relief and reemployment.

The resolution proposes to place at the disposal of the President $4,800,000,000 of taxpayers' money without any control of the Congress as to the projects upon which this enormous sum shall be spent. No justification has been presented to the Appropriations Committee of the House for this extraordinary grant nor has any adequate hearing been held to warrant the departure from constitutional and time-honored precedent of the proper methods to be pursued in spending public funds. The only excuse which has been offered for the contravention of safe and sound practice is the statement that it is an administration measure, but even the loudest proponents of the measure cannot produce any public utterance of the President of his approval or request for such legislation.

Certainly his laudable endeavor to restore to the unemployed workmen of the country a spirit of self-respect by opening avenues of gainful employment rather than continuing upon relief roles does not comprehend a program of the character now before the House. Under the grant as contained in the resolution, funds may be spent on almost any project which the administration may deem feasible without any limitation or specification as to the character, location, or purpose of the venture. The costly experiment at Reedsville entailing a loss of approximately $500,000 is mute but eloquent testimony of the dangers of spending taxpayers' money without proper investigation and deliberate determination.

My interest lies chiefly in the district which I represent. The needs of these people are my first concern. The advancement and protection of their rights is my obligation. This resolution gives me no assurance that the needs of my people will be ministered unto nor that the distress which prevails among them will be alleviated. Nowhere in the resolution can I find even a scintilla of promise that a small part of this fund will find its way into my county to provide gainful employment. Certainly my experience with the practices of the present administration in the distribution of Federal benefactions does not provide any assurance or even hope that an equitable proportion of these $4,800,000,000 will come to my district. Is it unreasonable for me to ask for assurance that a fair distribution of these public funds shall be made for my district? The Southern States receive the premiums, the Northern States pay the price. To earmark and allocate this fund upon a justifiable and equitable basis is a reasonable and common-sense demand on the part of the representatives of the people.

The delegation of authority to the executive branch of the Government does not stop with the spending of the fund. The resolution provides for a complete abdication of power by the Congress to the President. Under its sweeping and all-inclusive terms the President may prescribe the duties and functions of governmental agencies, transfer and abolish such agencies, employ individuals at his pleasure, delegate authority vested in him to others, and promulgate rules and regulations for the conduct of all citizens. He may buy, sell, lease, improve, and develop property and exercise the right of eminent domain. And to make the investiture of authority complete and absolute the President may penalize a citizen in the sum of $5,000 for the breach of any of the decrees or regulations made by him. By one fell swoop this resolution turns over to the executive branch of the Government the right to legislate, appropriate, and penalize without let or hindrance. To this revolutionary course of procedure I cannot subscribe. It is not a question of the amount of money to be spent. It is not a question of alleviating distress. It is not a question of providing employment.

The issue far transcends such matters, as important as they are. The issue is whether our system of government is to be completely altered and changed. The tried and true system of checks and balances is at stake. No dexterously devised or cleverly crafted phrase of explanation on the part of any of the proponents of this measure can change to the satisfaction of any sensible person its true intent and purpose. It sacrifices on the altar of political power the sacred heritages of constitutional democracy. It makes inaudible the cry of distress as it bellows for political favor and preferment. It holds up to scorn and ridicule the Members of this House who but a few days ago assumed a solemn obligation to represent their people. It devises a mightier weapon of potential woe for this Nation and for all the people thereof than any implement of war ever wielded by the arm or ingenuity of man. Private rights, private property, private industry, personal liberty, personal immunity are left stark, impotent, unprotected, and defenseless before this grim monster.

The refusal of those of us who oppose the measure cannot be characterized as a policy of obstruction nor as an effort to deter the President in his efforts at recovery. It is obvious that the President cannot give his personal attention to the details of the allotment and expenditure of this enormous sum of money. He must of necessity commit the powers and duties to others who are in no way answerable to the people for their course of conduct or the methods adopted by them. We advocate the submission of projects to the Congress through the duly constituted channels of operation and the proper authorization for the allotment of funds on the basis of merit and justification.

Millions can justifiably be spent for relief, but not one penny should be wasted for political tribute. I stand ready to support a public-works program which will give honest employment to our people, but I will not espouse the cause of those who advocate a program of profligacy, waste, and dissipation. Let us provide the funds for a public-works program bringing to each of our districts a proper proportion of this fund for meritorious projects; let us bring to private enterprise the assurance that the Government does not propose to enter into fields of competition; let us impress upon the citizens our desire to advance their interests and safeguard their rights. Let us provide for the common welfare by practicing policies of proved worth. Let us demonstrate that representative democracy is virile and capable of meeting the problems with which we are faced. But above all, let us cast aside the garment of Esau and the masquerade of hairy skin and be honest in motive and purpose.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to give power—the greatest grant of power that Congress has ever given. Other bills did leave in the hands of the people some semblance of control. The purpose for which the money was to be spent was specified—there was some assurance as to how much was to be spent and who was to have the spending. There were arrangements for an accounting, subject to a check on it by the Comptroller General.

In this bill you take $4,000,000,000 and say to one man, "Here it is. Get rid of it! We do not care what you do with it; spend it as you please." Under this bill you would give the wealth of a Nation in a lump sum and then add to it double that amount for the benefit of the money kings in interest. You will relieve these money changers of all taxes. You lay down the principle in this bill that the money changers shall profit and the masses shall pay. By means of this obsolete system of paying interest on what already belongs to the Government—money—you pile suffering on top of misery and then call it relief.

Under this bill you give this vast sum and specifically provide that there will be no check on its spending or the purpose for which spent until after it is gone. Then after the money is used a statement must be made to Congress stating how it was spent. What good will it do to know who got the money after it is gone and no provision made to have it returned?

You curse Stalin, you execrate Hitler, you condemn Mussolini, and all the while you are seeing the mote in your brother's eye and leaving unnoticed the beam in your own. How can gentlemen stand before us in this House and condemn, as they do, the Nazi, the Fascist, or the Communist and vote a grant of one-man power such as this bill holds in its innocent-looking black print? The shades of every great American who ever had faith in representative government will rise to condemn your vote.

If you pass this bill, you are willing to trust Mr. Hopkins, who may be appointed under its terms, to spend this money. You are willing to trust Mr. Ickes, who may be selected, or Mr. Baruch, or Mr. Astor, or any one of a thousand men who might be in favor at the moment and of whom you nor I have ever heard. Whosoever he may be, he will have power to spend this four billion according to his own sweet will. You are not willing to trust the American veteran to spend only $2,000,000,000, which we owe him and which we could pay to him without paying at the same time tribute to the bankers. You are afraid that the veteran will spend his money unwisely, but the same fear does not actuate you in the case of an administrator, to you unnamed and as yet unknown, who will spend this four billion.

My colleagues, you are being so very inconsistent.

No one will contend that these bonds will not exist and bear interest for the next 30 years. Four percent will be a reasonable interest to expect on them. This means that to obtain four billion to give aid to the destitute and unemployed the taxpayer must pay back to the money changers $4,800,000,000 in interest, or a total of $8,800,000,000. France went into financial oblivion in 1925 because it was necessary to use 80 percent of its total income to pay the interest on the public debt. With all our interest burdens mounting, how long can we endure? This bill means a minimum tax burden of $73 on every man, woman, and child in the United States. This bill, if enacted into law, means a tax burden on the Fifth District of Indiana of $18,836,701.

So far as the provisions of this bill are concerned, all this money can go to such projects as the Reedsville Homestead venture. Certain it is that some of it will go there. Can you conscientiously vote to expend money wrung from taxes on prostrate business, bankrupt farmers, and destitute labor to be expended on a project born of someone's whim, conceded to be obsolete before its inception and now adjudged a failure, as is the Reedsville project, merely to endeavor to justify a judgment that was erroneous in the beginning? That project was repudiated twice by a vote of the Membership of this House and yet thousands of dollars have been spent, and under the terms of this bill thousands more will be spent before the caprice of its sponsors will be satisfied.

You are throwing money riotously into the capricious maw of such adventures in insane spending as are these projects. Projects where with thousands of furniture workers unemployed you would train miners to make furniture, and other projects where with farmers receiving less than the cost of production you train miners and factory workers to produce more farm products. You gentlemen are trying to do the impossible. You are endeavoring to make a board with only one side—you are trying to make a rope from twisted sand.

We have drifted through a tragedy of errors. We have seen individuals who came from we know not where, given a place of great authority, make colossal mistakes, and drop out again from public sight leaving the public to hold the bag for their mistakes. The public did not elect these flashing great ones. Congress did not appoint, approve, or know them. But the whole Nation suffers because of them. For that reason I feel that the people should know whom they will have to spend this vast sum of money.

This is called a "Federal emergency relief measure." Is it to be like the present system with the administrators of it in the local communities required to possess a college degree as "case workers" so as to be able to determine whether or not starving children are hungry and freezing adults are cold? Some of them draw $200 a month and some more than that amount to sit in a warm office and decide whether a man without a job, without a coat to his back, or a crumb of bread to eat, and with a family, is entitled to work out in the cold with a shovel for $4.70 a week. To call the roll of our present relief personnel is to have pass in review the strutting mistakes of the army of errors.

The R. F. C., with its billions, aided the bankers and big business and forgot the small and independent manufacturer and businessman. In this bill before you now there is not one specific provision by which aid will be granted to this great class of people and those dependent on them. They helped pay the bill for relief of big business, but are denied relief for themselves. Their stores are still closed; their factory stacks are smokeless.

The C. W. A. as a relief measure was of benefit, but it was temporary in character and displeased even those that it was most intended to benefit. Its faults as well as the faults of the R. F. C. lay largely in its administration.

Almost every one of these ventures was a parallel to this present bill. In every one of them Congress flung money into the lap of some unknown and undetermined individual to spend. The Members of Congress saved themselves the necessity of mental effort and attempted to shift their responsibility by delegating the power they were elected to assume and which the Constitution vests in them. For the mistakes, the sins of omission and commission in the spending of these billions of dollars, Congress is responsible, not the man who accepted the front position in the sun and the newspaper headlines, as the chief spender of the bureaucracy created.

Under this bill, as drawn, section 6 would allow the President of the United States to determine and designate a felony. The President of the United States can establish a rule and give it all the force and effect of a criminal law. For the violation of that rule the offender can be imprisoned for 2 years and fined $5,000. If such a rule provides that a man with two children could only receive $4.70 per week and this destitute man accepted $5, he would be guilty of a felony and punished as indicated in the law. Even if the 2 years' penalty is stricken out of the law, still the punishment for such offense by such an amount is preposterous. Congress has no right, in my opinion, to delegate to anyone the authority to establish criminal laws and allow him to define what constitutes a felony.

And even a graver injustice than this is that such rules and regulations need not be published so that the general public may know of their existence. Under section 6 of this law it is not necessary even to prove that a man intended to violate the law or that he did it maliciously to make him subject to this punishment. He may have violated a regulation which he had not intended to violate and of which he had never heard and the general public had never heard and be punished for such violation. I was surprised, amazed, and astounded to think that a Congress composed of representatives of the people would defeat an amendment inserting the word "malicious" before the word "violation." I was amazed that an amendment was defeated requiring these rules and regulations to be printed and published.

Under this bill you would allow the President of the United States or someone designated by him to both establish corporations and subsidize private corporations for the purpose of entering into business in competition with other private corporations and business. Under this same bill it is provided that these corporations, being Government owned and Government subsidized, must employ cheap labor in competition with private concerns that, under the provisions of other laws, are required to pay standard rates to labor. What chance would the private concern have to operate under such competition or by virtue of what stretch of the imagination can it be said that this will raise either the morale or purchasing power of labor?

If this bill is enacted into law, you give to the President or to anyone to whom he may delegate the authority the same right that is given to commanders of armies in time of war—the right to commandeer private personal property. Not only does this bill confer on the President the right of eminent domain over real estate, it extends that right to your furniture, your piano, and your automobile.

I realize that a vote against this bill is unpopular, but the provisions of it violates all that I conceive to be the duty of a Member of Congress. It is contrary to all veneration for the Constitution that is mine by teaching and inheritance. It is contrary to all my conclusions reached in 20 years in the active practice and study of law. I hold my office by virtue of that Constitution which contemplates that I am to represent the people of my district in a legislative capacity. For me to vote for this bill would be for me to prostitute on the altar of political expediency all my convictions of duty to my constituents and to myself.

SUPPORT OF THE PRESIDENT AND HIS POLICIES

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a speech I made on the radio yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address which I made over the radio yesterday:

Last Tuesday on this program Mr. SNELL, minority leader of the House, made certain statements that appear to me to be misleading. Mr. SNELL quotes the old Latin proverb, "Lack of confidence is not the result of difficulties; difficulties come from lack of confidence."

Webster defines confidence as "act of confiding, trust, belief." There is no lack of confidence on the part of the American people in the present administration. This is quite evident from the recent State elections. Proponents of declared new-deal administrative policies were swept into office, showing conclusively no lack of trust or belief in what is being done in the light of bringing about economic security. No more striking example can be illustrated than the recent contest for votes in the great State of Pennsylvania, my home State, November last, when the people rose in their might and eliminated from control of the government of Pennsylvania the monopolies and special interests that had control for the past 50 years.

Completing a year and one-half of the 2-year span given N. R. A. by the National Industrial Recovery Act, the new year of 1935 finds the Recovery Administration making for the maximum efficiency of its widespread code structure.

Stock-taking indicates several definite accomplishments including:

1. Elimination of child labor and the curtailment of industrial home work.

2. Establishment of the principle of a limited work week and minimum rates of pay.

3. Decrease of industrial unemployment and augmented wage purchasing power. This information on the three above-enumerated points is readily available, collected through the medium of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor, one of the best known and recognized authorities on the collection of statistics.

The great advantage of using this medium is that it is the official administrative source of information. I should like to give at this time their index of factory employment taken a month prior to the effective date of N. R. A. and bring it up to the last month recorded.

| | Percent |
|---|---|
| March 1933 | 58.8 |
| June 1933 | 66.9 |
| September 1933 | 80.0 |
| November 1933 | 76.2 |
| March 1934 | 80.8 |
| June 1934 | 81.1 |
| September 1934 | 75.8 |
| November 1934 | 76.8 |

These figures speak for themselves, and it is on such returns that the people predicate their confidence in the new deal.

4. Curtailment of cutthroat price competition by eliminating the possibility of sweatshop wages and the practice of wage cutting.

It is gratifying to note that the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce reports that factory pay rolls for 1934 were 32 percent higher than 1933.

Construction activity showed a 51-percent gain.

Freight-car loadings (sure-fire trade barometer) gained 8.6 percent.

Chain stores improved 8 percent.

Holiday sales were better by approximately 30 percent.

Combined figures of 290 national manufacturing companies showed increase of 11 percent for first 9 months of 1934.

Increase in farm income during year, more than $1,000,000,000, approximately 22 percent greater than 1933.

Virtual cessation of bank failures.

These figures depict the march of recovery in convincing terms.

Irrespective of people who feel that present conditions are not what they ought to be and find fault with whatever is done by the administration, this country is getting along pretty well, as the facts and figures show. Chronic critics will always be with us. There are still millions of wage earners, men and women, out of work. These must be taken care of until most of them find employment in industry.

There are two ways of meeting this inescapable problem—by direct relief, that is, the dole, or by putting them to work on public jobs. The first course would probably be the cheaper, in terms of what it takes to provide a living for an individual. The work system, however, takes into consideration not only the circumstances that the country gets back something in the form of public improvement, greater securities against such calamities as floods, fires, etc., but still more important is the value of preserving in the American people a spirit of self-respect. No self-respecting person wants charity where there is the alternative of earning a living.

Eighty-nine percent of the total households (families and single persons) receiving unemployment relief in five eastern cities of from 250,000 to 1,000,000 population is reemployable and willing to work. The Government should provide employment until private industry absorbs them.

President Roosevelt said in submitting the Budget: "The country will henceforth have the assurance that with the single exception of this item (unemployment relief) every current expenditure of whatever nature will be fully covered by our estimates of current receipts. Such deficit as occurs will be due solely to this cause and it may be expected to decline as rapidly as private industry is able to reemploy those who are now without work."

The Budget, which is for the fiscal year July 1, 1935, to June 30, 1936, shows total estimated receipts will be $59,000,000 in excess of regular expenditures.

The deficit, all caused by the relief program to June 30, 1936, in the form of emergency public-works projects, with the single exception of $575,000,000 for paying of debts, is estimated at $4,869,000,000. This, the President proposes to finance by drawing on the working balance of the Treasury for seven hundred and forty millions and borrowing three and three-quarter billions. This is a billion dollars under the borrowings for the current fiscal year.

Mr. SNELL stated that Mr. Ickes refuses to allocate funds to the city of New York until and unless Robert Moses, recently Republican candidate for Governor in New York, resigns from his position in the New York City administration if he is to direct the P. W. A. activities of New York as well.

Mr. SNELL has been grossly misinformed. The administrative order was not issued by Mr. Ickes to discriminate against Mr. Moses, but applies generally, and rightly so. Can any man serve two masters and do it well? Here we have a definite conflict of interest, Mr. Moses attempting to represent the Federal Government and the city of New York, and this the order is meant to correct, just that!

This demand has not emphatically been made to satisfy a personal political grudge as Mr. SNELL would have you believe.

Further, 12 requisitions from New York City for P. W. A. funds totaling $3,469,000 were honored in the last week.

In another portion of Mr. SNELL'S speech he severely criticizes the reciprocity treaties now being negotiated by the State Department. If this process was an approved Republican policy under President Howard Taft, what makes it an iniquitous thing under President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. SNELL states as his first demand that the Government "will immediately stabilize our currency at home and abroad." And the answer to that is that "The present purchasing power of our present gold dollar is still in excess of the purchasing power of the gold dollar at the dates Liberty bonds were sold." (From Robert H. Hemphill, financial authority of the Hearst newspapers, Friday, Jan. 18.)

And from the Wall Street Journal, January 18:

Mr. SNELL'S second demand that "It—the Government—will withdraw from the competitive field of honestly conducted private business and industry."

Answer. If by this Mr. SNELL means that the Government, through its advances by the R. F. C. has made it possible for solvent banks to be safe depositories of the people's money, the question might be asked of Mr. SNELL why he thinks it would be better if the R. F. S. recalled its loans to these institutions and so permitted a resumption of the runs which destroyed thousands of banks in the period antecedent to the advent of the present administration.

The R. F. C. lists actual disbursements as $2,027,064,236 in the Hoover administration and $4,821,008,987 since that time.

The capital structure of banks throughout the United States was strengthened by the releasing of the depositors' money in closed banks by the R. F. C. purchasing preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures of these institutions. Approximately 50 percent of the loans made to these institutions has been repaid.

If Mr. SNELL means that the Federal Housing Administration should let the foreclosure of homes go unchecked; if he means that the Farm Credit Administration should have permitted, and should now permit, the mortgaged farms of the country to be taken over by the banks, already overloaded with farm mortgages, what does he think the result would be of such procedure? If, on the other hand, he is referring to the N. R. A. codes, with their provisions for minimum wages and maximum hours, does he mean that he would reestablish the old order under which child labor disgraced certain branches of industry and made possible sweatshop competition which forced the selling of clothing and similar commodities at less than the cost of production? Moreover, does he not know that these codes for the major part were formulated by the industries themselves and are being administered by code authorities selected by these industries, with a nonvoting Government representative who is there solely to see that the code provisions are not nullified?

Mr. SNELL'S third proposal is that the Government "will reduce its bureaucratic expenditures and insist upon an honestly balanced Budget." The Treasury figures show that last year's expenditures for the normal processes of Government were a billion dollars below the figures for the previous year. As to the emergency expenditures to keep people from starvation and to preserve order in the country, which could not be done if millions of our population were left unaided, perhaps Mr. SNELL would be willing to suggest some program for doing this work that did not involve the spending of money. These millions could hardly be expected to starve peacefully. The so-called "bureaucratic expenditures" are constantly being decreased, but if this money is not to be wasted it requires a suitable personnel to administer it. As to whether they would have been under Hoover administration, that is solely a matter of opinion. Perhaps Mr. SNELL would like to make a comparison between the difference in policy of the last Republican administration and the policy and effort under the present administration and let the country decide again which of the two it prefers.

ZACHARY TAYLOR

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the life and public service of Zachary Taylor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

One hundred and forty-nine years ago Zachary Taylor, the twelfth President of the United States, was born. On November 24 last, over a National Broadcasting network, Hugh Gordon Miller, attorney and author, and my friend, under the auspices of the New York Southern Society, viewed the highlights of President Taylor's career. Mr. Miller was appointed by Governor Pollard, of Virginia, as chairman of the President Taylor One Hundred and Fiftieth Birthday Commission to inaugurate a program for the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary celebration of the birthday of President Taylor.

History indicates, as Mr. Miller so ably pointed out, that Zachary Taylor is one of the eight Presidential sons of old Virginia, being born in Orange County on November 24, 1784. Of seven Whigs nominated, he and Harrison were the only ones elected. He was the second President to die in office.

Many historians give Taylor's birth as September 24, but Abraham Lincoln, a contemporary statesman, at a contemporaneous date, gives it as November 2. Chambers' Encyclopedia, Appleton's, and the National Biography give his birthday as September 24. The New International Encyclopedia gives the date as November 24. There is no record of his birth in Washington. That point will, by a commission, be definitely settled before next year, when we will appropriately celebrate the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of the great President who was the outstanding hero of the Mexican War.

The New York Southern Society is now inaugurating a movement to so honor President Taylor, as a part of its 1934 program in reviving the history and traditions of the South. Governor Pollard of Virginia has recently appointed a commission for that purpose which will act in conjunction with the Southern Society.

In his infancy, Taylor's family took him to reside in Kentucky, where he grew up in a log cabin. He was the son of Col. Richard Taylor, a gallant Revolutionary officer. Like many other great men, he was self-educated. When his parents moved to Kentucky it was a part of Virginia. He lived on a frontier farm until he was 24 years of age. His elder brother, a lieutenant in the Regular Army, died and Zachary, then known as "Zachariah", was appointed in his place. His early military career was occupied in campaigning against savages.

Zachary Taylor was the first Regular Army man to be President, the only other being General Grant. Several other Presidents have seen war service but as citizen soldiers. Professional soldiers in this country are not usually promoted to high civil office. General Pershing, for instance, is not bothered with nominations for President.

At 23 Zachary Taylor was appointed by President Jefferson a lieutenant in the Regular Army. He remained in the Army until he was inaugurated President.

Taylor's part in the War of 1812 was not as spectacular as that of Andrew Jackson at New Orleans, or Admiral Perry on Lake Erie, but it was important. A great many Indian tribes allied themselves with the British. That presented a vital front for the new Nation. A special point of Indian attack centered on the Wabash River. Taylor was sent with a company of men to Fort Harrison. His little force was attacked by a large band under the great chief, Tecumseh. The Indians were beaten effectively. He was in active service against the Indian allies of the British until the close of the war.

He was colonel in command at Fort Crawford when the Black Hawk War began. He defeated and himself received the surrender of Black Hawk. In 1836 he defeated the Creeks and Seminole Indians in Florida at the Battle of Okeechobee, for which victory he received the rank of brigadier general.

In the Mexican War the United States had two commanders, Zachary Taylor, known as "Old Rough and Ready", and Winfield Scott. Scott's army landed on the coast at Vera Cruz and marched toward Mexico City. He had authority to take what troops he wanted from Taylor's army, which had been gathered together in the Southwest, where he was stationed.

Taylor, with mostly raw recruits, moved on toward the Rio Grande, which the United States now considered its southern border, and opened up his campaign with victorious battles, at Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma. He was outnumbered 3 to 1. The Mexican general ordered him to retreat beyond what Mexico claimed was the boundary, but he refused and fought a half-dozen victorious engagements. The Mexicans attacked him first and thus started the conflict. In the victorious attack on Monterey, Col. Jefferson Davis, Taylor's son-in-law, took a gallant part. We are prone to forget this part of the record of the future President of the Confederacy. Nevertheless, it is a part of our inspiring American history and our great southern tradition.

At the Battle of Buena Vista, Scott had borrowed nearly all of Taylor's regular troops, and he was outnumbered more than 4 to 1. To the Mexicans it appeared at first like a holiday parade.

It was here that Taylor at the critical moment ordered Captain Bragg to give them the "little more grape" which ended that impressive parade of the brilliant looking army of General Santa Ana. The Mexicans were decisively defeated. The decisive defeat of General Santa Ana at Buena Vista probably decided the Mexican War. Brilliant and pivotal movements of the American troops in the battle were commanded by Col. Jefferson Davis and by Captain Bragg, later a general in the Confederate Army. Indeed, the Mexican War furnished the training for Civil War generals on both sides.

A captain serving with distinction in the Quartermasters Department was Ulysses S. Grant. Grant got no special glory or mention in that unglamorous branch of the service but did get an experience in provisioning an army under difficulties which later made him the outstanding figure of the Union Army in the Civil War. U. S. Grant learned in Mexico, under Taylor, how to provision an army on the march, far from base, and amid great difficulties.

Capt. Robert E. Lee, later the imperishable hero of the Army of Northern Virginia, was at the same time fighting gallantly in the Engineer Corps and winning high honors from his commander, General Scott, who at the outbreak of the Civil War was unsuccessfully to urge upon Lee the command of the Union Army.

The Mexican War grew out of the fact that Texas, which had revolted from Mexico because of persecution of American residents it had invited to settle there, and which section had been a separate republic for 8 years, was, on its application, taken into the Union as a State. Mexico considered that admittance a cause for war and undertook to reclaim Texas. Over Texas, as a wilderness, before its settlement by those Americans and the establishment of that independence, Mexico had maintained a shadowy sort of jurisdiction.

General Taylor was simple in his home life, also as an official. General Grant recites that the one time he saw General Taylor in Mexico, though in action, he was wearing plain civilian clothes. His wife lived with him in tent and stockade, sending her children back to the settlements to be raised, as they came along.

His second daughter ran away and married Lt. Jefferson Davis, afterward President of the Confederacy. Taylor was furious with his eloping daughter and scornful of Davis. In a few months she died, unforgiven. Years passed, and the disowned son-in-law, Davis, who had never been reconciled with his father-in-law, kept out of the old man's way, until his bravery and brilliant success at the Battle of Buena Vista brought tears to the eyes of the old general, and they were reconciled on the battlefield.

Like Washington, Taylor's "modesty was only exceeded by his gallantry." When an oratorical visitor to his tent ventured to toast him as the next President he exclaimed, "Stop your nonsense and drink your whisky." The idea grew upon him, however, as it usually does upon those so mentioned, and he yielded.

The Whigs nominated him without knowing where he stood on any political question; and to cap the climax they made no platform for him to run on. Great problems confronted the Nation, but what they wanted was the prestige of Taylor's brilliant military record. For a while the Whigs were frightened at what they had done. No word came from their nominee for days as to whether he would accept the nomination or not, and they took alarm. He had not received his letter of notification. They had forgotten to prepay the postage at a time when the post office carried letters collect, and Zachary Taylor, on his plantation in Louisiana, not knowing its contents, was refusing to receive that unpaid mail.

Webster, Clay, and General Scott had all three been candidates for the Whig nomination. Clay, when Taylor was nominated, being a sport, then made the historic remark, "I would rather be right than be President." But Webster showed great bitterness.

Taylor, as already indicated, was not sure to which party he belonged, but finally declared, to the amusement of the country, that "he was a Whig, but not an ultra-Whig." There are times when lots of us, being Americans first, are not ultrapartisan. Taylor was merely more honest than most political candidates in making his other admission that, as to the campaign issues, he had "only the crudest impressions." We have seen many candidates in that state of mind, but not so candid.

As usually happens, however, with American Presidents, of which the present one is no exception, when faced with responsibility Taylor turned out to be a tower of strength. He showed an uncompromising determination to uphold the Union, though so much of a southerner that his daughter had married Jefferson Davis and his son became a general in the Confederate Army.

Prominent citizens told him some States would secede from the Union if California was admitted as a free State. He denounced their talk as treasonable and warned them that for any overt act they would be treated accordingly. The same interests claimed a large part of the State of Texas and threatened to drive out the Federal troops stationed there. President Taylor replied:

Then I will command the Army in person and hang any man taken in treason.

He kept himself fully informed, and, like Andrew Jackson, when South Carolina threatened to secede, he prepared the forces against a sudden outbreak regardless of the threats of southern extremists and thus avoided a break at that time and postponed the sectional conflict for more than 10 years. Had he lived out his first term and been reelected, the whole bloody climax might have been avoided.

The admission of California into the Union and the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty with Great Britain for a water route across the Isthmus of Panama, upon which is founded our title to the right-of-way of that international highway and the Panama Zone, were the most important achievements of the 16 months of the Zachary Taylor administration.

In 1849 Nicaragua had granted a concession to a company of United States capitalists to build such a canal, but Great Britain controlled one end of the route and the United States the other.

The Clayton-Bulwer Treaty and its successor, the Hay-Pauncefote Treaty, which succeeded it in 1905, reaffirming its "general principle" of "equal tolls for all nations", along with Washington's Farewell Address and the Monroe Doctrine as at present interpreted, in principle will no doubt permanently dominate our foreign policy. Those commitments certainly furnish a large part of the background of our permanent foreign policy.

Taken together with the Monroe Doctrine, the Canal-treaty arrangements, begun under President Taylor and completed under President Theodore Roosevelt, certainly tie the foreign policy and the fate of the English-speaking world together permanently for good or ill.

Upon the request of the United States, and on its basic commitments, which have been mentioned by Mr. Miller, Great Britain surrendered its Canal franchise and allowed the United States to assume the responsibility of building and operating the project alone.

Few people know that the father of President Franklin D. Roosevelt was deeply interested in the early Nicaraguan canal project. President Roosevelt's father was one of the pioneers of that isthmian canal enterprise. In that connection Mr. Miller quotes a paragraph from a letter from the President written to him in reference to the first edition of a volume he wrote relating the history of that great American adventure, under the title of the "Isthmian Highway." The then Governor Roosevelt wrote:

I am particularly glad to read it (the book) as it brings back many personal memories; in fact, I go back in my early memory to the days when my father was tremendously interested in the original Nicaraguan canal project. From then on I had had a deep interest in the whole question of the Isthmus. You have done a real service in telling the story of it.

Parenthetically, that comment illustrates how progressive and adventurous, even to the point of experiment, both branches of the Roosevelt family have always been. It shows also how our present President reads even the dryest books, if they might throw special light on the Government of the United States. That is why he has shown himself such a master of the workings of our Government and its necessities at this trying hour. The Roosevelt motto might well be "nothing ventured, nothing gained."

It was peculiarly fitting that Theodore Roosevelt should have been finally responsible for inaugurating the construction of that great adventure, the history of which began under President Taylor with the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. Theodore Roosevelt was criticized for the Canal adventure even more severely than Franklin D. Roosevelt is criticized now for his recovery adventure. They said the Panama adventure was not constitutional. The spirit of adventure is truly the spirit of America.

Zachary Taylor was honest, independent and fearless, and devoted to the country which he served with distinction for more than 40 years. As a part of our birthday tribute we intend to nominate him, as one of our great Presidents, to the Hall of Fame.

FEDERAL FEED AND SEED LOANS

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of H. R. 3247—a bill to meet the conditions created by the 1934 drought and to provide for loans for farmers in drought- and storm-stricken areas. I represent the First Congressional District of Nebraska, comprising 11 counties in the southeastern part of the State. In my campaign I traveled over 10,000 miles, visiting every hamlet and section of this part of the State. No one who has not seen these drought-stricken areas has any conception of what it means to these people and the far-reaching consequences it entails. Normally eastern Nebraska is one of the finest and most productive districts of the so-called "Corn Belt" section.

This drought was the most severe and most extensive that American agriculture has experienced. There were many fields where the seed did not have moisture enough to germinate and the fields were bare and dead. In other fields the corn plant had gained a growth of a few feet, and under the scorching heat and wind the white, withered leaves lay prostrate on the ground. The pastures were bare and not a spear of grass was to be seen. Cattle were mere skeletons and bawling from hunger. In some instances farmers shot cattle to put them out of their misery since these cattle were too emaciated to be marketed for food purposes. Feed was not obtainable, or only at exorbitant prices which made the feeding unprofitable.

This situation was made all the worse by the impoverished condition of our farmers. For years they had been operating at a tremendous financial loss. For years their fixed and overhead expenses, based on a high price level, had to be met by the sale of their products which were based on a low price level, so they were ever sinking deeper and deeper in the mire of financial ruin and despair by no reason of their own.

In this situation the farmers were overtaken by the most unprecedented drought in American history. Their situation is a national catastrophe of major proportion. These farmers need financial aid, and need it at once. Preparations for seeding must be made soon. Time is the essence in this case.

We must bear in mind that in aiding the farmers' recovery we are getting right at the root of the recovery problem. By restoring the farmer to his rightful economic position and by restoring his purchasing power we are opening our best market for American industrial products. The prosperity of America depends on the prosperity of American agriculture. There is nothing that this Congress can do at this time that will help more to enable the farmer to make a new start than to aid him in saving his stock and provide him with funds to buy seed to plant his fields.

I am sorry that this bill comes before us in this way, which makes it impossible to amend. I think $1,000,000 for feed is too small. It should be much more. I hope the Senate will see fit to double this amount.

The provision in the bill requiring that the applicant for a feed or seed loan shall comply with the crop production control program is a proper requirement. Private loan organizations and banks prescribe requirements before granting loans to applicants. There is nothing in this bill that is at cross purposes with the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

I demand that in the administration of this act red tape be cut down to the minimum. I hope it will be administered in a just and common-sense manner. Much criticism has been made, and justly so, as to the manner in which some of these governmental agencies have been conducted. It is deplorable that we cannot undertake any governmental activity without being tied hand and foot in a maze of red tape.

I want to register my protest here against the silly and childish way that some of our bureaucrats are conducting public business. I am also opposed to paying these bureaucrats exorbitantly high wages at a time when millions of people are out of employment and are dependent upon charity or Government relief.

I am in favor of this bill as a whole but wish that the defects in section 4 could be eliminated.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague Mr. GILLETTE, would like to be excused on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request is granted.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members of the House may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks on this bill which we have just had under consideration.

The SPEAKER. On the bill or resolution?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. On the bill and resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, would it not be well to put in there that the gentlemen who spoke this afternoon may also be allowed to revise and extend their remarks?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is included in my request.

Mr. SNELL. If that is included in the gentleman's request, all right.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I will not object—it seems to me that the Membership of this House should have at least 5 days to explain to their constituents back home why they voted for this gag rule and dictatorship. They should have a month to explain such action.

Mr. MEAD demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

APPROPRIATION FOR RELIEF PURPOSES

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 117, making appropriations for relief purposes.

The resolution was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 117, with Mr. O'CONNOR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the joint resolution be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] is recognized for an hour and a half, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] for an hour and a half.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the President in his message to us last Congress used this language:

> Among our objectives I place the security of the men, women, and children of the Nation first.

In his message to us this Congress he sets forth the method by which he thinks the welfare of the men, women, and children can be accomplished.

He stated three objectives that he hoped to obtain: First, the security of a livelihood through the better use of the national resources of the land in which we live; second, security against the major hazards and vicissitudes of life; and, third, the security of decent homes.

I submit that these objectives can never be obtained, or any one of them obtained, as long as we have some fifteen to twenty million people on the relief rolls in this country. Therefore, as a foundation, and as a starting point toward obtaining these great objectives which he named, we must first put the employables who are on the relief rolls to work. No nation can progress, no nation can ever retain its station, with one-fifteenth of its population on relief. In other words, any nation that has and maintains that percentage of its citizens on relief will have to go backward and not forward.

This appropriation and this resolution are fundamental necessities for the recovery and the progress of our country out of this depression.

Again the President used, in speaking of unemployment problems, the following language:

> The lessons of history, confirmed by the evidence immediately before me, shows conclusively that continued dependence upon relief induces a spiritual and moral disintegration fundamentally destructive to the national fiber. To dole out relief in this way is to administer a narcotic, a subtle destroyer of the human spirit. It is inimicable to the dictates of sound policy. It is in violation of the traditions of America. Work must be found for able-bodied destitute workers.

This sentence will stand out like a star throughout the world. I may state that his message was about eight pages long and about half of the message was taken up in dealing with the unemployment and relief situation.

He also stated in that message that since the adjournment of the last Congress he had devoted his time, his attention, and his research in an endeavor to work out a just and fair solution of the relief problem. He presents this solution to you as Members of Congress and asks for your cooperation in carrying it forward in the interest of our common country. He stated that he would later send his Budget; that he would request the amount that would be necessary to carry out the program of stopping the dole and putting the three and one-half million employable people now on the relief rolls to work. He stated that these figures would be well within the sound credit of the Government. He sent these figures, and here is what he said in his Budget message:

> I recommend that $4,000,000,000 be appropriated by the Congress in one sum, subject to allocation by the Executive, for giving work to these unemployed on the relief roll. An estimate of expenditure covering this amount is included in the Budget—

And it was included in the Budget, and it is $4,000,000,000.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Does the gentleman contend that the purpose stated in the President's message, for which he wants to use this four and a half billion dollars, is the same purpose stated in the bill with respect to the use of that amount?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Absolutely; the same purpose stated in the bill, and I state this, not only from a reading of the resolution but from several personal conversations with the President in which this subject was fully discussed, and from hearing his representatives disclose the purposes before my committee. The entire appropriation and the joint resolution is for the one purpose of taking three and a half million men off of the dole and relief and putting them to work.

Mr. MOTT. Then may I ask the gentleman what language contained in this joint resolution limits in any way the expenditure of any part of the four and a half billion dollars—what restrictions are put upon the President in the expenditure of this money and what purposes are stated?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The restrictions are placed upon him in the fourth provision at the beginning of the resolution.

I cannot yield further, because I have only 20 minutes. I wish I had more time, but the demand for time is such that I have had to cut my time short.

In this brief discussion I am going to call your attention to a few facts and figures which will demonstrate to you beyond question that we are making progress in reducing the appropriations and expenditures for relief and recovery—making great progress.

First, if your present system is continued, whereby the Federal Government furnishes 75 percent of the total amount for relief and local committees determine who shall be put on the relief roll and what amount shall be given them, God pity Uncle Sam and his Treasury. If you had started out in the beginning and required every county to furnish 25 percent, every State to furnish 25 percent, and the Federal Government 50 percent you would have at least 30 percent less on the relief rolls throughout the Nation, because when people are dishing out money which they personally contribute, they dish it out with more caution and economy.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will permit, does that argue that 30 percent of the people on the relief rolls should not be there?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Absolutely and unquestionably.

Let me give you some figures. In 1934 we expended for relief and recovery $4,283,000,000. In 1935, this fiscal year, we have expended or will expend $5,260,000,000, making a total for the 2 years of $9,543,000,000.

What do we ask here? We ask $4,000,000,000 in this appropriation. Add to that the processing taxes that will be expended as a part of the recovery plan, add to that the $112,000,000 that is unexpended in past appropriations but obligated, and this will make a grand total for 1936 and 1937 of $4,582,000,000. In other words, for 2 years, 1936 and 1937, we are appropriating only $4,582,000,000, whereas for this year and the last year, 1934 and 1935, we appropriated and expended $9,543,000,000, or a retrenchment or reduction in relief and recovery of $4,961,000,000.

Some man may say, "They will spend all this money in the next fiscal year and come back to us at the next Congress for another relief appropriation." My Democratic colleagues, and I am talking to you now, it is confidently expected that this $4,582,000,000 will complete the job, and if we have any appropriation to make for relief at the next Congress, it will be infinitesimal compared with the amount we have spent in the past and the amounts we are carrying in this bill.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman care to yield there? The gentleman has lots of time that he can get and I have a pertinent question I should like to ask. The gentleman has mentioned the expenditure of this large amount of money for direct relief and work relief.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Relief and recovery.

Mr. MOTT. At the last session. I simply want to suggest to the gentleman that if this bill simply provided four and a half billion dollars for direct relief and work relief there would not be a single objection on the Republican side of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I know, but on the Democratic side there would be great objection, because we are determined to stop the dole in this country. Do you want to destroy the spirit, the initiative, and the enterprise of American citizens, and teach them to be dependent, and even demand of the Government that it support them in this Republic?

Mr. MOTT. Then I limit my statement to work relief alone—there would be no objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is one other subject I want to call your attention to very briefly. I get this from the last report of the Emergency Relief Administration. Between August and September, just 1 month, 31 States of the Union increased their relief rolls 8 percent, and only 17 States decreased their relief rolls, and such decrease was 4 percent.

What is the cause of this increase when recovery and employment is progressing as we expected? Some of your local committees are putting hundreds of thousands of people on the rolls who have no business there.

In January 1933 the Federal Government furnished only 51 percent of the entire money for relief. The States and local districts furnished the balance—49 percent. In January 1934 the Federal Government furnished 53 percent, and in December 1934 the Federal Government is furnishing 75 percent.

Ah, gentlemen, if you let that system go on, your Relief Administration will become such that it will consume every dollar in the Federal Treasury.

It would consume one-third of the net income of the Nation. There is no check to it, no stop to it.

The President has wisely said that the dole must and shall be stopped. I say it must be stopped, if the financial standing and credit of the United States is to be preserved.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. What has the Federal Government done to stop the expenditure of these Federal funds in the States where they are being expended? What has it done to put a stop to the situation?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It has not done anything effective so far, but this resolution proposes to stop it once and for all.

As I stated, the Federal Government started out by the States contributing 14 percent, then they went up to 32 percent of the entire amount of relief, and now in December they drop down to 7 percent. The States and local communities are shifting the burden onto the shoulders of the Federal Government.

Now, gentlemen, I am going to conclude. I look upon the President's message as one of the greatest state papers ever filed in the history of the world. It sets him out as one of the outstanding philosophers and philanthropists of the world. I tell you that I firmly believe that when the great men of other nations are known only in story and song the name of Franklin D. Roosevelt will be remembered and revered as one of the greatest philosophers and philanthropists that the world has ever known. You will do well to follow his leadership. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes. This legislation is neither alone relief legislation nor work relief legislation. I am going to give you the history of the legislation a little bit so that the Members of the House may know what they are voting on. I am going to describe this joint resolution to you so that you will know what it is, and some of the insidious things that it will lead to.

We started in on this program of the present administration when in the middle of June 1933 we appropriated $3,300,000,000 for relief. That money was turned over by the Executive to Messrs. Hopkins and Ickes to allocate and spend; and what has happened? They told us that we were to have work-relief programs, and that we were to have relief immediately. Out of the $3,300,000,000 that was appropriated at that time there still remains in the Treasury of the United States $1,700,000,000, or more than half of it, and it has not in a year and 8 months been spent for relief or relief work.

The only work-relief project that was undertaken by them—the C. W. A.—was pronounced by Mr. Hopkins, the man in charge of it, a complete flop. You are asked now to turn over to that same incompetence $4,000,000,000, to be monkeyed with in the same way. They have placed it upon projects which do not take care of the relief, on projects that are far away from the centers where great relief was required, far away from where employment could be provided for the people who needed it, and then just twiddled along without accomplishing anything except this. During that time we have increased the number of families on relief by 1,000,000. During that time we have established the C. C. C., and that means a half million more on relief.

During that time, with these projects which they have operated, we have provided a sort of employment for a half million to a million men. It is now proposed, they say, to place three and a half million men at work. Three and a half million men at $50 a month, as Admiral Peoples said they would be placed for a year, would be $2,100,000,000, and the cost of keeping them at work would be double that. That means it would take $8,000,000,000 for 1 year. Just as they came to you before in June 1933, they come to you now, with no definite program of what they would do. They have things they imagine, things that they tell you they might do, but they have no definite program. Is the Congress of the United States going to be so supine, so foolish, and so ignorant that it will turn over to the same incompetence the authority to allot money without having definite proof of the projects before it? This is not legislation under which men can be put to work, and the Congress of the United States will never have a bill under which men can be put to work until it allots the projects and sets them up. Within 3 months' time they could set up these projects and could come before the Committee on Appropriations, and they could be established and the money appropriated, and not unconstitutionally attempt to turn the powers of Congress over to an incompetent authority as is done in this bill.

On top of this, this joint resolution does a lot of other things. Under section 1, the way it is worded, read in connection with section 4, it permits the Executive or those incompetents, Hopkins and Ickes, to whom he delegated authority, to put the Government into business directly or through agencies he may set up. During all this time, under their operations, we have increased the number of unemployed in America.

We have two courses open to us, one to provide for direct relief—and this bill does far more than that—the other to provide for work relief—and this does not do that. Will the credit of the United States stand the other thing? That is for you to say. But in saying so—and we must meet our problem of relief—do not turn over to the Executive the power and authority to regiment and socialize the United States. The people do not want that. That means the end of progress, the end of development. It means the breakdown of those institutions that we have fought and bled for for 150 years. I beseech you to cast politics aside and meet the problem that is before you and vote down this proposition, designed to destroy the institutions of America.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. COX. What are the powers, if any, that are covered up in paragraph (d) of section 4 of the resolution?

Mr. TABER. I will be frank with the gentleman. The Committee on Appropriations this morning voted to offer an amendment as a committee amendment, behind which was supposed to be the support of the administration, to wipe out paragraph (d).

Mr. COX. All of paragraph (d), without substituting anything to effectuate the purpose that was evidently intended in the language of the clause?

Mr. TABER. That is correct?

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield for one more question.

Mr. COX. I wanted to ask the gentleman with respect to paragraph (a) of section 4.

Mr. TABER. That paragraph is the paragraph under which the socialization of industry can be set up. Under it people can be made to work or not to work.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman construe that paragraph to delegate the power to charter corporations and to fix their duties?

Mr. TABER. Absolutely. There is no question about that. It seems to me that this legislation is the worst thing that has ever been brought before the House of Representatives. Not only is it the delegation of authority, but a delegation of authority to continue the incompetent method of handling the relief situation, which has gone on for a year and a half and has done nothing except to build up the number of unemployed, destroy the confidence of the people, and governmentally prevent private industry from putting people back to work.

A vote against this resolution is not a vote against relief. It is against throwing away a lot of money by turning it over to the people who will not spend it for what it was intended. If the Members of Congress will have the courage to vote this bill down, to study the situation, and provide definite projects that could provide work relief where the work relief is needed, there would be an argument in favor of a work-relief bill, if it would not cost so much that it ruined the credit of the Government. If no projects can be found which the Government can afford to put through, we cannot go on with the work-relief program.

Frankly, in my opinion, if it is going to cost between $12,000,000,000 and $15,000,000,000 a year, as I believe it is, to provide employment for all with work relief, I do not believe the credit of the Government can stand it. This bill does not provide work relief for the unemployed. It is a half-way measure. The $4,000,000,000 carried in this bill, I predict, will be handled in the same drag-out way that the previous appropriations have been handled and will not be spent within 18 months.

I want to see a course laid out which will restore confidence, which will stop this foolish, reckless proposition, tending to prevent everything that we in our own hearts want to see come back. I am going to offer some amendments as we read the bill, and I hope this House will, in no uncertain terms, go on record against putting the Government in business. [Applause.]

I hope the House will go on record, in no uncertain terms, against the incompetent method of handling this relief situation without knowing what it is doing and without seeming to care.

We must meet our responsibility here today. Let us do it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, as my good friend and colleague on the committee [Mr. TABER] was inveighing so vehemently against this novel principle of government, introduced in this bill, my mind traveled back about 8 or 10 years ago when, as one of a very few Democrats on this side, I voted with the gentleman from New York and his party, when that identical principle was first introduced into our governmental system, as far as I know.

My friend knits his brow. He does not recall. We had for a number of years followed the detestable, illogical, and unworkable policy of trying to have the House of Representatives and the Senate write our public-buildings bill. It had always brought confusion, logrolling, trading, and the charge of pork-barrel legislation leveled against the legislative body. So the gentleman's party wisely, and we all occasionally have lucid intervals, wisely upon that occasion—

I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman also tell the House that when we passed that bill we had before us a definite allocation from the Supervising Architect as to what we were to build?

Mr. WOODRUM. No; I beg to differ with the gentleman. Wisely, the gentleman's party came to the Congress and in the interest of good sense and orderly legislation and economy, asked the Congress to appropriate $100,000,000 for public buildings, and give it to the President of the United States to allocate those projects upon the advice of the Postmaster General and the Secretary of the Treasury; absolutely identical with the principle involved in this bill except as to the amounts.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield? I just want to ask the gentleman from New York a question.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not want the gentleman to take up my time arguing with the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RANKIN. I just wanted to ask the gentleman from New York if he had before him the plan of this Commerce Building down here that was built below sea level, at an expense of $16,000,000, and out of which they now have to pump the water?

Mr. TABER. We did not have the plan, but they had a set-up for it, and the amount of money.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman said we had an allocation. We had a list of projects filed in the hearings, with the definite, specific statement that they were in no way binding upon the Department; and hundreds of them never were built. I know because I served upon the Public Buildings Committee.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. TABER. They could not be built until the specific appropriation had been made.

Mr. WOODRUM. And some of them never were built.

Now, what is the proposition here today? I believe it is the desire of the American people to see able-bodied American citizens, who are now being given bread baskets in front of relief stations, put to work to earn their salaries, earn their wages, and not to have it handed to them at relief agencies. That is what the President asks you to do. That is what we are fighting for. That is what the minority side of this House is opposing. They are opposing the effort of the President to take able-bodied people off of direct relief and give them honest employment in a work-relief program.

Now, if there is one fundamental principle involved in this recovery program to which the Congress ought to be willing to subscribe, it is the effort of the President to get off of relief and onto a work-relief program. Now, what has he done? Questions have been asked as to who prepared this bill; whose idea is it? Well, if the gentlemen had kept abreast of what was going on during the summer, they would know the President appointed an Emergency Advisory Council. For months they have been studying the situation, taking evidence, studying contracts, getting sample projects, figuring how best men can be immediately put to work at gainful employment at wages above relief doles and yet not high enough to attract them away from industry. The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, was a member of that council. Admiral Peoples, now head of the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department, was a member of that council. I should like to have you gentlemen between now and tomorrow get a copy of the hearings and read the splendid, admirable statement of Admiral Peoples, who has studied the bill and studied the plan and will give you a very convincing argument, I think, upon the merits of this bill.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. FISH. Who is the sponsor of this legislation?

Mr. WOODRUM. The President of the United States asked for this legislation. He has back of it a thorough survey and comprehensive study made by responsible officers of the Government.

Mr. FISH. Does the gentleman mean to tell this House that the President of the United States wrote this bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. He may have sat down to a typewriter and typed it off.

Mr. FISH. Well, did he? The gentleman is trying to be facetious. Who is the sponsor of the bill?

Mr. WOODRUM. It is an administration measure.

Mr. FISH. Well, who is the author of it? Does the gentleman maintain the President is the author of it?

Mr. WOODRUM. I maintain that the President asked for the provisions of this bill, and I imagine that he has the advice of legislative counsel and others.

Mr. FISH. Who recommended the bill to him? The gentleman knows the President did not write the bill. We are entitled to know who wrote the bill.

Mr. WOODRUM. I do not think the gentleman's question deserves the taking of time from a speech on the floor of the House.

If Congress undertook, as has been intimated, to handle this legislation by having the Members of the House sit down and try to allocate $4,000,000,000, or even $2,000,000,000 of work projects, we would never get it out. There is only one way under high heaven that it can be done and that is the very way it is being done here. And I want to say in reply to the arguments that have been made about the delegation of power and about dictatorship and all the other similar criticisms we have been hearing ever since Franklin D. Roosevelt went into the White House, that the people of the country last November answered just what they thought about it; and their answer was that they would rather live in America under the humane, beneficent dictatorship of Franklin D. Roosevelt than under the colorless, spineless, devastating leadership they had had for 12 years. [Applause.]

Of course, it is a broad delegation of power. Why, the President could wreck this Government with the power we have already delegated to him, if he wanted to; of course, he could do it. When we went into the World War, General Pershing was made the head of our troops. He could have given the order "about face" and turned his army so that the withering fire of the enemy would have gone into their backs, if he had wanted to. But is there any man who can think he wanted to? Is there any man who is idiot enough to stand up here and think that Franklin D. Roosevelt is any less interested in the permanent recovery of the Nation than we are? He has a plan, and under that plan recovery is going forward. During the 2 years he has been in office he has given us a good government. He has used wisely the powers that have been delegated to him. If he has made mistakes, God knows he has not made half as many mistakes as you or I would have made had we undertaken to do what he has done. [Applause.]

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. MAY. I would suggest to my friend the gentleman from Virginia as an answer to the query of the gentleman on the other side that by reason of the fact the House of Representatives has a Membership of 435, we have some 25 or 30 committees to which we refer matters because we cannot settle them all ourselves.

Mr. WOODRUM. Certainly.

Mr. MAY. And each committee deals with a particular subject.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield.

Mr. EATON. In this delegation of power, how will it help afford relief to have the President take personal property by eminent domain?

Mr. WOODRUM. Of course, I would expect that kind of a question from my friend over there.

Mr. EATON. Sure; because it is a sensible question.

Mr. WOODRUM. If it comes to a question of condemning somebody's property when men are starving, I am ready to help commit the larceny. We are thinking about human life, and by February 1 the $880,000,000 carried in this joint resolution for direct relief must be available. If it is not then available, how will the gentleman explain to his constituents the delay? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks a bill which I have introduced dealing with a relief project.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, I rise in support of House Resolution 117, said resolution making appropriation for relief purposes.

This resolution has, after careful study, been prepared by the President and submitted to the Congress and represents his supreme effort toward recovery and the relief of unemployment and the care for the needy in our great Nation. He has called upon the Congress in his message for cooperation to provide employment for three and a half million people who are able to earn their living and who are now on the relief rolls. It represents his effort to pass from the dole to gainful employment and occupation. I do not admit any great degree of the delegation of legislative powers to the Executive, but if powers are delegated, I have no fear that the small powers delegated in this resolution to the Chief Executive will be abused by President Roosevelt. The public welfare is not at all in danger through the small delegation of power which this resolution may carry. On the other hand, the public welfare and the best interest of the American people demand prompt and effective action, and this resolution and method has been selected by the President as the proper medium.

It is interesting to note the strong opposition to this resolution on the Republican side of the House. You, gentlemen, should be the last to resist an honest and earnest effort toward recovery in our country, and toward relief of destitution. Those of us who have served in the Congress for the past several years must be fully aware of the Republican policies and privileged legislation passed over Democratic opposition, which has largely brought about the chaotic conditions found in our country when the people delivered the Government to the Democratic Party. Instead of opposing, you should rise in unanimous support of the President's gigantic effort to correct mistakes made by your own administration.

It is obvious that the President may well be trusted to carry out the provisions of this resolution in every respect, as the best evidence of his ability to thus perform is the improvement in general of conditions in our country since he was inaugurated President. This improvement in industry, in business, in the price of farm produce, in the loosening up of credit, in the strengthening of financial institutions, has been brought about through the wisdom and action of the President and his administration. This is a huge appropriation, it is true, but the conditions demand it and the purposes are most laudable. It is believed that with the carrying out of the provisions of this resolution, recovery in our country will be assured. This huge public-works program will give employment to millions of our people and will reestablish in them hope, courage, and that individual responsibility which has always been conducive to the stability of our Government.

Practically all of us are interested in many projects which will be carried forth when this appropriation is made, and among those which I believe are outstanding I would list first the ship canal across northern Florida, connecting the waters of the Atlantic Ocean with those of the Gulf of Mexico. This project has been thought of and talked of for about a century, but of recent months has gained the ear of our leading advocates of waterway improvements and wisest industrialists. Under provisions of the bill which I introduced in 1925 preliminary examination of proposed routes was made. Under the provisions of H. R. 9650, which was introduced by me on February 7, 1930, actual physical surveys of several routes across northern Florida have now been completed. Standing out among preferred routes are the St. Marys-Okefenokee-Suwannee route, the Black Creek to Deadmans Bay route, the St. Johns-Santa Fe-Cedar Key route, and the St. Johns-Ocklawaha-Withlacoochee route. Surveys have been made by the Public Works engineers and by the Board of United States Army Engineers, and it has been agreed that the canal is an engineering possibility and will redound great benefits to the commercial life of America.

On January 3, 1935, I introduced H. R. 2785, which is as follows:

A bill to provide for the construction of a canal across northern Florida, connecting the waters of the Atlantic Ocean and the Gulf of Mexico

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire, through purchase or otherwise, from the State of Florida, persons, individuals, firms and/or corporations, for and on behalf of the United States, upon such terms as he may deem reasonable, perpetual control of a strip of land not less than 7 miles in width, extending from the Atlantic Ocean across northern Florida to the Gulf of Mexico, and the right to use and dispose of the waters thereon, and to excavate, construct, and to perpetually maintain, operate, and protect thereon a canal of such depth and capacity as will afford convenient passage of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from the Atlantic Ocean to the Gulf of Mexico, and also jurisdiction over said strip of land and the ports at the ends thereof.

That the President may acquire such additional territory and rights from the State of Florida, persons, individuals, firms and/or corporations as in his judgment will facilitate the general purpose hereof.

SEC. 2. The President shall have the right to rebuild and replace bridges on said lands and rights-of-way.

SEC. 3. That when the President shall have arranged title and control for the necessary territory from the State of Florida, persons, individuals, firms and/or corporations, he is authorized to pay not exceeding $2,535,000 for said lands and rights-of-way, and is authorized to rebuild and replace bridges over said canal at a cost of not to exceed $4,910,000, and a sum sufficient for both said purposes is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on warrant or warrants drawn by the President.

The President shall then, through the Florida Roosevelt Canal Commission, hereinafter authorized, cause to be excavated, constructed, and completed a ship canal from the Atlantic Ocean across northern Florida to the Gulf of Mexico. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as shall afford convenient passage for vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest draft now in use, and such as may be reasonably anticipated, and shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing through the same from ocean to gulf; and he shall also cause to be constructed such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal, and make, in his discretion, such provisions for defense as may be necessary for the safety and protection of said canal and harbors. That the President is authorized for the purposes aforesaid to employ such persons as he may deem necessary, and to fix their compensation.

SEC. 4. That the President shall utilize any helpful information obtainable in surveys heretofore made by the Board of United States Army Engineers and the Public Works Administration engineers.

In the excavation and construction of said canal, rivers, lakes, and other natural waters, or such parts of each as may be made available, shall be used. The most feasible route across northern Florida shall be employed.

SEC. 5. That the sum of $25,000,000 is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, toward the project herein contemplated by such route across northern Florida as is selected.

And the President is hereby authorized to cause to be entered into such contract or contracts as may be deemed necessary for the proper excavation, construction, completion, and defense of said canal, harbors, and defenses, by the route finally determined upon under the provisions of this act. Appropriations therefor shall from time to time be hereafter made, not to exceed in the aggregate the additional sum of $200,000,000.

SEC. 6. That to enable the President to construct the canal and works appurtenant thereto as provided in this act, there is hereby created the Florida Roosevelt Canal Commission, the same to be composed of seven members, who shall be nominated and appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall serve until the completion of said canal unless sooner removed by the President, and one of whom shall be named as the chairman of said commission. Of the 7 members of said commission at least 4 of them shall be persons learned and skilled in the science of engineering, and of the 4 at least 1 shall be an officer of the United States Army, and at least 1 other shall be an officer of the United States Navy, the said officers, respectively, being either upon the active or retired list of the Army or of the Navy. Said commissioners shall each receive such compensation as the President shall prescribe until the same shall have been otherwise fixed by the Congress. In addition to the members of the said Florida Roosevelt Canal Commission, the President is hereby authorized through said commission to employ in said service any of the engineers of the United States Army at his discretion, and likewise to employ any engineers in civil life, at his discretion, and any other persons necessary for the proper and expeditious prosecution of said work. The compensation of all such engineers and other persons employed under this act shall be fixed by said commission, subject to the approval of the President. The official salary of any officer appointed or employed under this act shall be deducted from the amount of salary or compensation provided by or which shall be fixed under the terms of this act. Said commission shall in all matters be subject to the direction and control of the President, and shall make to the President annually and at such other periods as may be required, either by law or by the order of the President, full and complete reports of all their actings and doings and of all moneys received and expended in the construction of said work and in the performance of their duties in connection therewith, which said reports shall be by the President transmitted to Congress. And the said commission shall furthermore give to Congress, or either House of Congress, such information as may at any time be required either by act of Congress or by the order of either House of Congress. The President shall cause to be provided and assigned for the use of the commission such offices as may, with the suitable equipment of the same, be necessary and proper, in his discretion, for the proper discharge of the duties thereof.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to borrow on the credit of the United States from time to time as the proceeds may be required to defray expenditures authorized by this act (such proceeds when received to be used only for the purpose of meeting such expenditures), the sum of $200,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, and to prepare and issue therefor coupon or registered bonds of the United States in such form as he may prescribe, and in denominations of $20 or some multiple of that sum, redeemable in gold coin at the pleasure of the United States after 10 years from the date of their issue, and payable 30 years from such date, and bearing interest payable quarterly in gold at the rate of 2¼ percent per annum; and the bonds herein authorized shall be exempt from all taxes or duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form by or under the State, municipal, or local authority: Provided, That said bonds may be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury at not less than par, under such regulations as he may prescribe, giving to all citizens of the United States an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor, but no commissions shall be allowed or paid thereon; and a sum not exceeding one-tenth of 1 percent of the amount of the bonds herein authorized is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the expense of preparing, advertising, and issuing the same.

SEC. 8. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to, in his discretion, employ any funds appropriated for the Public Works Administration, or general waterways development and improvement funds, in lieu of bond issuance as mentioned in section 7 hereof.

This bill is now before the Rivers and Harbors Committee and a large number of my colleagues have expressed a deep interest in its prompt report and passage. Practically all waterways-improvement organizations in the country have repeatedly endorsed the project and petitioned the Congress for its completion. High State officials from practically all States east of the Rocky Mountains have from time to time expressed a deep interest in this great project because it will bring to the American people, in general, a substantial reduction in transportation cost, and a huge saving to the shipping public, producers, and consumers.

On one of the routes surveyed, the canal would be 200 miles in length, including 27 miles in the shoal water of the Gulf of Mexico. The summit level would be 40 feet above sea level. The available water supply is adequate for the maximum development of traffic on this route. The final estimates, based on costs now anticipated, show a net construction cost to the United States of $199,481,000, not including the lands and rights-of-way with a value of $2,535,000, and bridges over existing waterways at a cost of $4,910,000.

The annual cost of operation and maintenance of this canal on the most advantageous route is estimated at $1,930,000. Adding the interest charges, the total annual cost becomes $11,439,000. These costs have been disputed by some of the best engineers in the country because it is believed that the canal can be constructed for about half the above figures, and we may be assured that if this canal is constructed under the provisions of House Joint Resolution 117, every possible economy will be observed and every possible waste eliminated.

The estimates hereinafter set forth are for a canal having a depth of 35 feet, a width in the contracted rock sections of 250 feet, and in the remainder of the land section of 400 feet. Locks are provided in duplicate with a clear length of 1,000 feet and width of 110 feet in one lock, a length of 610 feet and width of 110 feet in the second lock, and with 40 feet over the sills. The estimates include the provision of the necessary bridges over the land cut with a minimum vertical clearance of 135 feet. The dimensions of the canal and locks are considered necessary to realize the primary purpose of the canal, which is to reduce the time of voyages between the Gulf ports and Atlantic ports.

It is believed that a canal of these dimensions will be adequate to handle vessels which use the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic Ocean. A careful survey has been made as to the extent of use of this canal, and it has been conservatively estimated that about forty-five to sixty million tons will pass through it. Huge quantities of oil, pulpwood, turpentine, rosin, lumber, logs, fruits, vegetables, cotton, and other items of commerce will pass through it, and it will derive the benefit of approximately 25 hours' reduction in time from the place of its origin to port of destination. It is believed that the shipping concerns will rapidly utilize it when completed. It has been conservatively estimated that during the first year of operation 10,000 vessels will pass through it. This will be about 1 every 40 minutes, day and night.

Opponents of the canal, of course, minimize its future use by commercial interests, but it stands to reason that as soon as the canal is constructed commerce will find its way through it on account of the great saving in time and transportation cost. It will be a great asset to America in time of war. It will afford an inlet and outlet for fighting craft, troops, ammunition, and supplies. It will strengthen America's advantage in the Gulf of Mexico and make possible there in the Gulf of Mexico the supremacy of the United States and our Navy, even under the circumstances of great odds against us. It will be a great asset to commerce borne through the Panama Canal from either direction. In saving the 25 hours in time, naturally it will save the great cost incurred in making the extra ten or twelve hundred miles around the peninsula of Florida. It will also eliminate the storm hazard to commerce off of the south end of the peninsula of Florida. Practically all shipping craft will utilize this canal, if for no other reason than to avoid the hazard of storms. The Atlantic States from Maine to Florida and the Mississippi Valley States from the Lakes to the Gulf will be direct beneficiaries of this cut-off or connecting link in the chain of water-borne commerce. All other States of the Union will receive an indirect benefit. That which prospers one State or section of our great Nation benefits and prospers every State and nook in our great country. No chain is stronger than its weakest link. The entire chain is supported by its own strength. This canal is not a local project. It is not a project for the Southeast. It is a worth-while project for America and is an American project. It will develop new industries. Noteworthy among industries to be developed would be the pulpwood and paper industry, the iron industry in Alabama, and others.

At this particular time the relief of the unemployed is primary in our minds, but we must also consider the permanency of improvements and their benefit to the American people. From 70 to 75 percent of every dollar that is spent on this project will go to labor and to relieve the unemployed. In fact, even 90 percent could go to labor, if less-improved methods of construction and dredging should be resorted to. As to the permanency of the improvement and its benefits to the American people in the future, it has no peer or equal. Generation after generation our people will utilize this artery of commerce and time and time again will be repaid in benefits for the initial cost of construction. This was learned centuries ago, particularly by the countries in Europe. Every possible waterway was provided and improved. This was done in the interest of economy and in the best interest of the commerce and people of those old countries. Our Nation is in its infancy, so to speak, in the way of waterway developments. We must come to the utilization and development of all possible waterways. In this respect the shackles of the special interest must be stricken from the shipping and consuming public, and these natural resources developed for the benefit of the American people.

Our great President Roosevelt has manifested already his keen interest in developing American resources for the American people. This is well demonstrated in his Tennessee Valley project. No special interest is strong enough to divert him from pursuing the course which is for the best interest for the present and future America. When the Florida Canal is completed, it will be another step accomplished by him on his ladder for a greater America.

It is true that some engineers with short vision have failed to see the future benefits of this canal to American commerce and the American people, and have on this account or for some other reason failed to agree as to its feasibility. Such was also the case with the great Panama Canal. Engineers and more engineers reported against it, but the mind of a then President Roosevelt superseded, and riper wisdom dictated the feasibility and practicability of this great project. Now even those who are less informed wonder why we waited so long to construct the Panama Canal. The Florida Canal will be built at about one-third of the cost of the Panama Canal and will be built without the hazard of tropical disease and foreign claims. It will bear far more tonnage than is borne by the Panama Canal and will redound greater benefits to America than has been realized or ever will be realized from the Panama Canal.

The Panama Canal was constructed not as a partisan project. It was constructed for the benefit of our country. Likewise, the Florida Canal is not a partisan project. It is for the American people.

Therefore, I call upon all of my colleagues to lend their fullest cooperation for its prompt realization. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that I was not given the opportunity to address the House yesterday. It was the first time I have ever asked unanimous consent to proceed for even 15 minutes, and I would have been satisfied with 10. My only reason for making the request yesterday was that I wanted to call the attention of the Members of this House to House Joint Resolution 117, which is brought up for consideration today. The huge appropriation—almost $5,000,000,000—called for by the resolution, and the peculiar and unusual powers which are granted to the President in spending this sum warrant, in my judgment, a greater opportunity for discussion and debate than the Rules Committee has granted Members of the House.

Manifestly, the majority party, which outnumbers us 3 to 1, is afraid to listen for even 10 or 15 minutes to the views of the opposition. Perhaps this is due to the discord and dissension in their own ranks, and they did not want any more rancor in their caucus, held yesterday afternoon. In other words, the majority leaders wanted to bind and gag their own Members and rush this bill through with the least possible time for discussion or debate.

Should I wish to be mean and little, I would for the remainder of this session be flies in the soup and a thorn in the side of the acting majority floor leader and the astute Chairman of the Rules Committee. However, I shall try to follow the dictum of Holy Writ: "Bless those who persecute you, bless and curse not."

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this resolution, which is so momentous and far-reaching in its consequences that it transcends the level of party politics. I have no quarrel whatever with any Thomas Jefferson, constitutional Democrat, but this resolution was not drafted by a follower of Thomas Jefferson or by one who still believes in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. I do not think it is a Democratic resolution, and it most certainly is not a Republican resolution. This resolution bears all the earmarks and smell of the "brain trusters." Its author must be a megalomanic, and if this House votes this bill, we might as well adjourn and go home, for we will have become a hollow chamber full of hollow heads that but echo the orders coming from the bureaucrats at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue. What sort of men are we? Do we have a bone or a rubber band up our backs? What Member of this House had anything whatever to do with the writing of this resolution? Mr. Morgenthau, Mr. Bell, and Rear Admiral Peoples are the only witnesses called before the Appropriations Committee, which listened to them for only 3 hours, behind closed doors, in a star-chamber session. No Member of this House had access to this resolution until night before last, and the hearings were not reported to us until this morning. Yet this House this afternoon, with its overwhelming Democratic majority, under a tyrannical and unprecedented gag rule, will cram down the throats of their own Members this monstrous measure, because of the club of patronage which is wielded over their heads.

Mr. Chairman, speaking from a political standpoint, I have never been so foolish as to give my enemy a pistol with which to shoot me; yet every Republican who may vote for this resolution is furnishing ammunition to the opposition to destroy him. This is a camouflage bill. Let us pierce its masquerade and tear the mask from its face. The enormous sum of $4,880,000,000 which we are asked to give over to the executive branch of Government to spend in any such manner, at any such time, and on any such project as he may deem advisable, is ostensibly for relief, but, sir, this resolution is not for relief; it is for a Democratic campaign fund for the election next year.

All of us know the experience we had in the election last fall. During the month of October it cost the Federal Government, in one county of my district, $1,000 to distribute $600 of relief money to the needy people of that county. The people who need relief most are not getting it, or only a small proportion of what goes to the white-collared tax-eating politician who does not need it. How is this relief money spent? Nothing is said in this resolution about old-age pensions; nothing is said in this resolution about the disabled veterans or paying their bonus. No; the old-age pensions and the soldiers' bonus have been pigeonholed and postponed until this vile and vicious resolution can be railroaded through the Congress.

Many of these ex-service men who had volunteered and gone through hell in France, who slept for days and nights in blood-soaked, rain-drenched trenches, who went over the top and crawled on their bellies like snakes through the mud and muck and mire under barbed-wire entanglements, breathing poisonous gas and baring their breasts to the fire of machine guns and artillery, having the brains of their comrades blown into their faces, discharged at the end of the war, mere shadows of the men they once were—these men who were promised, 3 years ago in the Democratic platform, full and exact justice, had their compensation cut or their pensions taken completely away from them by the iniquitous and infernal so-called "economy bill", passed shortly after the inauguration of the new deal.

This great Government cannot take care of the men who have fought, bled, and died in its defense, but it can spend relief money—and how has it spent it? In my home county last year the relief agency hired a little girl scarcely out of high school, young, single, with no dependents, from a comfortable home, and paid her $125 a month to ride over the hills of Stone County to teach the kids out in the sticks how to play.

They hired another fine little woman in my county, the wife of a professional man who needed not the position, and paid her $127.50 per month to teach the good old country housewives out in the hills how to make soap—and God knows she had never seen an ash hopper in her life. In two other counties in my district the "new dealers" have employed three men, Government agents at good salaries, to roam over the hills in Wright and Howell Counties hunting for Indian mounds. After several weeks' search I asked if any mounds had been found, and the answer was, "Nope; but we're still hunting for them." In another county of my district able-bodied men and women were hired at $2.10 per day to make rag dolls—in order to have industrial recovery. In another county a bedbug inspector was employed to inspect the mattresses which the relief agencies dealt out to those who would vote the straight Democratic ticket, while in another county the Government employed a bunch of old maids to teach the mothers of the Ozark Hills how to pin diapers on their babies. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, no Member of this House is against relief to those who are destitute and worthy of assistance. No American wants to see any of his fellow countrymen starve, or even suffer. The President has no copyright on this emotion. The Republicans gathered here are willing to vote the $880,000,000, or even $1,000,000,000 if necessary, for relief, but we are bitterly opposed to voting a $4,000,000,000 slush fund to this administration to be spent in the future as so much of this money has been spent in the past.

Mr. Chairman, I care not what other Members of this House might do here today, but I am unalterably and unequivocably opposed to this resolution, which is so filthy, foul, and rotten that it stinks to high heaven. My opposition is based wholly upon principle. In my humble judgment, this resolution is unwise, unsound, unconstitutional, and un-American.

A schoolboy with the most elementary knowledge of constitutional law knows that the Congress has no right or authority to delegate its legislative powers to the Chief Executive, and it is most amazing that this resolution should be offered so soon after the Supreme Court of the United States, in its recent decision in the oil case, gave Congress and the country to understand that under the Constitution the Congress cannot abdicate its powers, shun its responsibilities, transfer its duties, and grant blank-check authority to either of the other branches of this Government. And we propose here today once more to make a jackass out of this body, to become the laughing-stock of the Nation, by doing these very things.

I deeply and sincerely regret that this body has degenerated into a supine, subservient, soporific, superfluous, supercilious, pusillanimous body of nitwits, the greatest ever gathered beneath the dome of our National Capitol, who cowardly abdicate their powers and, in violation of their oaths to protect and defend the Constitution against all of the Nation's enemies, both foreign and domestic, turn over these constitutional prerogatives, not only granted but imposed upon them, to a group of tax-eating, conceited, autocratic bureaucrats—a bunch of theoretical, intellectual, professional nincompoops out of Columbia University, at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue—who were never elected by the American people to any office and who are responsible to no constituency. These brain trusters and "new dealers" are the ones who wrote this resolution, instead of the Members of this House whose duty it is, and whose sole duty it is, to draft legislation. [Applause.]

My friends, there is only one conflict in America today, and that is a conflict between two diametrically opposed fundamental political philosophies. There is only one issue at the present, and that issue is between two opposing and irreconciliable theories of government. The question for us to decide here and now is whether we are going to continue to live under the Constitution and believe in our American institutions under which we have lived for a century and a half and grown to be the greatest nation on earth and the happiest and freest people under the shining sun, despite all the vicissitudes of fortune through which we have passed, or whether we shall abruptly depart from the historical precepts and sacred tenets of our forefathers who wrote the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States to follow a new-deal philosophy, unknown, untried, which is put forth by a group of impractical, inexperienced visionaries whose political philosophy rests upon the economic teachings of Marx and Lenin, and whose communistic doctrines would set up a Bolshevist state with a collectivistic society.

I want to know what you believe in, my fellow Americans. Do you want to follow the Constitution or do you want to follow the code? Do you want to live under the Stars and Stripes or do you prefer to live under the outstretched wings of the blue buzzard? Do you stand for U. S. A. or for N. R. A.? Are you going to follow history or are you going to follow hysteria? Are you going to base your life upon facts or are you going to flee after flitting fancy? Are you going to base your future and that of your children upon experience or are you going to follow every unknown, unsolved, unworkable, unconstitutional, dangerous, and destructive economic experiment of this small group of willful, autocratic, egotistical, tax-eating bureaucrats? Will you follow George Washington or Prof. Raymond Moley, Thomas Jefferson or Rexford Guy Tugwell? And I should like to know if we still believe in the genius, courage, and patriotism of Andrew Jackson and Abraham Lincoln or whether we want to overthrow their philosophy to follow the strange and insidious doctrines of Mordecai Ezekiel, Felix Frankfurter, and his "hot-dog" boys?

Mr. Chairman, you have asked for constructive criticism: Carry out the planks written into your platform 3 years ago. Really balance the Budget. Maintain a sound currency at all hazards. Reduce the public debt instead of increasing it to the point of bankruptcy. Abolish all unnecessary bureaus and cut the cost of government instead of increasing it. Restore once more the antitrust laws which will protect the little-business men of this country. Stop giving the American people shots in the arm and artificial respiration, which continues their illness. Let this sick Nation, in its convalescent stage, remain quiet, free from the meddlesome interference of quack doctors, and America once more, because of the genius, courage, and resourcefulness of her people, will emerge from this depression triumphantly. Once again the bright sunshine of prosperity will break through the black clouds of depression, driving despair out of the souls of men and restoring faith and hope once more to their eyes, until they can again truly sing "happy days are here again." [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to my colleague the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us today is an important part of the President's program of economic security. This program, Mr. Chairman, consists of two parts, one part is to end relief and to give employment to all those who are unemployed, who are on relief, and who are able to work; and the second part of the program is to care for those who are unemployed, but unable to work, through the bill for social security introduced last week and now before the Committee on Ways and Means for hearings.

This bill means a fundamental departure in our methods of dealing with the problem of unemployment.

In his message delivered on January 4 before a joint session of Congress, President Roosevelt promised to terminate relief payments to unemployed and to substitute jobs for relief. This bill carries out that promise. For that reason it is one of the most important that ever came before Congress. It blazes a new trail. It means salvation to millions of unemployed who are at present ekeing out a bare existence on the dole which they are receiving, but who are in danger of becoming mentally and physically unable ever again to perform useful work.

Let me briefly sketch the policies pursued by the Federal Government in dealing with the problem of relief for the unemployed:

First. At the beginning of the depression, President Hoover took the position that distress and economic want brought about by enforced unemployment should be cared for by the usual charitable organizations. With the deepening of the depression and the ever increasing number of unemployed, it was but to be expected that charitable organizations and special welfare drives carried on in all communities throughout the United States would be inadequate to raise the enormous funds which were required to care for the unemployed. This leads us to the next phase:

Second. The raising of funds for unemployment relief by local and State government.

Soon municipal governmental units and State governments began to show the results of financial strain and quickly approached a condition where they were unable to raise sufficiently large sums for the care of the unemployed. It became apparent to students of conditions that the depression would last for some time and that only the financial resources of the Federal Government would be sufficient to raise the sums necessary for the care of the unemployed. The demand for Federal contributions toward unemployment relief became more and more persistent. President Hoover was strongly opposed to it, and determined to resist it, without regard to the immense amount of suffering which it brought to hundreds of thousands throughout the land.

Third. Immediately upon his induction into office, President Franklin D. Roosevelt recognized the responsibility of the Federal Government to cope with catastrophe which was not local or State-wide, but national in scope. President Roosevelt immediately announced that it was the duty of the Federal Government to see that no man, woman, or child should go hungry in the United States. He immediately recognized the responsibility of the Federal Government to raise the necessary funds and to contribute whatever was required to the States and localities for unemployment relief.

Let me call attention to the fact that in all these three phases the method of caring for the unemployed was to give them the minimum requirements for physical existence in the form of cash relief, or else in orders for food, clothing, and other necessities of life. To put it succinctly, the care of the unemployed consisted in giving them relief.

This method was proper in the beginning. It was proper for a depression of short duration, but in the fifth or sixth year of unemployment, in the fifth or sixth year of the deepest depression of our time it is a method which has gradually become destructive of the morale of the unemployed and detrimental to the welfare of society. After 5 years of suffering, deprivation, and want there is only one way of dealing with the unemployed—and that is to give them jobs.

The time has come when we must understand that unemployment as it has existed until now must end in the United States. When I say it must end, I mean that when industry fails to provide the opportunity for work, the Government must step in and provide a job for everyone who is willing and able to work. This is the next step in the development of our method of unemployment relief.

Fourth. Now the President seems to have come definitely to the realization that unemployment relief should stop and that in its stead employment must be given. In the message of January 4, 1935, President Roosevelt said that:

> The Federal Government must and shall quit this business of relief.
> I am not willing that the vitality of our people be further sapped by the giving of cash, of market baskets, of a few hours of weekly work cutting grass, raking leaves, or picking up papers in the public parks. We must preserve not only the bodies of the unemployed from destitution, but also their self-respect, their self-reliance, and courage and determination.

The President has determined to take the most forward-looking step that he could by saying that this business of relief must end, and that those who have suffered for 4 or 5 years patiently and who have eked out a bare existence on a few dollars of relief money will hereafter be given employment, so that they can maintain their families in some degree of comfort and keep their self-respect.

The President has definitely committed his administration to the fact that he will provide 3,500,000 public jobs, which means jobs for every employable person now on relief. Those who are unemployable are to be taken care of by a social-security program now pending in the Congress.

The funds to provide jobs for the 3,500,000 employables are to be provided in this bill. For that purpose the President has asked Congress to appropriate $4,000,000,000, and I sincerely hope that this bill will be passed so that the program of the President will be carried out and every employable person who is on relief may at last be able to obtain a job.

The American way of dealing with the problem of unemployment created by a depression which is national in scope is not through relief, not through the dole, but through the creation of useful work—work which is socially and economically desirable in the community for which it is provided. The dole may be the European method of providing for the care of the unemployed. A public-works program is the American method.

I believe that my friends on the Republican side are opposed to this bill, not because it gives away any of the powers of Congress, because it does not—they are opposed to it because work relief costs more than direct relief. The Republicans want to continue the dole in America. They are against the American system of unemployment relief, and this is the true reason for their opposition—not the fact that it gives away power to the President.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I am sorry, but my time is too limited.

They are opposed to it not because it gives the President $4,000,000,000 with which to give employment to the employables, but because it means the expenditure of more money than the retention of the dole.

This bill embodies the American way of dealing with the unemployment problem, and therefore it is the most forward-looking step we can take.

Insofar as this bill appropriates the sum of $4,880,000,000 for the care and relief of the unemployed and for providing jobs, it is not amendable. The bill makes this appropriation in a lump sum; the specific projects and the localities where the money is to be spent are to be determined by the President. That is as it should be, because otherwise there would be no end to logrolling. In all other respects the bill is wide open to amendment. There are many provisions in the bill not devoted to the appropriation of the money for the unemployed which should be amended, and I hope will be amended.

And after we have passed this bill, Mr. Chairman, I, for one, and I hope I speak for everyone in this House who wants to see these black days gone forever, shall not feel that we have solved everything. To take all the employables off relief rolls and give them work is a portion—and it is in truth the smaller portion—of the task to be done.

For our task is twofold. There is that vast army of unemployed who are not on relief rolls but whose condition is just as precarious and just as desperate. These come next. To some extent they will be helped by the removal from the field of unemployment of people on relief, and therefore will have a better chance to be called to private industry.

But the same principle which is good and true and just for one group is just as just and true for the other, and until private industry is ready to give them employment the Government must and shall. We should not—and shall not—make a distinction between those who are on relief rolls and those who are not. The relief roll is no criterion of need. There are between five and six million employables in this country today who are not on relief rolls, but shall we therefore say that their need is not real and their plight no concern of ours?

It is our concern, and we must attend to it at once.

Mr. Chairman, if the Members of this House are in favor of an advanced method for the caring of the unemployed, if they desire to terminate unemployment relief with its devastating influence upon the morale of the unemployed, if they desire to give the country the benefit of the energy, of the skill, and of the knowledge of those who are unemployed and are on relief, then, Mr. Speaker, each and every Member will vote for this bill as I shall.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON].

Mr. EATON. Mr. Chairman, I am now and always have been, like every other Member of this House, for relief of our unemployed people to the utmost limit of the powers and resources of our Federal and State Governments.

But this bill is not a relief bill, although it is decked out with that name. It is a cruel mockery of the distress of our people and offers the hungry a stone when they ask for bread.

I believe it my duty and the duty of every Member in this House, regardless of party, to vote against this bill in its present form for the following reasons:

First. It cannot and will not give the employment it promises to 3,500,000 unemployed. The daily statement of the United States Treasury sets forth that out of some thirteen billions appropriated by Congress to emergency organizations in 22 months of the new deal, more than five billion seven hundred millions are still unexpended, which proves what everyone of experience knows, that it will be a physical impossibility for the Federal Government to properly expend these five billions and four billions more asked for in this bill in the next year or two by furnishing employment on public works.

Second. To vote for this bill in its present form and under the limitations of this gag rule constitutes the most cowardly betrayal of public trust on the part of this House in 150 years. Not a Member of this House, Democrat or Republican, high or low, old or new, knows who wrote this bill, who will administer it, where or how the four billions will be spent, who will be employed under its provisions, where they will be employed, what projects will be started, and how and where.

The only hearings on this bill were a mere travesty held for an hour or two behind closed doors with two or three witnesses from the bureaucracy testifying mainly to the effect that they, like the rest of us, know practically nothing about it. In its whole history this bill, in its present form, is a denial and betrayal of the sworn duty of the Appropriations Committee, the Rivers and Harbors Committee, the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, the Public Lands Committee, the Ways and Means Committee, and of every individual in the entire Membership of this House. It is a prostitution of the Rules Committee, because its unknown author, or authors, have forced that committee to attempt to gag and bully this House in a fashion so shameful as to make the House a laughing-stock.

In the consideration of this bill, who is it, in the opinion of the Rules Committee, ostensibly acting for the President, that needs to be gagged? Certainly not the Republican minority. We could not by our vote defeat this measure. Oh, no! It is the sane, American-minded Members of this House in the Democratic majority whom the President apparently does not trust, and who, therefore, had to be gagged before they could be forced to lay aside their reason and sense of duty and support this vicious resolution in its present form.

This situation involves much more than a question of loyalty to the President, or of the keeping of individual campaign promises. The brilliant gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] told us this morning that he had promised his constituents to support the President. But I hope he did not by that promise announce himself as a mere rubber stamp; nor, if he was in his right mind, would he promise to violate his oath of office or side-step his duties as a Member of this House. At least I have never known him to behave in that irrational and unmoral manner.

The Democratic Party in its Chicago platform of 1932, which was the best platform that party ever wrote, made many promises to the American people, but since the election of 1932 neither the President, his Cabinet, nor his great majorities in both branches of Congress have more than once or twice been within a million miles of keeping those promises. So, in determining his duty with reference to this iniquitous measure, why should any individual Democratic Member of this House side-step his duty by taking refuge behind his campaign promises? What is involved here today is our solemn oath of office and our duty thereunder.

Third. This bill in its present form carries the most dangerous, complete, and unqualified delegation of powers to the Chief Executive in our entire history, in either peace or war. Under sections 4, 5, and 6 it authorizes the President, at his discretion, to make over, continue, postpone, suspend, abolish, utilize, or prescribe practically every branch of our governmental organization, including the House of Representatives itself. These sections empower the President to seize the personal property of any citizen by eminent domain and to do anything with this property that he sees fit.

And last, but by no means least, these sections 4, 5, and 6 authorize the President directly or through some delegate or subordinate to make rules and regulations with the full force and authority of laws passed by Congress and if any unfortunate citizen disobeys one of these rules, he shall be fined $5,000, or sent to prison for 2 years, or both. And this House is now by authority of this gag rule expected to pass such a law as this without fundamental amendment, without adequate debate, and under the pretense of relieving unemployment.

Fourth, instead of this bill in its present form increasing employment, it will decrease employment by slowing down normal business recovery through putting the Government, on a tremendous scale, into competition with private business thus increasing fear and uncertainty.

This bill in its present form is saturated with hypocrisy. While it purports to relieve unemployment, which every Member of this House is anxious to do, this bill empowers the President to take away most of the liberties guaranteed our citizens under the Constitution. He can do anything, anywhere, to anyone. And to achieve this purpose it is proposed to use the Members of this House.

Our duty, regardless of party or personal consideration, is to turn this un-American vicious and dangerous bill back to our Appropriations Committee. I believe that our Appropriations Committee, after full consultation with the administration and full public hearings, can and will bring back to this House a relief bill that will really give employment to millions of our people and which will not jeopardize a single right or liberty of our citizens by provisions such as sections 4, 5, and 6 of the present bill.

Such a bill presented by our Appropriations Committee would unite all the resources of private industry and of our Federal and State Governments in the task of finding employment, not only for three millions but for the ten millions yet unemployed. By restoring public confidence it would start the whole country on the way to prosperity. It would save the President from the addlepated, unofficial advisers who are luring him to the failure of his plans.

It would save the Democratic Party from self-destruction at the height of its power. It would save the Members of this House from violating their oath of office and their sacred trust as representatives of the public.

It would save our beloved country from taking one more step toward an economic and social crash which no sane man can contemplate without sorrow and shame. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I intend to offer two amendments later when we come to the reading of the bill, and I rise now to call the attention of the House to these amendments.

On page 6, line 9, after the word "contract", to insert:

But all such grants and/or loans to finance construction projects and/or contracts let for construction projects shall contain such provisions as are necessary to insure that all employees employed on such projects shall be paid not less than the rate of wage prevailing in the locality in which the project is prosecuted.

That is one amendment, and later I shall offer an amendment, as follows:

On page 6, line 23, after the comma, strike out the balance of line 23, all of lines 24 and 25, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Provided, That the President or any governmental agency, including any corporation or any individual to which or to whom may be delegated any powers under this joint resolution, shall not issue any rules and regulations which change existing law."

The purpose of the first amendment is this: In the N. R. A. law, section 206, title II, we find the following language:

All contracts let for construction projects and all loans and grants pursuant to this title shall contain such provisions as is necessary to insure (1) that no convict labor shall be employed on any such project; (2) that except in executive, administrative, and advisory positions, so far as practicable and feasible, no individual directly employed on any such project shall be permitted to work more than 30 hours in any one week; (3) that all employees shall be paid just and reasonable wages, which shall be compensation sufficient to provide, for the hours of labor as limited, a standard of living in decency and comfort.

There is more to the section, which I shall not read now, such as veterans' preference, et cetera.

I am in favor of section 206 of the N. R. A. law and its provisions as they exist in the law today. I do not want to have the House get the impression that this is a 30-hour-week amendment. I am offering this because it is in the law today, calling for the payment of reasonable and just wages.

What I am trying to do in this first amendment is simply to demand that the prevailing rate of wage shall be paid on these projects which are let out under contract, as is provided for in the law today. Admiral Peoples, in the hearings which you have, said that if this bill goes through what they intend to pay on these jobs is $50 a month. I do not think that $50 a month comes anywhere near being a reasonable living wage for anybody, let alone any skilled workman working on a construction job. I rose to call the attention of the House to this at this time in order to protect the rights of workers who are going to work on these construction jobs.

The other amendment, providing that no changes shall be made in existing law, of course, will take care of the provisions of the Davis-Bacon law, which provides that the prevailing rate of wage shall be paid in the building program. This amendment will take care of everything that is in existing law. In other words, I do not believe that that section 206 of the N. R. A. law, which passed the House and the Senate and was signed by the President, should be thrown out now. It has been working well. There are men in your district working on these construction projects getting the prevailing rate of wage, and I do not think they should be cut down from $1.20 an hour for skilled workers to 90 cents or 80 cents for unskilled workers to $50 a month; and that is what will happen, according to the testimony of Admiral Peoples before the committee, if my amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. We all know what a champion of the labor class the gentleman from Massachusetts has been in the past and is today. There are some things in the first section of this bill which I am concerned about. I read here the words:

(2) Relieving economic maladjustment, * * * (4) improving living and working conditions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CONNERY. I am very sorry that my time has expired. Otherwise I would be glad to answer any questions of my good friend from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, under the present rule by which this joint resolution comes before us today I am reminded of the statement made by Mr. O'CONNOR, Chairman of the Rules Committee, speaking in reference to another rule, which is in the RECORD of January 3, as follows:

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House this is not the most pleasant duty which could devolve upon me on the opening day of the Seventy-fourth Congress, but by reason of my membership on the Rules Committee it is a duty I have to perform, and I do it with reluctance.

To some of you new Members I might state in advance that the Rules Committee is an arm of the leadership of this House. It is sometimes called an "arm" of the administration in power in the Nation. Some people have also referred to it as the "political committee" or the committee which shapes or brings before the House the policies of the leadership of the House and the administration.

I expect before this Congress is over we will hear a lot of talk about gag rules alleged to have been brought in by the Rules Committee. Of course, this particular resolution is not in that category. This is not a gag rule of any kind.

I say this rule today is a gag rule. As was stated this afternoon on the floor of the House by Mr. SABATH, this is a bill sent to the House of Representatives by the President of the United States, and he respectfully requested that it be enacted into law. In this bill the President of the United States requests—yea, demands!—of the House of Representatives that we turn over to him the power delegated to us by the Constitution of the United States. We who have sworn to uphold the Constitution of the United States, if we enact this legislation, are nothing but a bunch of jellyfish or as spineless as a sailfish—drifting, drifting, drifting away from the Constitution to a great unknown dictatorship, carrying this beloved country of ours into a communistic government or probably a soviet union, or who knows but what we may ruin the country entirely.

It required 150 years to build this Nation, the strongest Nation in the world, and are we going to permit it to be torn down in 6 or 8 years? That is the great question before us this afternoon. If I were to have asked the Membership of this House 3 years ago whether they would approve a dictatorship the same as Mussolini then had in Italy, you would have said, "No; never!"; if I were to ask you whether you would want a dictatorship such as the Hitler reign now in Germany, you would say, "No; never!"; if I were to ask you if you wanted a dictatorship such as administered by the "Kingfish" over the State of Louisiana at the last two sessions of the legislature in that State the past year, you would say "No! No!" And, gentlemen, if I can see the trend of the times, we are setting up such a dictatorship over this land of the free and the home of the brave—a country that has stood for 150 years. But we are tearing our Constitution asunder, and if our forefathers were to see us today we certainly would never have them approve of the action that we are now taking. What would Thomas Jefferson think of us?

As for me, I believe in relief and am willing to go the limit to assist in relief by proper procedure under the Constitution, but I will never submit to the course we are pursuing under this bill. I could never relieve my conscience of voting for a bill such as this. It will only lead to greater chaos to the American people rather than to benefit. It is only prolonging the day for greater agony for the American people.

Who is going to spend this great sum of four and one-half billion dollars—a sum so large that there is not a Member of the House of Representatives who knows what it all means. Yet we are going to put that great sum of money in the control of one individual. Who will that individual be? It certainly will not be the President of the United States. He must delegate this to others. The one who is administering the P. W. A. funds at the present time is Secretary Ickes. He has under his jurisdiction now the Department of the Interior; he also has no less than 8 or 10 alphabetical organizations which he is supervising. Any one of them is sufficient for all the time of any one individual. Yet he is going to be given the work of allocating this great fund of four and one-half billion dollars.

I take from the RECORD of January 9 the statements made by Mr. Cox and Mr. BLANTON when speaking on the H. O. L. C.—remarks in reference to Mr. Ickes and what they think of him.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I should like to cite a parallel to the Board to which the gentleman refers. In the Budget message provision is made for giving the Secretary of the Interior an under secretary. Can the gentleman imagine any reason in the world for the Secretary of the Interior wanting to name an under secretary other than it gives him the further opportunity to insult Members of Congress in rejecting recommendations that they offer? He has done this to the extent that he is the most thoroughly hated and despised man connected with the Government at the present time.

Mr. BLANTON. If there is a Member on this floor, either Democrat or Republican, who wants to get up here and defend that particular official, the present Secretary of the Interior, I will yield him the balance of my time. I want to hear some defense of him, if there is anything that can be said in his favor.

Are you Members of the House of Representatives going to turn over this unprecedented sum of money to him to be expended? Let the party in power carry out the pledges made in the platform of 1932; let them give us sound money; let them balance the Budget; let them give industry an opportunity, and it will not be long until men will have jobs. There are more men out of employment today, according to the statements of the Department of Labor, than there were 2 years ago, and we are $10,000,000,000 deeper in debt and going in the red millions of dollars every day. We have now the greatest national deficit this country has ever known. When will it ever stop? Restore confidence by sound laws and constitutional government. We must place our foot on the brake before it is too late. Let us regulate mass production in industry and give men the jobs that machinery is now doing. Let us give idle men something to do that will occupy their minds. We want more work, not more idleness. We want men to be working for an honest living wage rather than to be passing out a dole to them. Honest American citizens want a job to earn a livelihood, not a dole.

If we will let industry absorb the unemployed population, the men will receive wages instead of a dole. We will not build up a national deficit such as we are doing now. Industry will pay the bill.

Let us stop idleness! Let us go back to some of the old, sound fundamental principles that have made this country great. If you and I are honestly and sincerely desirous of trying to help the people of this country, we will forget politics, forget dictatorship, and will settle down to try to give a good, honest, conscientious administration of the affairs of government according to the Constitution, and if we do this in a very short time men will find work, unemployment will cease, and we will have a happy and contented people and a better country in which to live. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD].

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, it has been very interesting today to hear the arguments presented from the Well of this House as to some of the provisions of this resolution and as to the ultimate effect of some of those provisions.

They would have you believe Congress is surrendering all its power and prerogatives to the Chief Executive and that those powers can never be regained. Such is not the case.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], who has just preceded me, is fearful of the question of the delegation of powers which is included in this resolution. Of course, there is authority, and a lot of authority, vested in the President of the United States by this resolution. From the very nature of the object sought, that of relief of unemployment and of destitution, that authority must be lodged where there is flexibility. It can only be in Congress itself, in the President, or in some subordinate official in the governmental service. I think it is very clear that from the nature of the task confronting us, namely, relief of unemployment and distress, with the shifting sands of unemployment from one section of the country to the other, it would be absolutely impossible for this Congress to specifically designate the various projects that may be proposed to accomplish this purpose. Business is recovering; it is coming along slowly, it is true. We are hopeful it will be speeded up and soon the employables on relief will find employment in private industry. This program that is designed by this joint resolution is a program of transition from dole relief to work relief until private industry and individual initiative has recovered to such an extent that it will take up the slack of unemployment and the people who are employable off of relief rolls.

Then with the security program, consisting of unemployment insurance and old-age pensions, the picture will be complete, and the people of this country will enjoy that greater fullness of life and the security of old age, so much desired by the President and the people of the American Republic. The primary purpose of this resolution is relief of unemployment and of distress, and the relief rolls are to be looked to to get the men to do the work proposed to be done under the direction of the President of the United States. It is absolutely impossible in advance, and with recovery progressing in some sections of the country greater than it is in others, with the unemployment problem not so acute in some sections as it is in others, for this Congress to lay down definitely a program of specific projects to be undertaken to get the best results from the money that is here made available. In order to get the greatest amount of efficiency and the greatest benefit for the money that is here proposed to be appropriated, it is essential that the authority to allocate be vested somewhere, in some agency available at all times, and not so unwieldy as the Congress, that can take care of situations as they fluctuate from time to time. Should the matter of allocation of projects be attempted in the House, a certain amount of logrolling would inevitably result, thus defeating in part the very purpose sought. It becomes necessary, then, to either vest that authority in the President of the United States or with some subordinate body of this Government—and I do not believe anyone seriously wants to leave that authority in some subordinate officials in the Government who are not responsive to the will of the people.

I remember since I have been here, as was referred to by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM], when you gentlemen now on the minority side of the aisle delegated your authority and your power and your right to designate and to allocate projects under the public-buildings program, not to the President of the United States, but to a subordinate group of individuals in this Government, who were not elected by and were not responsive to the will of the American people, and this was done not in the time of an emergency, as now exists, when taking people off the relief rolls by placing them on work rolls was the primary purpose, as now.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ARNOLD. In just a moment. I remember very well that not so very long ago you gentlemen now on the minority side of the aisle caused to be written upon the statute books authority to a subordinate of this Government to use the money of the people of this country by entering into 10-year subsidy contracts with the great shipping interests of this country, under the guise of carrying ocean mail, whether there was mail to carry or not. Had you lodged that authority in the responsible head of your Government it would not have been so bad, but you clothed the Postmaster General, a man who was not elected by and was not responsive to the will of the people of this country, with power to enter into contracts, giving millions of dollars to the shipping interests of this country by way of subsidy, and now, under these contracts, we are paying out something like $28,000,000 a year in direct subsidies to those interests, and Congress was not consulted and had no power or authority in the matter except to appropriate moneys from year to year to fulfill the Government's obligation thereunder after authority was vested in the Postmaster General to enter into such contracts.

I yield now to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. All of these public-building projects were subject to specific appropriations by Congress in detail.

Mr. ARNOLD. The Interdepartmental Committee was given full and complete authority to make allocations and to provide where those projects should be located.

Mr. TABER. Only after specific appropriation by Congress.

Mr. ARNOLD. The Congress appropriated the money in a lump sum, the allocations were made and places selected and Congress had no power to change those allocations.

Mr. TABER. The authorization was in lump sum, but the appropriation was in detail as to projects.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARNOLD. I yield.

Mr. COX. Is it not clear to the gentleman that the power to legislate is in this resolution delegated to the Executive? If the gentleman will turn to paragraph (a) of section 4, the power is vested in the President to establish and prescribe the duties and functions of governmental agencies, including corporations. In other words, that vests the President with the power to charter a corporation or to set up a corporation or to establish any other agency of the Government, such as the Federal Reserve, or any other agency. Is that not true?

Mr. ARNOLD. That is true so far as it concerns the carrying into effect of the purposes set forth in this resolution, but it does not and cannot go beyond that authority.

Mr. COX. But it does carry with it, as the gentleman construes the language, the power to legislate. Does that concession not mean that the bill in this respect would not stand an attack made upon it? Is it not in the very teeth of the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the oil case?

Mr. ARNOLD. It may be necessary for the President in carrying out the purposes of this resolution to make available some agencies that are not now existing; and in making use of agencies that are not now existing he may clothe them with corporate authority, but solely for the purpose of carrying out the relief and recovery items specified in this bill. That is not a legislative power, but an administrative authority, as I interpret it.

Mr. COX. Under paragraph (c) of the same section is not power delegated to the President to abolish any corporation or any governmental agency heretofore set up by the Congress, and is not this a legislative power?

Mr. ARNOLD. That matter will be taken care of to some extent by amendments, as I understand it, applying specifically to emergency activities and to other activities.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I have always been classed as a liberal. The only real opposition that has been directed against me in my political contests has been backed by the so-called "big interests" on the plea that I was too liberal and friendly to the common people, the working classes, the farmers, and the defenders of our country and their dependents.

No one could be more sincerely and deeply interested in providing adequate relief and employment for the needy than I. The Republican Party in the House stands as a unit for necessary and adequate relief for the needy and jobs for the unemployed, and my Republican colleagues and myself stand ready to vote all necessary appropriations for these laudable purposes; but we do not favor this un-American gag rule under which this bill is considered, and neither do we subscribe to the dictatorial powers conferred upon the President in this force bill.

If this measure is passed, Congress has surrendered its powers to legislate and has supinely abdicated and turned over to the executive branch of the Government the duties, responsibilities, and powers delegated to Congress by the Constitution. Members of Congress become merely messenger boys.

This bill was not written by any Member of Congress. It was prepared by the executive branch of the Government. It was sent over to the House with the demand that it be pushed through without the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i."

If this "force" bill is adopted as sent over here by the administration, President Roosevelt will have more dictatorial power than Hitler in Germany or Mussolini in Italy.

Of course, I do not think the President wrote this bill. It was prepared by his subordinates. Section 4, subsection E, provides—

> Delegate the powers conferred on him (the President) under this joint resolution to any governmental agency.

Section 6 provides that the President is authorized—

> To prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this resolution, and any violation of these rules or regulations shall be punishable by a fine not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment for 2 years, or both.

This gives the President the right to delegate these unheard of dictatorial powers to his subordinates, and under section 6 he and these subordinates or any one of them to whom he may delegate these powers—and he must delegate the carrying out of these provisions to thousands of subordinates—has the power to make criminal statutes, a violation of any one of which will subject a citizen to a fine not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment for 2 years, or both. If we would go just one step further and confer upon the President the power of life and death, then it could be said that the President is clothed with powers equal to those exercised by the Caesars under the Roman Empire.

The other day my distinguished Democratic friend, Mr. CELLER, of New York, made a most eloquent appeal against the unwise practice of the executive branch of the Government issuing orders and regulations under the dictatorial powers given to it by the Seventy-third Congress, and in effect giving it the power to make criminal statutes. It appeared that approximately 11,000 of these orders had been issued. Of course, no lawyer is sufficiently advised to keep track of, know, and understand all of these orders and regulations. What chance would the average citizen have to know about them and understand them? Yet our citizens have been brought into court and subjected to prosecution on these orders and regulations. This bill enlarges these dictatorial powers.

It is the duty of Congress, and it should guard that duty and its powers most jealously, to formulate and to write into law the criminal statutes of our country.

This bill gives the President the power to extend the period, to stop, to combine, or to change in any way he may desire the many, many agencies of this Government, and without submitting it to Congress he may prolong or shorten the periods for their operation any and all of the emergency acts passed by the Seventy-third Congress.

If this bill is passed in substantially the form it has been sent to Congress by the President, Congress ought to quit and go home. I want the President to have all the power and authority granted to him by the Constitution and no more. I shall always insist that Congress have no less power than is granted to it by the Constitution and that it assert that authority. Representative government, the freedom of our people, and the rights of our citizens cannot be safeguarded and protected by any other policy.

The Democratic President and Democratic Congress undertook to justify their disregard of the Constitution on the plea that an emergency existed, and that when this emergency was over we would return to the ordinary processes of constitutional government. This administration is entering upon its third year. This bill enlarges the dictatorial power of the executive branch of the Government and its subordinates, and these extraordinary powers are to be exercised for the next 2½ years.

This country has seen great times of stress. It has come through all of them, not by overthrowing parliamentary government and ignoring the rights of the people but by upholding and maintaining these principles.

RIGHTS OF LABOR AND INDUSTRY THREATENED

No measure ever enacted by Congress gave the President such dictatorial powers over labor and industry. If this bill is adopted as presented, there is scarcely a limit to the power of the President over industry and agriculture, and this is true as to labor. The toilers of this country are deeply interested in certain measures. For many of them I have the greatest sympathy, and if given an opportunity will support them most earnestly and actively. This bill grants to the President these dictatorial powers up to June 30, 1937, and if this measure becomes a law I expect to see many conflicts between labor and the subordinates of the President who will undertake to carry out these dictatorial powers for him. And may I warn the friends of labor, if this measure becomes a law, none of your major bills will see daylight? And may I also warn industry and agriculture that this measure gives the President such power over you, your property and the management thereof, that in the end it will create a great deal of discord and will greatly retard recovery? This measure gives to the President—and he may delegate it to his subordinates—the power to make rules and regulations affecting industry, agriculture, and labor that in effect amount to criminal statutes and the violation of which calls for a penalty of as much as $5,000 or 2 years in the penitentiary, or both. Under the new deal more than 11,000 orders and regulations were issued. I am unwilling to defeat the purpose of the toilers or hamstring and retard industry or agriculture by conferring upon the President and his subordinates these arbitrary and dictatorial powers. It might turn out very well if the President could supervise and direct each and all of these activities. But he cannot do so. He must delegate it, and he has the right to under this bill, to thousands of subordinates. There really is no place in America for one Hitler or Mussolini. This would make a Hitler or Mussolini out of hundreds and hundreds who will undertake to execute the provisions of this bill.

FIVE BILLION SEVEN HUNDRED MILLION UNSPENT

A statement of the Treasury Department dated January 18, 1935, shows that out of the tremendous sums of money heretofore appropriated by the Seventy-third Congress and turned over to the President, there remains in the Treasury unspent approximately $5,700,000,000. Notwithstanding this enormous unspent sum, the President now comes and demands that Congress turn over to him without any strings attached to it $4,000,000,000, placing in his hands in all $9,700,000,000 to spend as he and his subordinates may see fit. This is more than twice the amount of money expended by the Federal Government in the 4 years of the Civil War.

This money is not to be spent for relief, but, as they contend, to provide jobs for the unemployed. During the last 18 months the Government has spent $1,500,000,000 for the alleged purpose of providing jobs. Can any reasonable man contend that this $5,700,000,000 now in the Treasury would not provide all the money necessary for the next year for the purpose of providing jobs? At least it would be more than the Government could legitimately spend, taking into consideration what it did do in the last 18 months.

It is said that this Congress will not adjourn until about June or July, and the next Congress will meet early in January 1936. Mark you, the President and his subordinates have no program. They have no definite plan, so they say, as to how they will spend this enormous sum. The President insists that this money must be handed to him without any strings and he can do as he pleases.

We see in the press where many Democratic leaders assert that this is unprecedented. There never was anything like it. I wonder what the board of aldermen or the city council of any city would say to its mayor, even of a city like New York, if he came before them and demanded $10,000,000 and refused to disclose the purpose for which the money was to be used. I wonder if any legislature of any State would grant to any Governor his request for even $1,000,000 if he refused to disclose what he was going to do with the money. Is there any business institution in the land whose board of directors would vote its president $100,000 unless that president would inform them what use was to be made of the money?

And the answer would not be sufficient that he desired to provide some new jobs or that he had in mind to make some betterments. The query would at once come back, "What jobs, what work, what betterments, what improvements do you have in mind?"

What head of a family, if his wife should come to him and request a thousand dollars, at a time when he was deeply in debt and would have to borrow the money, would not demand the purpose for which the thousand dollars was to be used?

I have always opposed granting lump sums to the President or to the various bureaus and agencies of the Government. When I was in Congress before, the Republicans passed the Budget bill. Practically all the States have followed in that lead, and the States, as well as the Federal Government, have budget bureaus. I am unwilling to place such a tremendous sum of money in the hands of anyone when the person asking it refuses to give the general purposes for which it will be spent and admits that he has no program.

If we had a full Treasury there might be some excuse for such action. This is not the case. We must borrow this money. This administration has increased the national debt $10,000,000,000 already, and if we vote this $4,000,000,000 the increase will amount to approximately $15,000,000,000 on June 30, 1935, and our national debt on June 30, 1935, will reach the stupendous sum of $35,000,000,000, and this does not take into account the losses that will be sustained on the loans that have been made.

President Roosevelt was elected on his platform and upon his declaration that he would decrease governmental expenses at least 25 percent and balance the Budget and also reduce taxes. He further declared that the Government must live within its income and these policies must be carried out in order to overcome the depression and bring about prosperity. How different are his performances compared with his promises! The expense of government has more than doubled. There have been billions in deficit for each of the years he has been in office. The deficit this year will amount to $5,000,000,000, and he and other Democratic leaders admit that there will be deficits of billions next year and the next year and throughout President Roosevelt's term.

NO PROGRAM OR POLICY

As there is an unexpended balance in the Treasury of $5,700,000,000 of emergency appropriations made by the Seventy-third Congress to be used for recovery and relief, it seems to me that before the President should be granted an additional $4,000,000,000 for these purposes he and his subordinates should submit a general policy and program so that Congress might intelligently vote on this matter. We should like to know what amount of this money is to be used to set up strictly private enterprises. One of the great drawbacks to recovery is the fact that the Government has been engaging in every sort of private enterprise against the citizens of this country. It seems to me that this sum of money should be used to construct highways, build bridges, improve rivers and harbors, improve our system of national parks, and build park-to-park highways, construct public buildings for the Government, and aid States, counties, and municipalities to construct necessary buildings, and to provide aid for the public schools and other public educational institutions of the country. This would bring the expenditure and distribution of this money into every county and community of the Nation and give all of our able-bodied citizens who need work an opportunity to make a livelihood for themselves and their families, and this policy will greatly encourage private enterprise and private industry. The President and his subordinates have had 2 years in which to map out a program of work and relief recovery, and if they have not worked out such a program with the billions that have been spent, why place into their hands an additional $4,000,000,000 without any program or definite policy? Would it not be well to let them try their hand on the $5,700,000,000 of the emergency funds that is now in the Treasury unexpended?

The record shows that although the President has had all of these billions at his command, yet during the last 18 months he has expended approximately one and one-half billion dollars for work jobs. Congress will be in session until about the 1st of July. Why all the haste to rush this bill through giving the President these unheard-of dictatorial powers? Why not take some time to work out a program? Congress will be in session again next January. Unless they spend money three or four times faster during the next 11 months to provide work and jobs than they did for the last 18 months there will be plenty of this emergency money unexpended in the Treasury when Congress meets again. The adage "Haste makes waste" is true under a "new deal" as well as an "old deal." Is it because the President thinks he has Congress that he can control absolutely now but might not be able to control a year hence? Therefore he is going to get these dictatorial powers and these billions of dollars while "the getting is good."

I am not opposed to the appropriation of billions of dollars for the purpose of providing jobs for the unemployed or relief for the needy. They say very little of this four billion will be used in 1935. We thought a lot of money was spent last fall during the campaign. If we vote this four billion, you watch the money fly in 1936. You know there will be something doing in 1936.

NO RELIEF FOR THE VETERANS AND THEIR DEPENDENTS

I listened to every word the President uttered in his eloquent annual message to a joint session of the House and Senate and was greatly disappointed when he closed that address without even mentioning the words "veterans, their widows or orphan children."

On March 20, 1933, the President jammed through Congress, under another gag rule, the so-called "Economy Act", in order, as he said, to balance the Budget—to keep our expenditures within our income. Nearly all the economies effected by that act were against the disabled defenders of our country and the widows and orphans of our veterans. Approximately 500,000 disabled veterans and tens of thousands of poor widows and orphans of veterans were taken off the pension rolls and practically all of them are still off the pension rolls and are in dire need.

There is not a word in this bill proposing to restore these rights or to right these wrongs to the veterans and their dependents. The same Economy Act reduced the salaries of the President and all other officers and Government employees 15 percent. An act of the Seventy-third Congress has already restored 10 percent of that cut, and it is provided that the other 5 percent shall be restored on July 1, 1935, but the administration is fighting every effort to restore those benefits that were taken away from the disabled veterans and the widows and children of veterans.

C. C. C. TO BE MORE THAN DOUBLED

The President did point out in his message, and it is generally agreed by the Democratic leaders, that the C. C. C., which has now approximately 300,000 in its camps, will be increased to a point somewhere between six hundred thousand and a million. This item alone will cost this Government approximately $1,000,000,000. This will come out of the $4,000,000,000, this bill, or, if the President desires, will come out of the $5,700,000,000 emergency fund now unexpended in the Treasury.

Tens of millions of dollars will be expended to acquire, equip, and maintain "hobo hotels." I wonder how much of it will be used to burn pigs and plow under cotton.

Yes; we have millions and millions for the "hobo hotels", for the C. C. C.'s, to burn pigs, and to engage in other unprofitable and foolish ventures, but not one cent to restore the benefits that were taken away from the disabled defenders of our country and their widows and orphans, and not one cent to pay the adjusted-service certificates.

Let me say to my Democratic friends, you went out last year and in order to secure the support of the veterans and their families and friends, pledged the veterans that if they would support you you would vote for the cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates and would vote to restore the benefits that had been taken from the disabled veterans and the dependents of veterans. If you vote for this measure and spend all the money, you will be told by the President and other Democratic leaders that nothing can be done for the veterans as the money has already been spent.

It is my opinion that one of the purposes of this $4,000,000,000 bill at this time is to sidetrack the soldiers' bonus and to prevent any other relief to the veterans and their dependents. This will be the effect of your vote on this gag rule and this "force" bill.

Many business men and others as well as veterans have urged me to vote for the bonus and other relief for the veterans and their dependents. I pledged them in my campaign that I would do so. If I voted for this $4,000,000,000 at this time, I would in effect defeat that pledge.

Just after the war I helped to pass a bill in the House to pay this adjusted compensation. It was a just obligation of the Government. Recent investigation has shown that billions were made out of munitions. The railroads and more than 7,000 cost-plus contractors had their pay adjusted soon after the war. We waited until 1925 and handed these veterans these adjusted certificates, due in 1945. If this additional pay was right, it should have been paid just after the war and not in 1945. The President and the Democratic leaders of Congress appear determined to defeat the bonus or any other measure restoring benefits to the veterans.

FAVORS ADEQUATE RELIEF

In order to force all of the Members of the House to grant to him these dictatorial powers and this additional $4,000,000,000 without any strings or limitations to it, the President has included in the bill $880,000,000 for relief. This was appropriated in the Seventy-third Congress. It is stuck in this bill as a club. Of course, I strongly favor this $880,000,000 for relief, and my only objection is that it is not sufficient. The people of my district and, as I understand, in most of the States and districts remember very well how the Democrats urged the people to vote for the Democratic nominees for Senator and Congressman last fall if they desired the relief to go on. It was charged that the Republican Party was against relief, and it would stop if the people failed to give President Roosevelt a Democratic Congress. The election was barely over and the results certified when those high in the councils of the Democratic Party began to denounce relief and declared it would have to stop. I heard the President, in his joint message to Congress, declare that relief had to stop at an early date. This bill provides that it must stop by June 30, 1935. The leading Democrats on the floor of the House declared it was vicious, wrong, un-American, would destroy the country, and that it must come to an end.

How different they are talking now to what they did before the election! The President declares there are at least a million five hundred thousand unemployables on the relief rolls. What does he mean by the unemployables? The aged needy, the blind, the cripples, poor widows with young children, and those so broken in health that they cannot follow gainful employment. They are the unemployables. They cannot work, even though jobs might be available. They, their wives and children, represent at least 5,000,000 people. The President declares and this bill before us provides that these 5,000,000 of needy people go off the Federal relief rolls June 30, 1935, and they are thrown back on their respective States, counties, and communities for help. This is another provision of the bill that I am opposed to.

There is not now any Federal pension law, and neither does Kentucky have any pension law that will take care of these people, and Kentucky will not be in shape to provide and take care of them by June 30, 1935. I think this is a cruel policy. If there is any class outside of our disabled veterans and their dependents that should receive consideration and relief, it is this great group of aged needy, poor blind, poor cripples, poor widows, and those who are physically unable to work. This relief should have been continued until a pension could have been provided for them. We must not forget that among these unemployables are tens of thousands of disabled defenders of our country.

NO ADEQUATE OLD-AGE PENSIONS

I favor a Federal pension for the aged needy, for the blind, cripples, widows with minor children, and those so broken in health that they cannot follow any gainful occupation. This covers the so-called "unemployables." This pension should be a sum sufficient to take care of this group of needy people, and to provide them real support in the way of food, clothing, shelter, and other necessaries. These, with their families now on relief, number more than 5,000,000 people. Of course, we know that all of this group of people who are needy are not on relief. What is to become of these people? The President says they must be taken off relief and thrown back on the States, counties, and communities not later than June 30, 1935, and all relief to them from the Federal Government must stop at that time. I do not agree with that policy. The administration says it favors a pension for them, and it is suggested by the administration that $50,000,000 be appropriated for the year beginning July 1, 1935, and $125,000,000 for each year thereafter, these sums to be matched by an equal sum provided by the States. Of course, it will require a long process for the State of Kentucky, and a number of the other States, to provide the money to match this. The Government will not put up anything until the State matches it. Kentucky cannot do so until a constitutional amendment is voted on in November 1935, and funds cannot be provided in Kentucky until the legislature meets in 1936. I repeat, What is to become of the aged needy, the blind, the cripples, widows, and small children until this pension plan can be put into effect? Let us see what benefits will come to these poor people if this pension measure is passed by Congress and these funds are matched by the States. Under the administration bill no persons can get a pension unless they are needy at least 65 years of age. The Government reports show that there are seven million five hundred thousand more than 65 years of age, or crippled, or blind. At least six million of these are needy and would qualify for a pension.

If the Government put up fifty million the first year and the States would match the fifty million, we would have $100,000,000 to divide among 6,000,000 people, and this would give each person $16.66⅔ per year, or one and one-third dollars each per month for the first year. For the year beginning July 1, 1936, the Government would put up one hundred and twenty-five million and the States one hundred and twenty-five million, making $250,000,000 in all to divide among 6,000,000 people. This would give each person less than $7 per month, the Government providing about $3.50 per month and the States the other $3.50. Of course, if the State of Kentucky did not match the Government's money, this needy group of people in Kentucky would not get anything. I do not agree with the administration's pension bill at all. Not one dollar of this $4,000,000,000 bill that is now before us can be used for these pensions this year or any other time. The President asserts and this bill provides that this $4,000,000,000 will be used for other purposes. Our Democratic friends went strong last year when they were campaigning in favor of old-age pensions. I did likewise. My people are for it. Let me say to our Democratic friends who pledged themselves to enact an old-age pension bill, if you vote for this four-billion measure, you will be unable to keep your promises. The administration will say to you after this large sum is appropriated that there are no funds to provide an adequate pension for the aged needy, the blind, the crippled, and poor widows. I should like to see this bill amended so that we might pay off the adjusted-service certificates, restore the benefits that were taken from our disabled veterans, their widows and orphans, provide an adequate pension for these unemployables, and use the balance of this money, together with the five billion seven hundred million that are now in the Treasury, to build a lot of farm-to-market roads in each of the counties where needed, splendid park-to-park highways, public buildings, improve and develop our rivers and harbors, aid our public schools, and other activities of a public nature; but under the gag rule no such amendments can be presented or considered.

FOR AMENDMENTS

We have been told over and over by Democratic leaders that the emergency is over. We are well on our way to full recovery, yet this bill is the most drastic emergency measure yet proposed, and it runs until June 30, 1937—2½ years more. This measure should be amended and limited to expire June 30, 1936. If the necessity requires, Congress can then continue the program. It has been announced in the expenditure of this money a wage will be paid that is less than that paid for the same kind of work in each community. This bill should be amended so that the Government will pay the same wages as is paid by like services by private enterprises for the same character of service in each particular community. It should be further amended by taking away from the President the power of eminent domain, and sections 4, 5, and 6 of the bill should be stricken out. It should be further amended giving to each State such proportion of the money that is to be expended as the unemployed of each State bears to the whole number of unemployed in the Nation. It should be clearly set out by proper amendment that no favoritism or partisanship should be allowed in the distribution of relief or in providing employment. We have seen a lot of this, and thousands have made complaints. Many of us have seen political advantage taken with people on account of their distress and misery. I am more interested in a square deal than I am in a new deal. The Democratic majority in the House will refuse to adopt these salutory amendments, and I shall vote to recommit this bill to the committee with instructions that these and other amendments be adopted.

WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED

Our Democratic friends are obsessed with the idea that in their hearts is to be found all the humanity and sympathy for the distressed people of this Nation, and that in some way they have a monopoly on the wisdom and patriotism of our country. All in all there was turned over to President Roosevelt, by the Seventy-second and Seventy-third Congresses more than $23,000,000,000. In addition to the $4,000,000,000 asked for in this bill for so-called "work relief", they are demanding about $4,500,000,000 more to carry on the ordinary business of the Government. There is an unexpended balance in the Treasury now of $5,700,000,000 for emergency purposes. The Congress will appropriate around $4,500,000,000 to carry on the ordinary activities of the Government; and if we give the President $4,880,000,000 asked for in this bill, he will have at his disposal approximately $15,000,000,000. What are some of the outstanding results after the present administration has had an unlimited sum of money and more than 2 years to deal with the depression? What do we find the situation to be? Taxes have been raised to new high levels. The national debt has been increased more than $10,000,000,000, and it is now approximately $29,000,000,000 and at the end of this fiscal year it will be $35,000,000,000; more than 11,000,000 workers in industry out of employment. This is 500,000 more than there were a year ago, approximately 20,000,000 people on the direct relief. This is an increase of over 5,000,000 more than a year ago, and there are at least 5,000,000 more people who are suffering and need relief, and the demands for relief are growing by leaps and bounds, and the President comes along in this bill and declares to the country that he must have nearly $5,000,000,000 more with dictatorial powers to deal with recovery and relief. I wonder if our Democratic friends have very much to brag about?

This country will never come out of the depression under the present policy and set-up. There is one important factor lacking and that is confidence. There are more than 11,000,000 unemployed in industry. More than 40,000,000 acres of productive farm lands have been cut out. Nothing is said about the millions of unemployed farmers, and the millions of unemployed merchants, clerks, and so forth. With all of this power and money the President and his spokesmen declare they hope to put as many as 3,500,000 men to work, and my honest judgment is that a year from now there will be as many unemployed as there are today. When Congress first gave to the President large appropriations and extraordinary power in March 1933, it was freely predicted by the Democratic leaders that they would put at least 6,000,000 men or more to work by Labor Day, 1933, but unemployment has increased. Neither the President nor his spokesmen have told us what is to become of the other 7,500,000 of unemployed in industry. They are able to work. They are not included in the pension proposals, and everybody is to be taken off the relief by next June. It proves that the Government cannot furnish everybody with a job who is able to work and wants to work. Industry and agriculture must provide these jobs. Let the Government encourage private industry and private enterprise and not on every hand be their competitor. The banks are full of money, but those who have money do not have confidence in the present policies of our Government. Persons with money are putting it in tax-exempt securities. In that way they avoid taxes and have liquid assets. Let the Government spend its money on public projects, restore confidence, and we will see the ranks of unemployment thinning and prosperity return. Let the Government take its finger out of everybody's eye and its nose out of everybody's business. I favor the necessary and proper regulation of business to protect the workers and consumers and prevent unfair practices, but the Government cannot run all the business of this country successfully. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER].

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, as the debate has progressed this afternoon I have given close attention to the reasons which have been advanced by Members for supporting this bill. I regret that there have been a few Members who have stated that no matter what their common sense may indicate, no matter what their conscience may direct, and notwithstanding the oath which they took some 3 weeks ago to "support and defend the Constitution of the United States", they are now willing to support this bill no matter what it contains, just because the President of the United States asks it. I sincerely hope that there are not many Members of this nature, for if so then surely has representative government fallen low in this country.

The chief reason given for the support of this measure is that it is a relief bill, but what assurance have we of this except for the name? When some irresponsible bureaucrat comes into your district and spends some of the millions appropriated by this bill for the construction of a Government owned and operated factory to compete with the private industry which is already established and which is trying its best to keep in existence, will you believe that this is "relief" just because the bureaucrat justifies his action on the ground that he is "relieving economic maladjustments"? When some one of the disciples of "economic planning" establishes a highly socialized federally controlled community in your district something along the line of those of which the Soviet Government boasts, will you believe that it is "relief" just because the Government official in charge informs you that he is "improving living and working conditions"?

It is easy enough to provide relief in the orderly and ordinary way. We have done it a number of times in the past few years, and we can do it again. Must we vote for this abomination just because the draftsman has labeled it a relief bill? Surely a rose by any other name would smell as sweet.

Why is it necessary to proceed in this way? We have been informed that the President has had a committee studying the relief question for some months, and that this bill is the result of their conclusions. Is it seriously stated that such a committee with the information which it must have before it can be no more specific than this legislation would indicate? Surely they must have some general theory on which to proceed and have some general categories within which allocations of different expenditures should be placed. Could not the results of their studies be transmitted to the Congress and incorporated in a proper relief bill? Has the President no confidence in this House which his party controls by a more than 3 to 1 majority?

We are informed by the gentleman in charge of this bill that in all its various provisions it is the work of the President alone, and that he is now asking that it be passed. What is he demanding of the legislature?

First. The right to spend $5,000,000,000.

Second. The right to change completely the functions and duties of all governmental agencies, and even abolish them.

Third. The right to extend, for more than 2 years, agencies which would otherwise terminate, as for instance, the N. R. A. and the A. A. A.

Fourth. The right to delegate his power as he may see fit.

Fifth. The right to buy or sell all kinds of property, invoking even the great governmental power of eminent domain.

Sixth and last, and worst, the right to fine and send to prison anyone who violates a rule or regulation which he may in his own discretion establish.

Mr. Chairman, if the President of the United States has indeed asked for powers of this kind, his demand is the high-water mark of Presidential arrogance. I could not vote these powers in peace time to any President in our history—not even to a demigod. If this bill passes, it rings the temporary death knell of representative government, but it rings equally the final death knell of the new deal. "Whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, it was with grave reluctance that I felt impelled to oppose in the Rules Committee the granting of the gag rule for the passage of this bill, appropriating as it does in a lump sum, $4,000,000,000, without any specific provisions as to how any part of it is to be expended and with only the most vague specification of the general policy for which it is intended.

It is with equal reluctance that I must oppose the bill coming to us as it does with administration approval. I have heretofore consistently supported the measures proposed by this administration, and I would support this measure if I did not feel that under my oath to support the Constitution of the United States that there are certain legislative functions which the Congress itself must perform, and in the performance of which it cannot abdicate in favor of the President of the United States or anyone else.

I take this position reluctantly, because I have every confidence in the President. I know that this Republic has rarely been blessed with an Executive so earnest and so sincere in his purposes and in his efforts to relieve the suffering, heal the hardships, and adjust the wrongs of the great masses of our people. But, after all, this is still a Republic. We are living under the Constitution given us by the founders of our Union, a Constitution that has happily survived up to this moment economic storms, foreign invasions, and civil strife. If it is to continue to survive, it must have the respect and support of the elected Representatives of the people, who are sworn to uphold its provisions.

The provisions of this bill are a clear and complete abdication by the Congress of the United States of its functions and a delegation by the Congress to the President, or whomsoever he may select, of the legislative duties imposed upon this body.

Let us briefly analyze this bill.

The first section appropriates a lump sum of four thousand millions of dollars. Under the law we are required to appropriate money for specific purposes. But the only information that the House is given by this bill of the purpose for which this huge sum is to be expended is of the most general nature.

These terms are so broad and general as to make them meaningless. They may mean the expenditure of public funds on almost any conceivable project that the ingenuous minds intrusted with the ultimate expenditure of the funds might devise.

No limitation or specification upon the kinds of work or the class of projects is provided. No allocations or limitations of any character are imposed upon any part of the fund, even in general terms. The legislative body utterly fails in this provision to prescribe even a general policy of what, if anything, the legislative mind had in view when the legislation was passed.

The fourth section of the act authorizes the Executive not only to coordinate and consolidate any and all Government agencies but authorizes him by Executive order to continue the life of any existing governmental agency even though its life may be definitely limited by a previous act of Congress, and confers the further power to delegate to any others, whom he may select, including corporations, the legislative powers which have been delegated to him by the Congress under the provisions of this act.

The fifth section authorizes the President "to guarantee loans to, or payments of, needy individuals." To make grants and loans and to acquire by the power of eminent domain real and personal property of unlimited kind and character, for unlimited purposes, and to improve, develop, maintain, grant, sell, or lease the same.

The sixth section authorizes the President to prescribe rules and regulations, having the force and effect of criminal laws, the purport and extent of which we are unable to hazard a guess and by virtue of which a citizen may be fined as much as $5,000 and imprisoned for not exceeding 2 years, or both.

After diligent inquiry from authoritative sources I have been unable to obtain any information as to why the great necessity for the immediate passage of the whole of this enormous appropriation before any plans or policies are formulated for the expenditure of the same. This Congress will doubtless be in session for the next 5 months. Surely in that time the Congress could be informed of the plan and the purpose and the policy for the expenditure of these sums, so that we might legislate intelligently and with a due sense of the deep responsibility owed to our constituents, who must ultimately pay the debt. I am not concerned with any particular projects or any particular class of work relief, and I am sure that I could subscribe to the President's plan when it is formulated, but I am impressed with the profound conviction that I have no right under my oath and in conformity with my duty to my constituents to vote away such a huge sum of money until I can obtain intelligent information as to the purpose for which it is designed. All I ask is intelligent information as to the plan and specific provisions and limitations in the bill itself that will make it conform to the existing law and the clear purpose of the Constitution.

The Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, section 204 B, expressly prohibits the passage of any lump-sum appropriation such as here contemplated. It provides as follows:

SEC. B. Estimates for lump-sum appropriations contained in the Budget or transmitted under section 203 shall be accompanied by statements showing, in such detail and form as may be necessary to inform Congress, the manner of expenditures of such appropriations and of the corresponding appropriations for the fiscal year in progress and the last completed fiscal year.

As to constitutional precedents, we have the decision of the Supreme Court in the "hot oil" cases, so recent that the ink has hardly dried on the opinion of the Court. That opinion contains a stern and mandatory admonition to this Congress against the delegation of its constitutional duties. In that case the Supreme Court has laid down a chart for this Congress and has done so in the last 2 weeks. Will the Congress not pause to even read these words of warning and admonition? The Supreme Court there tells us what is a proper delegation and what is an unconstitutional delegation of our legislative authority. Will you not pause long enough in your haste to peruse and ponder upon a few brief extracts from the chart thus given you?

In referring to Section 9 (c) of the Recovery Act, the Court says on page 9:

So far as this section is concerned, it gives to the President an unlimited authority to determine the policy and to lay down the prohibition, or not lay it down, as he sees fit.

Again, on page 12:

The question whether such a delegation of legislative power is permitted by the Constitution is not answered by the argument that it should be assumed that the President has acted, and will act, for what he believes to be the public good. The point is not one of motives but of constitutional authority, for which the best of motives is not a substitute.

And again, on page 20:

If section 9 (c) were held valid, it would be idle to pretend that anything would be left of limitations upon the power of the Congress to delegate its lawmaking function. The reasoning of the many decisions we have viewed would be made vacuous and their distinctions nugatory. Instead of performing its lawmaking functions, the Congress could at will and as to such subjects as it chooses transfer that function to the President or other officer or to an administrative body. The question is not of the intrinsic importance of the particular statute before us, but of the constitutional processes of legislation, which are an essential part of our system of government.

Is it not clear to everyone from this opinion of the Supreme Court that Congress cannot delegate to any other person or body its constitutional duty to lay down the legislative policies of the Government in specific terms and that that policy must be contained in the act itself?

I shall have nothing to say relative to the remaining clauses in the bill, because with respect to those sections containing improper delegations of authority the advocates of the bill have finally and reluctantly accorded to the House the right to amend or eliminate the objectionable features.

The mere fact that this concession has been made at the insistence of the minority on the Democratic side of the aisle is a striking indictment of the hasty preparation of so important a measure and the speed with which it has been attempted to expedite its passage. If in the hasty preparation of this bill such grave errors have been made in 4 of its 7 paragraphs as to impel the advocates of the measure to confess error on the floor of the House, is it not probable that equally grave errors lurk within the provisions of the remaining paragraphs which we are prohibited by the "gag rule" from amending or correcting in any particular. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the first section of this bill which gives the President of the United States the right to relieve and adjust economic maladjustments and to improve living and working conditions which cover a wide field in our economic life. Ever since section 7 (a) in the National Industrial Recovery Act has been on the statute books there has been a continual conflict between employer and employee, inasmuch as they cannot get together under the provisions of the law for the settlement of labor disputes between employer and employees. Under the provisions of this bill now before us the President of the United States can step into a labor controversy where employer and employee cannot agree and put into force a rule or regulation which if not respected by the employer and employee would subject them to a penitentiary sentence and a fine of $5,000. There is no question about that.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I only have 3 minutes.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I have 3 minutes only, and I have another question I want to touch upon here.

Mr. Chairman, section 6 of this bill now before us for consideration gives to the President of the United States power to prescribe whatever rules and regulations may be necessary to carry out this joint resolution, and any violation of such rule or regulation set forth by the President shall be punishable by a fine of not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not to exceed 2 years, or both.

It has been stated on the floor this afternoon that this is a delegation of power to other agencies of government. It gives the President the right to make rules and regulations which have the force of law back of them and which may send an American citizen to the penitentiary and subject him to a fine of $5,000 for a violation of the rule or regulation which Congress did not write into the law.

During the last session of Congress I had very deep convictions on that very question in reference to a certain provision in the stock-exchange-control bill. I campaigned on that issue during the last election and I am bitterly opposed to Congress delegating legislative powers to any other agency of Government that has the force of law back of it and send an American citizen to prison.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I also yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, it is hard for me to understand the haste with which this bill, House Joint Resolution 117, involving $4,800,000,000 and involving principles heretofore unknown, came into the House. My information is that a subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee first reported it out on January 21 and not the full committee. Not until yesterday, January 22, were we able to obtain copies of the bill. The entire Appropriations Committee met today and reported it out.

I do not have anything to say about the expenditure of the $4,800,000,000 or about its being left to the President—this is the least of my concern—but I do want to bring to your attention sections 4, 5, 6, and 7 of the bill and I think these were the sections I aided in helping open up the rules so that amendments could be offered to them. [Applause.]

So far as the appropriation is concerned, I do not care who spends it just so it is spent right. However, there is a matter very dear to me, and that is the integrity of the House of Representatives. When by one swoop we wipe out and delegate all authority that we have, we might as well close shop and come back here in 1937.

Someone, I think, stated that this bill was carefully drawn. May I point out to you one small thing that shows it was not carefully drawn? To the lawyers in the House I call attention to the fact that it provides, in section 5, subsection (c), line 11, the right of eminent domain for personal property. Under this authority those to whom the President delegates this authority may go and take the personal property of any man in this country. Have you, as lawyers, ever heard of this before? The right of eminent domain applying to personal property? I shall offer amendments to these sections 4, 5, 6, and 7 and under the 5-minute rule I shall speak on them, but I call attention to some of the reasons why the bill should be amended.

In connection with section 4, a rumor has reached me that the Appropriations Committee will offer an amendment. Why the committee did not consider it first before reporting it out, I do not know. Under section 4 not only is the power given the President to establish agencies, to utilize existing agencies, but to consolidate, redistribute, and change any existing agency of the Government without reporting to the Congress, without any report to the creators at all, and then, finally, this is to last until June 30, 1937.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not yield in my admiration or respect for the President to any man, but, on the other hand, I do not yield the conscientious views I have of the oath that was administered to me when I assumed my duties here in the House.

To say that this Congress should so abrogate its rights that all these departments or agencies could be abolished while we sit supinely here and agree to it, I for one shall not subscribe to.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will permit an interruption in support of his argument, paragraph (c) of section 4 gives him power to annul acts of Congress, which the courts have time and time again held he has not the constitutional power to do.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is correct.

Under section 7, after all this is done and after the $4,800,000,000 is expended, what report does this House get? It merely gets a report of the obligations incurred.

In justice to the Membership of this House I shall offer an amendment requiring this report to go farther than the obligations incurred and give the expenditures made and to classify the expenditures, so that all may be public property, and the people of this Nation, as well as this House of Representatives, may know what is passed and what is done.

Then I come back to section 6. I have fought this provision every time I could in this House. It is the matter of delegating the right to a board or to any single person to provide penal statutes, to make criminals, without the Congress passing upon what the law is.

In this section 7, while I know it would not be done under the present Chief Executive of this Nation, yet a precedent is established, a precedent which is abhorrent to my idea of criminal law, and that is this: That under the rules and regulations which may be issued by the President any number of acts could be made criminal. I say frankly that I cannot conceive of any criminal acts which might be committed by any precedent on account of the provisions of this bill that are not already on the statute books. And by providing for rules and regulations without the criminal part to it, all civil obligations could be taken care of. For these few reasons that I have given in the short time that I have spoken, I feel that the bill before it is passed should be amended materially in these sections. I will gladly go the limit to relieve suffering, to provide for reemployment, and to back the administration in every particular along these lines, but I cannot vote for this bill in its present form, and I do not intend to do so unless it is amended very materially. There are other matters that I could speak of, but these I hope that in the time I have under the 5-minute rule I can bring to your attention.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FENERTY].

Mr. FENERTY. Mr. Chairman, I realize that it is most unusual for a newly elected Member of this House to seek to express his views on any measure until he shall have become intimately acquainted with the rules that govern the House of Representatives, and the even more strict traditions of forensic propriety that dominate us here. It is therefore with hesitancy that I rise in my place to state briefly, and I hope with complete clarity, my attitude toward this resolution.

Let me say at once that I regret that the majority in this House did not introduce a resolution to which wise and patriotic men of both parties could repair. I am one of those who believe that no appropriation of money is too great, if necessary for the alleviation of human distress, unemployment, and the misery that results from hunger and privation. This resolution calls for a bulk sum of $4,000,000,000 to be intrusted to one man, authorizing him in carrying out its provisions to expend money at will "without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws" and "without regard to the Classification Act of 1923." In addition to this tremendous grant of legislative power, it permits him to buy or sell any real and personal property or to acquire it by right of eminent domain, and in addition to take such extensive powers and delegate them to any agency of the Government.

Under this unamended resolution any bureau to which this all-embracing power was delegated could use the entire four billions for some rural or other purpose in the West or South while the people of a great metropolitan area like Philadelphia or New York or Chicago or Boston or Detroit or Los Angeles are left standing unaided in the breadlines. As the Philadelphia Record stated editorially only this morning:

> For the work-relief bill the gag rule was drastically applied, limiting debate to a mere empty formality and choking off any possible amendments to the measure.
> It demonstrated anew that gag rule is not democracy. When it takes a majority of the House to force a bill out of a committee, the minority is not only deprived of its rights but the majority is transformed from a group of thoughtful and understanding legislators into a procession of goose-steppers.
>
> One of the voter's basic rights in a democracy is that of compelling his Representative to stand up and be counted on a measure in which that voter is interested.
> Because of that right Congress remains the greatest agency for expression of the popular will. To stifle that popular will by parliamentary suffocation is dangerous at this time above all times.
> Here was a bill which not merely gave the President power to spend $4,800,000,000 but a bill which delegated to him the power of life and death over virtually all Government agencies and bureaus, a bill which gave him the right of eminent domain in public-works construction and the right to distribute the $4,800,000,000 in any way he might see fit.
> The Record has every confidence that the President would use those powers wisely.
>
> But that does not negative the duty of Congress to know and understand just what is in the legislation it enacts.
>
> This flare-up will pass. But the taste of the gag rule will remain bitter—
> Unless administration leaders in the House recognize the trend of public sentiment and abolish that rule.

I share the confidence of the Philadelphia Record that the President would use this power with discretion, but there is one important reason why I cannot vote for this resolution unless it be properly amended. The resolution is a surrender, absolute and unconditional, of the power which we, as representatives of the citizens who elected us, are obligated exclusively to exercise in their behalf. There is no question in anyone's mind about the desirability of allotting money for relief. Four billions! I will vote for five billions or more for unemployment and other social-security measures. I will vote for all legislation that will properly protect the worker and his family and give him an opportunity to better his condition in life, just as I would support any measure that will protect our Nation's war-time defenders.

Does this bill guarantee that? It certainly does not. Instead, it opens the door to playing politics with human misery, it appropriates a huge sum of the moneys taxed from the people with no definite plan for its expenditure, no formulated system by which it is to be used; merely a surrender of the people's money to be expended at random, no funds allotted to the laboring group, not even a mention in the resolution of the veterans of America's wars, or the widows, orphans, and families of the men who, deserving most, have in recent years been deprived even of the little they had theretofore received.

Only 3 weeks ago I stood in this Chamber and for the first time as a new Member of Congress was asked to swear without mental reservation to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic.

Today, 3 weeks later, I am asked to vote for a resolution that demolishes the Constitution I swore to protect. I am asked to vote for a measure that would deprive the people who voted for me of the representation which I promised to give them. I refuse to do that. Our duty, as I see it, is to the people and the Nation. How can we serve either of them by supinely abandoning the only instrument that today stands between them and the dictatorship of a little group of department heads?

I ask those who are defending this measure to remember that it is a betrayal of the unemployed, of the deserving laboring people, of the veteran and the others who really deserve help from the Government. Amend the bill—even raise the four billions to five for the needy and unemployed—and I will support it. But let us stop throwing away the people's rights under the Constitution. Let us stop thinking about the next election when we should be thinking about the next generation.

Apart from all other considerations, the important issue in this bill is the demand made upon the Congress to betray the plain people of the country by the setting aside of the American Constitution. The Constitution is the supreme law of the land. It states that all legislative powers granted are to be vested in the Congress, which shall have the power, among others, to provide for the general welfare and to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying such power into execution. It further provides that the judicial power shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. Now, the present resolution not only casts away this legislative power heretofore jealously guarded for the people by the Congress, but in section 6 it calls for the surrender by the Congress of its legislative power and at the same time provides new and drastic penalties for any violation of the latest departmental rules and regulations. Surely no one in this House can properly defend a bill which so far destroys the constitutional rights of our citizens that they must now face the danger of new laws made by Executive and departmental decree, and new jail sentences to be imposed whenever some bureau head or other decides that a citizen has violated one of the novel regulations.

The bill speaks, in line 3 of page 1, of the general welfare. We hear much of that in these days. But the Constitution uses the words in just two places. Once in the preamble, which was never intended to contain any grant of power, but merely to assert the great object which the people aim to secure, and again when the instrument mentions the taxing powers. This clause was never intended to contain a grant of authority to tax in order to promote the general welfare of any single individual in the country. The phrase " general welfare of the United States " refers to the United States as a political entity or corporation and not to the individuals who constitute it. To presume that this clause of the Constitution means that taxes are to be raised for the general welfare of any single individual or group is false and misleading, and the words, not having any such meaning in the Constitution itself, should never have been inserted in this resolution. There are today large establishments of the Government using tremendous sums of public money which rest only upon the fragile foundation of this mistaken notion as to the meaning of " general welfare " in the Constitution.

It is about time, gentlemen, that the Congress began to exercise the powers delegated to it by the Constitution. It is only by amending this measure that you can save the American people from the humiliation of an abject surrender by their Congress of the power which the people have delegated to their Representatives in trust, as it were, for themselves. The Republicans in this House have no opposition to the granting of $4,000,000,000 for proper relief purposes. They would willingly give more than that, if necessary, to assist the unemployed, the homeless, the disabled and deserving veterans, the aged, and the needy. But all Republicans stand, as all Democrats should, against that sort of government which timidly throws up its hands in despair, cowardly abandons the American people, surrenders its constitutional powers, and leaves the country without adequate safeguards against bureaucracy and usurpation.

The founders of our Government, from long acquaintance with tyranny, realized that the problem of escaping it and of preserving liberty could be solved only by placing and maintaining limits upon governmental power. So, for the first time in history, they drew up a written constitution of government, containing a body of limited, definite, enumerated delegations of power, solemnly reserving to themselves all powers not enumerated in that instrument. It was hoped thus to protect for all time the person of the citizen against the innate inclination of government to despoil him. One of the essential features of the Constitution is the clear separation of the powers of government into three coequal branches. It is fundamental that no branch shall usurp the powers of the others. To combine them or any two of them was declared by both James Madison and Alexander Hamilton to be despotism.

It is about time that the Congress, as the representatives of the ordinary people, put a stop to the procedure of delegating to new departments and agencies not only its law-making power but even the judicial, so that these bureaus may make and execute their own laws, change them overnight so that no lawyer can locate or find them in any digest, and then send to the penitentiary as criminals American citizens who have been guilty of no greater crime than a refusal to abide by one of the thousands of these bureau-made sumptuary regulations.

No depression or so-called " emergency " can justify such oppression of the citizenry. As Mr. Justice Davis said in the famous Civil War case of Ex parte Milligan:

> The Constitution of the United States is a law for rulers and for the people, equally in war and in peace, and covers with the shield of its protection all classes of men at all times and under all circumstances. No doctrine involving more pernicious consequences was ever invented by the wit of man than that any of its provisions can be suspended during any of the great exigencies of government.

Let us go back to orderly constitutional government. Give us the kind of government in which men not only have the right to be heard through their representatives when laws are passed, but to read upon the statute books today, without fear of sudden and momentary change, the rules of conduct they will be called upon to follow tomorrow.

Let us have the courage to protect the ordinary people against the bureaus that today dictate how they must live. " Millions for defense; not one cent for tribute." Billions for the unemployed; yes; but not one iota of surrender of the people's rights under the Constitution. We must protect the unemployed and the hungry against further departmental usurpation. There is only one sure method to assist the needy and to safeguard the people in their constitutional rights. Vote for such an amendment as will give even five billions for relief and at the same time prevent further tampering with our traditional institutions of government. We are sworn to defend the Constitution. I shall therefore vote for the resolution, if so amended. If it be not thus amended, I cannot vote for it and thus betray the people I have been elected to serve. I am interested in the people of a great city area who need work and relief. I cannot conscientiously vote for a measure which gives any individual or agency the unrestricted power to give four billions of the people's money to some rural section of the South or West while the people who carry a great part of the burdens of government are left to starve in the great cities of the land. The plain, ordinary people, who never have their voices heard but who love America and her Constitution as much as we do, today call to us to protect them against further abandonment of the traditional Americanism that made our country great and beloved in the family of nations. Let us beware that we do not betray them. [Applause.]

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I apologize to no man for the position that I take on this bill; neither do I bend my head to any man in the sincere, honest, workable method of putting men back to work and relieving distress; but when we look at this bill and strip it of its window dressing and its decoys, we are confronted with a proposition which, if supported, stultifies the judgment of any fair-minded, right-thinking Member of this House.

I was not sent here by my constituents to delegate the constitutional authority vested in this House to any single individual or any set of individuals, and I do not propose to start my congressional career on this day by doing so.

There has been much said about this bill concerning the $880,000,000 which is to be used for relief; and yet, as I analyze it, not one word is contained concerning relief for that amount of money.

An analysis of this bill clearly establishes that this is an out-and-out grant of $4,880,000,000 to one individual, to do with as he sees fit, in the way in which he prescribes, and under rules and regulations which he formulates or those to whom he may delegate this authority. This, Mr. Chairman, is in the teeth of the decision of the Supreme Court in the recent oil case, which has already been referred to here.

There is one other reason why I am opposed to this measure, and I call the attention of the House to the statement made by the President of the United States to the joint Congress on January 4, wherein he said, in reference to putting men back to work:

> Preference shall be given to those projects which will be self-liquidating in the sense there is reasonable expectation that the Government will get its money back at some future time.

If I understand the English language, this means nothing more or less than the Government going into private business and in competition with industry. I think this is un-American, not based upon American principles, and, for one, I shall ever oppose it. It is generally conceded that the existing Public Works Administration has not achieved the results claimed for it, and neither will the operation of the powers granted under this joint resolution produce the results its advocates claim.

The only argument advanced for the absence of a plan by the proponents of the resolution is that there has not been time to prepare one. Why, then, this extreme haste? In the absence of a plan, how can labor be put to work?

Let a sincere, honest, and practical plan be submitted to this House and I will support it. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON].

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, those of my colleagues who served in the Seventy-third Congress will, I am sure, concede that I never made it a practice to oppose for any factious or partisan reason measures proposed by the majority. Unless deterred by a sense of duty, I should vote for this bill. Because of some definite objections which I shall set forth, I cannot do so unless it is so amended as to make it a substantially different measure.

This bill goes entirely too far. It empowers the President, without further authority from Congress, to abolish any governmental agency or to extend its life beyond the time fixed by law for its termination, to lend the Government's funds or credit without limitation, to take from a citizen even his personal property under the right of eminent domain, to sell the Government's property, either real or personal, to issue regulations the violation of which shall subject a person to imprisonment for up to 2 years or a fine of up to $5,000, and to delegate any of these powers to any department of the Government. Under the terms of this measure the President, or any official designated by him, could continue the life of N. R. A. beyond June 30 and abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, or the Tariff Commission, or consolidate them with each other or any other governmental agency. Some one has said, perhaps facetiously, that he could even sell the Capitol and transfer the seat of government to Reedsville, W. Va., where it appropriately belongs, the Government having become the most important of all subsistence projects.

Personally I am sure the President does not want these extraordinary powers, for they are the powers of a dictator, not those of the head of a democratic government. They are being wished on him by legislative draftsmen who have not learned to use language carefully; and I should do the Chief Executive a disservice, if I did not raise my voice in caution against an indiscretion which might cause the administration great embarrassment.

If I had no other reason for opposing the passage of this bill, I should do so because, although ostensibly a relief measure, it does not make definite provision for direct relief. Not a dollar is earmarked for the support of those not fortunate enough to share in the employment opportunities furnished by Federal building projects. My apprehension for those luckless people is, I believe, justified by the fact that it is the expressed purpose of the administration to shift responsibility for those who cannot be accommodated with jobs back to the States and their municipal subdivisions. That purpose was clearly indicated this afternoon in the remarks of the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee, and the chairman was but echoing the statement made by the President when in his annual message he declared:

> The Federal Government must and shall quit the business of relief. * * * Local responsibility can and will be resumed, for, after all, common sense tells us that the wealth necessary for this task existed and still exists in the local community.

Read in connection with that announcement of policy, the purpose of the present measure becomes apparent. It is the intention of the administration to use the money appropriated in this measure for public works and to refuse to accept any further direct responsibility for those who are not lucky enough to get jobs. If I should vote for this measure, I should give sanction to that policy. I should sentence to unspeakable and intolerable privation tens of thousands of my constituents, scores of thousands of citizens of my State, for whom it is my duty to speak.

For I must remind you that in the Middle West, where the depression began, not in 1929, but in 1920 when Woodrow Wilson was President, and where the general distress was aggravated by the most destructive drought in the history of the country, many States, counties, and cities are without means to take over the responsibility which the Federal Government now seeks to shift. There are $75,000,000 of delinquent taxes in my State alone; and, in many counties, levying higher taxes will not yield more revenue. Numerous municipalities, and even some counties, have exhausted their credit and cannot borrow. If the Federal Government withdraws from the field of direct relief, I shudder when I think of what will happen to the unemployed in the Northwest during the next 2 years.

We have assurance from one Democratic member of the Appropriations Committee that the $880,000,000 of the pending $4,880,000,000 authorization which is appropriated from unexpended balances, will be used for direct relief. I wish he would give substance to his assurance by placing a specific proviso in the bill. If that is the intention of the majority, why not say so in the only place the assurance will have legal effect—in the bill itself?

But even if the $880,000,000 were definitely allocated, it would afford only a 6 months' respite, if the present need should continue unabated. How will the unemployed provide themselves with food, clothes, fuel, and shelter after the 6 months have expired?

The proponents of this bill have, I acknowledge, an answer. They say that the $4,000,000,000 provided for public works will give jobs to 3,500,000 men and that it will no longer be necessary to give direct relief to anybody willing and able to work. What optimism, what simple faith in the power of government to perform miracles.

Let us look at the record, as one prominent Democrat is wont to say. Two years ago we were assured that if we would but appropriate $3,300,000,000 for public works, the specter of unemployment would no longer haunt us. Supplemented by N. R. A. and a few other alphabetical expedients, P. W. A. would give every man a job and restore prosperity. Despite that assurance, given undoubtedly with the utmost sincerity, there were, according to the American Federation of Labor, 850,000 more jobless men in the United States on September 1, 1934, than on the corresponding date in 1933. On November 1, 1934, after plenty of blueprints had been drawn and enough projects given the official approval of Secretary Ickes to afford P. W. A. the utmost job-dispensing potency, there were, according to the Department of Labor, only 475,000 men employed on public projects, despite the fact that $2,000,000,000 was spent during the year.

Let me ask our Democratic associates, in all sincerity, not to embarrass them or to suggest even the slightest shortcoming in their administration of P. W. A., but to get them to do some straight thinking on the unemployment problem—which is their major responsibility—if an expenditure of $2,000,000,000 put only 475,000 men to work in 1934, what leads them to believe that spending $4,000,000,000 during the next 2 years—$2,000,000,000 in 1936 and a like amount in 1937, will make possible the reemployment of 3,500,000 men.

The experience with public works as a pump-priming device has failed in this and other countries. Great Britain tried it and gave it up. Germany toyed with the same idea for a while and charged the cost up to experience. Evidently the United States is the one country that refuses to learn from its past failures. If we persist in our folly, we shall wreck the country instead of saving it.

Experience has shown that it costs approximately $4,000 to keep one man employed a year. If we should try to give each of the 10,000,000 unemployed a job—and there is no reason why we should discriminate against any—the annual cost would be $40,000,000,000—one-fifth of the present value of all the physical wealth in America. In 5 years the Nation's resources, private as well as public, would be completely exhausted. Such a cure is worse than the disease. Its folly is comparable to that of advising a hungry man to appease his hunger by dismembering and eating his own body.

Happily it is not necessary to ask America ultimately to destroy itself in order to prolong life for a few years. There is a better way. Primarily our present trouble is due to a debt burden which was the aftermath of war and post-war inflation. In that respect the present depression follows the pattern of 1837, 1857, 1873, and 1893. When price levels advance, speculation inevitably follows, and men go into debt. When the bubble bursts, prices and incomes fall sharply, but debts remain stationary, with the result that the net incomes of debtors shrink to almost nothing and the incomes of creditors increase in terms of buying power. In 1929 the income of the American people was $85,000,000,000, of which $10,000,000,000 had to be paid out as interest on $200,000,000,000 in indebtedness. By 1933 the total income had shrunk to $39,000,000,000, but interest still exacted its $10,000,000,000, for rates had remained stationary.

After the people had met their interest charges in 1929 they had $75,000,000,000 left with which to buy the products of the farms and factories. After they had met the debt charges in 1933 they had but $29,000,000,000 left. It is impossible to reduce the buying power of the debt-owing majority of the American people two-thirds in 4 years without paying the penalty of unemployment. To me it is not strange, in view of this terrific dislocation, that there are 10,000,000 people out of work. It is strange that a single wheel is turning and that the economic machine has not stopped entirely.

So I say to you members of the majority that if our present trouble is due to debts, you are engaged in a hopeless task when you try to get us out of trouble by putting the country deeper into debt. If you should force an average reduction of 50 percent in interest rates and make the creditor bear his fair share of the cost of the depression, you would leave $5,000,000,000 more buying power in the hands of the debt-ridden masses—two and one-half times as much each year as you will give them even if you succeed in the impossible task of putting 100 cents into the wage worker's pocket for every P. W. A. dollar spent. That would stimulate recovery, and would do it without leaving posterity the legacy of a bankrupt country.

I have little faith in the expedient of equalizing wealth by taxing the people. Excessive taxation does, it is true, make the rich poorer, but it makes the poor poorer too. I would rather bring about that fairer distribution of income which all forward-looking men desire by removing the special advantages that enable some men to get more than their share of the common income. The one privilege which, more than any other, results in disparity is that of collecting 6-percent interest on a 3-percent investment. We can stop it, not by adopting any fantastic monetary or banking devices, but by following the examples of Great Britain and Australia, where interest rates have been lowered by resort to methods that are tried and sound and where, without any of the bootstrap-lifting expedients of N. R. A. and P. W. A., real progress has been made on the road to recovery

Our Democratic colleagues show remarkable clarity of judgment at times, when they speak off the record. One of them said to me the other day, "You cannot get water by priming a pump in a dry well." The wisdom of that remark I commend to your thoughtful consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, after listening to the impassioned oratory and idealism that we have heard this afternoon, I am going to content myself with realities, because my boss lives away out 900 miles from here and consists of all of the people in six counties in the Sixteenth Congressional District of Illinois. I am concerned with what they think about this bill and nobody else, because they are the only folks to whom I am accountable for my actions and for my vote. I just looked outdoors and I see 6 inches of snow on the ground. I went in and looked at the weather map and find that it is 30° below zero at St. Paul, 10° below zero at Milwaukee, and it is even freezing down in TOM BLANTON'S country around Abilene, Tex.; and if they had this $4,000,000,000 right now, they could not use it particularly because of the state of the weather that prevails all over the country. Secondly, I am not interested in any pork barrel. Even if I had a taste for pork, you folks on the majority side would not let me have any anyway, so I am not concerned about that. Third, I am not concerned about the political implications in this bill. If President Roosevelt's economic theories and conceptions are correct, he would doubtless be elected and reelected in 1936 in spite of anything that we could do. On the other hand, if his theories are wrong, if you had $4,000,000,000 or 10 times $4,000,000,000, you would never reelect him to office. So I am not concerned about the political implications that may be written into this bill.

Here is what concerns me: First of all, I am going to have to go back to Illinois and answer to those people on the basis of equity and fairness. Under the relief program for the first 9 months of 1934, Florida got 99 percent of all her relief expenditures out of the Federal till. Mississippi got 99 percent, and we got 57 percent in Illinois. If you are going to scrape the bottom of the Federal till for your States, why not give us an opportunity to do the same thing. Yet there is no safeguard or assurance in this bill that we are going to receive fair and equitable treatment from Uncle Sam when it comes to relief and relief work.

This great disparity in sharing in the largesse of the Federal Government is true in many other States. New Mexico, for instance, received 99 percent of her relief expenditures from Uncle Sam, Louisiana received 98 percent, and Tennessee 98 percent. On the other hand, standing alongside Illinois is New York, which received but 54 percent, and Iowa, which received but 51 percent. Nine States, mostly from the North, received around 55 percent, whereas 16 States, many of which are in the extreme South, received well over 90 percent of all their relief funds from the Federal Treasury.

Now, whatever is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. I maintain that in my State the proportion of our population that is either on relief or unemployed is just as large as in other States. They get just as hungry. They have the same requirements of fuel and clothing and necessities, and it is high time that these donations from the Public Treasury, whether it be direct relief or expenditures for relief projects, be made equitably and on the basis of the ratio which the unemployed and needy in Illinois bear to the whole number of such folks in this entire Nation.

I hope no one will come into the Well of this House again this afternoon or at any other time and say that the Republican Party is opposed to a public-works program for relief. First of all, you insult the Members on the Republican side, and you never heard anybody on that side say it. We are for a work-relief program just as you are, and in the interest of truth, candor, and accuracy you have not any right to come into this Well and make a charge of that kind.

I am willing to go as far as the most liberal Democrat in this House in providing relief of all kinds, and particularly work-relief projects such as contemplated in this bill, and if the present amount is inadequate, I am in favor of providing more. It is not a case of the amount involved; it is not a difference of opinion as to how best to lift people out of their distress. There seems to be a singular unanimity of opinion among Democrats and Republicans alike that projects must be found to give employment. The question involved here is the ruthless way you seek to go about it. Not a single soul has been persuasive or convincing that this need be hurried. Mr. Hopkins still has some relief money. Secondly, the money appropriated in this bill will not be available until June 30 of this year. You have no well-defined program for the expenditure of this money. You completely nullify the provisions of the Civil Service Act and the Classification Act and set in motion thereby a tremendous force for the destruction of civil-service principles and substitute inefficiency.

Then you hand over to the Chief Executive a broad delegation of authority, under which he can abolish, revise, alter, consolidate the functions of the various agencies of government. By the terms of section 4 he could by proclamation continue the N. R. A. in effect until the middle of 1937, even though both labor and capital have repeatedly expressed themselves in favor of changes and alterations so as to make the N. R. A. more effective.

If this resolution is passed and the House completes the regular appropriation bills and the security measure, it might just as well adjourn, so far as its effectiveness is concerned. In fact, one might almost perceive in this measure an attempt to hasten adjournment and thereby defeat possible action on the bonus and some other important legislation.

Just bear in mind, gentlemen and ladies of the House, that you are accountable to the folks back home. You will be accountable to labor, to the farmer, to the business men, and to the unemployed back home.

When I return home and make a report to labor and laboring men in my district, what shall I say to them? Shall I say that I voted for a bill which was to provide for them the munificent sum of $50 per month, according to the testimony of Admiral Peoples himself? Shall I say to them that I voted for a bill to take them off the dole and give them starvation wages as a kind of subsidy on the theory that to hold the wage level so low it will retain their incentive to go back into private industry. The theory is all right, but is there anyone who will contend that $12.50 is a living wage? Will anybody contend that an American family can live in decency and respect on $12.50 per week. You know very well how it will work. A man procures a job on one of these projects. He is removed from the relief rolls. Even though the $12.50 is wholly inadequate to his needs, he will not receive any aid from relief sources. They will complacently say that he now has a job and should be able to get along. If he quits because it is inadequate pay, they will say he is lazy. I am not willing to vote for any measure which under the pretext of saving the fiber of our people from disintegration places them on a starvation wage. Fine phrases do not fill empty bellies.

Moreover, this $50 wage level may work two ways: Instead of being an incentive to pull men back into industry it may also provide an excuse for pulling present wage levels down, and anyone knows that they are low enough now. I cannot see the workingmen in my district, and to whom I am accountable, take that chance; and I cannot endorse a measure which makes a diminution of wages possible.

I shall have to report to the farmers in my district, and what kind of a report shall I make? You will recall that the American Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange both passed resolutions condemning the expenditure of more public money for reclamation projects while the A. A. A. is still in operation and reducing some of the very best acreage and taking it out of production for the next crop year. Last year, as you remember, when the Interior appropriation bill came before this body, we specifically wrote into it a clause to the effect that no portion of the funds therein should be used to reclaim additional land. It would be the height of folly and inconsistency to do so. Now, if present reports are accurate, it was indicated that one of the reasons for the disagreement on this rule in Rules Committee was because it did not specifically provide for additional reclamation and irrigation projects in the West. Pass this resolution, and you know very well that some of this money will be used for that purpose, and will not provide much employment, either.

Shall we now permit millions of this money to be spent to expand our agricultural domain while we still pay wheat, tobacco, cotton, and corn farmers cash benefits to curtail production and reduce acreage? I promised the farmers in my district that I would never vote to spend a single dollar to add more land so long as many of their fine, fertile acres lie idle.

We can have a relief measure brought in here that can be passed in ample time to start the works program; we can bring in a bill that is free from so many objectionable features. We can bring in a bill that will be agreeable to most of the Members of this House and do it within a week. We can have a bill that is free from the "pork barrel" taint. Then why not do it?

I am not unmindful of the important aspects of the doubtful constitutionality of this measure; nor am I unmindful of the fact that Congress in this measure abdicates its rights and powers. But of equal importance is the stern fact that you must ultimately report to the folks back home and not to the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue.

Stop for a moment and ponder on what so far-reaching a measure as this may do to the laboring man, the farmer, the business man, and the unemployed folks back home, and let that be your guide when you are recorded on this measure. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOLTON].

Mr. BOLTON. Mr. Chairman, in the short time allotted to me I want to again emphasize what to me is the basic and most serious fundamental change contemplated in the proposed legislation, namely, that of Congress surrendering its duty and power of definitely appropriating the taxpayers' money.

Under the Constitution Congress is charged with levying and collecting taxes to pay the debts and provide for the general welfare of the United States. This is the function as laid down by basic law, and has always been adhered to until the present administration came into power. Congress has never surrendered its prerogatives heretofore, even in times of war and of great distress.

With little opportunity for amendment or debate, the House is today asked to pass an appropriation of nearly $5,000,000,000 and place the sum at the disposal of the Chief Executive to do with as he sees fit during a period running beyond his present term of office and during which there will be two subsequent sessions of Congress, the only limitation being that it is to be spent for the general welfare of the country. In so doing, Congress surrenders all right it may have to designate the use and purpose to which this immense fund should be applied, a responsibility which it should be better able to discharge and with which it should, as a body, be more familiar than any one individual could be.

The people of the country elected their Representatives to act for them in matters of this sort. They did not expect them to delegate their constitutional duties to the Chief Executive, to be in turn assigned to subordinates and appointive officers, in the selection of which the people have had no choice whatever and who are not in any sense representative of the people.

My opinion is confirmed by the words of Mr. Justice Story, formerly a member of the Supreme Court, who, in volume III of his Commentaries on the Constitution, wrote:

> As all the taxes raised from the people, as well as the revenue arising from other sources, are to be applied to the discharge of the expenses and debts and other engagements of the Government, it is highly proper that Congress should possess the power to decide how and when any money should be applied for these purposes. If it were otherwise, the Executive would possess an unbounded power over the public purse of the Nation and might apply all its moneyed resources at his pleasure. The power to control and direct the appropriations constitutes a most useful and salutary check upon profusion and extravagance as well as upon corrupt influence and public peculation. In arbitrary governments the prince levies what money he pleases from his subjects, disposes of it as he thinks proper, and is beyond responsibility or reproof. It is wise to interpose, in a republic, every restraint by which the public treasure, the common fund of all, should be applied with unshrinking honesty to such objects as legitimately belong to the common defense and the general welfare. Congress is made the guardian of this treasure; and to make their responsibility complete and perfect, a regular account of the receipts and expenditures is required to be published, that the people may know what money is expended, for what purposes, and by what authority.

There can be no doubt as to the opinion of that able justice on the duties of Congress with regard to the appropriation of public moneys.

Every single one of us is interested in relieving conditions surrounding those in distress, and this necessity must be met. But I am not unmindful of the fact that I represent the populace of a district and a State paying a large proportion of the taxes of this country. It is my duty to assume the responsibility placed upon me and not delegate it to the executive branch of our Government.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to my colleague on the committee, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], I am not very much concerned about the political implications of this bill. As he said, if the President's program is successful, he will be triumphantly reelected and the Democratic Party will remain in power. If it is a failure, we are the ones who are taking the political responsibility for it. There is no other program for us. Neither the Republican Party nor anyone else has any program. The President has evolved this program, and I feel we are not only justified but also obligated to the American people to carry it out. There is, practically speaking, not a single power granted in any of the provisions of this bill which has not been granted heretofore, and many of them are on the statute books at the present time. But I am not going to discuss the bill.

There is one angle of the matter to which I want to refer. The distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the ranking minority member and my colleague on the Appropriations Committee, in his speech a few moments ago said "this law would be administered by incompetent substitutes, such as Ickes and Hopkins." I hold no brief for either Secretary Ickes or Mr. Harry Hopkins. They are abundantly able to take care of themselves, and their public records speak for them. But I have been closely associated with all of the Secretaries of the Interior for the past 40 years.

For many years, as you all know, as a member and in recent years as the chairman of the Interior Department appropriations subcommittee, I have had a great deal to do with appropriation of the funds that have gone to that great Department. I have, necessarily, every year made an intensive study and investigation of all its thousands of activities, extending from the Arctic Circle to the Equator. Our country has been very fortunate in having some really great men in that office, and two of them came from Colorado. The West has always been especially proud of Henry M. Teller. Among all those Secretaries we have never had one who has been more courageous, more honest, or more efficient than the one we have at the present time. [Applause.] I feel that we western Members cannot, in fairness to an exceptionally able and conscientious public official, sit on the floor of this House and listen to aspersions cast against our Secretary of the Interior without expressing our protest and condemnation. He has made enemies and millions of our people admire him for the enemies he has made. He has made those enemies; he kicked the lobbyists, crooked contractors, and grafters out of the Interior Department Building, because he had the honesty, the courage, nerve, backbone, and patriotism to stand up against the combined power interests of the United States; to defy the "hot oil" combinations of the United States, to protect the Indians of the United States, to stop the looting of the public domain of the United States, and to protect Uncle Sam's property. [Applause.]

In all of the $2,000,000,000 that he has expended during the past 2 years, no one can point a finger to a single dollar that has been misapplied as far as he is concerned. He has a clean record and the effort to besmirch it is an outrage. I feel that we from the West owe him and owe this administration a statement of our confidence in the Secretary of the Interior in administering those activities.

I have heard the statement made that one reason certain factions seek to block this bill that the President so earnestly requests is that of fear that the Secretary of the Interior may be charged with the duty of administering some of the funds.

I have no fear of Secretary Ickes being called upon to administer portions of this fund. So far as the West is concerned, I hope he will be charged with that duty. If he is, the funds will be honestly, courageously, and intelligently handled.

His is a job which, if honestly and efficiently carried out, inevitably causes antagonism. No human being could faithfully perform all his duties without making enemies.

Never before in the history of our Government have such gigantic tasks and overwhelming responsibilities been imposed upon any Secretary of the Interior, and never before has a Secretary discharged them with so much credit. As Federal Administrator of Public Works, Administrator of the Petroleum Code, in addition to his countless tasks as Secretary, he has a thousand seductive opportunities to betray his oath of office to curry favor with many. No one can or dare say he has ever betrayed his oath. It seems to me that much of this criticism of Secretary Ickes is a subterfuge for trying to handicap the President's recovery program by discrediting this worthy and efficient Cabinet officer. There is no official in the Government service that works longer hours day and night than he does.

As Public Works Administrator he has hewed to the line, and the land speculators, skimping contractors, and their kith and kin have been stopped. Where, before in our history, can we find such a vast sum of money as this Public Works Administrator has distributed, handled without a breath of suspicion, scandal, or graft? Nowhere. It is an enviable record. Those crooks did not get theirs and they are out for revenge. I will not fight their battles. I say, "More power to the Secretary of the Interior."

The Public Works Administrator has not hesitated to supply funds to municipalities desiring to build and own their power plants and free themselves from the yoke of the Power Trust, which has long extorted exorbitant rates from them. Dozens of such allotments have been made by the Public Works Administrator, and every one was a thorn in the side of the Power Trust. Great Federal power projects have been financed by the Public Works Administrator, carrying out the President's policy of providing wide distribution of cheaper electrical power to the profit of the country. The power interests dare not attack the President openly, for they read the election returns, so they attack his Public Works Administrator, and he receives their blows without a cry for mercy or a move to dodge.

There is another group who would harass and curb him. That greedy group consists of those who look with longing eyes at the wealth and domain of the Indians, for he is protector of the remnants of these original Americans and fulfills this task well. He could dissipate the Indian wealth and he would have many friends, but he prefers to be true to his trust and now we see the result.

There is another group who are enemies of this public servant, and in this I "know whereof I speak." Those who are willing to despoil the public domain for their own gain have been curbed by his fearless administration of the public domain. At the last session of Congress, I had the honor of bringing forth upon this floor a measure now known as the "Taylor Grazing Act", designed to protect this domain. It was passed by the House and by the Senate and became the law of the land on the 28th of last June and the duty of adminstering the act was entrusted to the Secretary of the Interior. I have followed its administration closely since that time and I am proud of the way the act that bears my name has been administered and well do I know the enemies that such honest administration has aroused.

We hear cries of those who are curbed that the Public Works fund has not been distributed rapidly enough; that too many safeguards and checks have been put upon it. Since when has it been against the public interest to put safeguards and checks on the expenditure of public money? Who is it that feels that such safeguards are improper and who is it that does not wish a full accounting made of public funds? But despite all this sharpshooting and these fraudulent accusations, the record of the Public Works Administrator is an excellent one. When this Administrator took up his task, it was a new duty, without precedent, without organization, without policy—all of these he has developed. Let those who have challenges be specific and look at the record P. W. A. has built.

At the beginning of this year, expenditures on all phases of the Public Works program exceeded $2,000,000,000. Does any one think that that record is not one of sufficient speed in such a mighty task?

At the beginning of the year, 9,100 projects had been completed, 7,600 were under construction, and 2,800 others had been set up and received allotments so that construction could commence promptly. P. W. A. signs dot the map of our entire country and every one is a hallmark of merit, and behind each sign is a useful public work, honestly and conscientiously built. I predict that the future history of our country will honor the Secretary as one of the greatest constructive conservationists our Nation has ever produced.

Some 2,000,000 persons have received gainful employment directly attributable to P. W. A. With their dependents, this means some 7,000,000 persons are kept from the relief rolls by the Public Works program.

Now our President, who has examined this effort and judged it, deems it wise that we enlarge it. Who is it that wishes to check his hand by attempting to prescribe, in an arbitrary manner, how and what he shall do and which public servant or agency he shall call to his assistance. I disclaim any such desire or intent. What the President seeks I appeal to my colleagues to give to him.

The great mass of the people of the West appreciate this Herculean work and are duly grateful to Secretary Ickes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to my colleague on the committee, Mr. BLANTON.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, our new evangel from Galena, the Republican pinch-hitter for McGugin, is very, very apprehensive about a possible dictator. I used to travel through the Galena country straddling the line between Missouri and Kansas, and on the right I would see mountains of lava and on the left more mountains of lava, and never until today did I know what caused all that eruption. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SHORT rose.

Mr. BLANTON. Directly I will yield. All of the dictators with whom our friends across the aisle have been intimately familiar, have been financial dictators, who selfishly ran the affairs of this Government in the interest of the few as against the welfare of the many. The few were enriched and became richer. The many were impoverished and became poorer. It has been the financial dictators of America, who have invested their swollen fortunes in tax-exempt bonds, and paid little of the expenses of this Government, who have almost brought ruin upon us. I wish that it were possible for us to make all bonds and income from all securities taxable.

Let me say to our eloquent exhorter from Galena that Webster defines a dictator as one who has absolute authority. His will is supreme. He is all powerful. His word is law. He is the law. He controls the courts. He uses his power as he wills. He is beyond the reach of legislative control. He makes all laws.

Has this Congress abdicated? Why, no; we are legislating now. Have courts been abolished? Why, no; they are functioning now. The decree of the Supreme Court of the United States is the law of the land. It has to be obeyed. There is no executive power that can persuade it.

If the people of the United States did not have absolute confidence in and respect for the President of the United States they would not be so unanimously in favor of our backing and supporting him. If we did not have absolute confidence in and respect for the President we would not be passing this measure of stupendous magnitude and importance.

We have no Caesar in the White House. We have no Sulla there. We have no Louis XIV giving us commands. We have no Hitler or Mussolini there at the other end of the Avenue. We have no man there who has assumed the powers and the prerogatives of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is still functioning; it still has its powers. We have no man there who has the "all say."

We have a man there who is using faithfully in behalf of all the people of the United States the powers this Congress has delegated to him. Why, our friend is used to the kind of dictator who would use the power selfishly in behalf of the few against the many. I will say to our friend from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] who gives us great preachments, that this particular man we have in the White House has tugging continually at his heartstrings all of the many calls of humanity from one side of the land to the other, even up in cold Minnesota where lives our distinguished friend, Governor CHRISTIANSON, whose people are now out of jobs and who are to be helped by this bill. He is using just what powers we have given him. Suppose he were to attempt to misuse those powers, suppose he were to attempt to misapply them, suppose he were to attempt to benefit the few as against the many. We would stop him in a minute; we would take the power away from him in the twinkling of an eye. But we have all confidence in him, I may say to my friend from Galena.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. SHORT. It has been my privilege since the war to have seen and heard Mussolini, Stalin, Hitler, and Horthy, but not a single dictator in all Europe has the power with the money back of him that the present occupant of the White House has.

Mr. BLANTON. No; they have not, because our President has the power to do good. He has the power to relieve suffering. He has the power to restore self-respect, self-reliance, initiative, and self-support in the breasts of American manhood. He has power, but is not abusing it. We have no alarm about dictators because we have no fear of anything of that kind. All of us have confidence in our leader. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD tonight, for the information of the Members, the amendments to this bill that will be offered by authority of the Committee on Appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The amendments referred to follow:

Committee amendments to be offered by Mr. BUCHANAN:

Page 1, line 11, strike out the signs and letters "(in-", and strike out all of line 12, and on page 2, strike out all of lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, and all of line 5, down to and including the word "work)", and insert in lieu thereof the following: ", Federal or non-Federal."

On page 5, line 18, after the word "any", insert the word "emergency", and in line 21, after the word "exist;", insert "and."

Page 6, line 11, strike out the words "he may also" and insert in lieu thereof the word "to"; in line 12, strike out the words "or personal"; in line 15, strike out the colon, and strike out all of lines 16 to 20, inclusive, except the period.

Page 6, line 23, before the word "violation", insert the word "willful", and after the sum "$5,000" insert a period and strike out all of line 25.

Page 7, transfer the words and figures "before the 10th day of January", in lines 3 and 4, to follow the word "submitted" in line 2.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'CONNOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 117, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WHITE (at the request of Mr. CLARK), on account of serious illness.

To Mr. SOMERS of New York, indefinitely, on account of illness.

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object simply that I may ask a question—I shall not object—I wish to know at this time if the Membership of the Committee of the Whole may have the assurance from those in charge of the majority that when our patience grows a little thin and is being taxed by amendments we will not receive the treatment that so often is accorded, but that instead upon all amendments there may be a short debate at least.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, and speaking for the Committee on Appropriations, I want to be just as liberal on amendments under the 5-minute rule as I possibly can be, just so we finish the bill tomorrow.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, are we going to use the entire day tomorrow for the consideration of this bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think so.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that we hope to finish the bill tomorrow and we may take up the Post Office and Treasury appropriation bill Friday, and I hope to adjourn over Saturday.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We have got to finish the bill tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

NATIONAL RESOURCES (H. DOC. NO. 84)

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

During the three or four centuries of white men on the American Continent we find a continuous striving of civilization against nature. It is only in recent years that we have learned how greatly by these processes we have harmed Nature, and Nature in turn has harmed us.

We should not too largely blame our ancestors, for they found such teeming riches in woods and soil and water—such abundance above the earth and beneath it—such freedom in the taking that they gave small heed to the results that would follow the filling of their own immediate needs. Most of them, it is true, had come from many-peopled lands where necessity had invoked the preserving of the bounties of nature. But they had come here for the obtaining of a greater freedom, and it was natural that freedom of conscience and freedom of government should extend itself in their minds to the unrestricted enjoyment of the free use of land and water.

Furthermore, it is only within our own generation that the development of science, leaping forward, has taught us where and how we violated Nature's immutable laws and where and how we can commence to repair such havoc as man has wrought.

In recent years little groups of earnest men and women have told us of this havoc, of the cutting of our last stands of virgin timber, of the increasing floods, of the washing away of millions of acres of our topsoils, of the lowering of our water tables, of the dangers of one-crop farming, of the depletion of our minerals—in short, the evils that we have brought upon ourselves today, and the even greater evils that will attend our children unless we act.

Such is the condition that attends the exploitation of our natural resources if we continue our planless course.

But another element enters in. Men and Nature must work hand in hand. The throwing out of balance of the resources of Nature throws out of balance also the lives of men. We find millions of our citizens stranded in village and on farm—stranded there because Nature cannot support them in the livelihood they had sought to gain through her. We find other millions gravitated to centers of population so vast that the laws of natural economics have broken down.

If the misuse of natural resources alone were concerned, we should consider our problem only in terms of land and water. It is because misuse extends to what men and women are doing with their occupations and to their many mistakes in herding themselves together that I have chosen, in addressing the Congress, to use the broader term "national resources."

For the first time in our national history we have made an inventory of our national assets and the problems relating to them. For the first time we have drawn together the foresight of the various planning agencies of the Federal Government and suggested a method and a policy for the future.

I am sending you herewith the report of the National Resources Board, appointed by me on June 30, 1934, to prepare the comprehensive survey which so many of us have sought so long. I transmit also the report made by the Mississippi Valley Committee of the Public Works Administration, which committee has also acted as the water-planning committee in the larger report.

These documents constitute a remarkable foundation for what we hope will be a permanent policy of orderly development in every part of the United States. It is a large subject, but it is a great and inspiring subject. May I commend to each and every one of you who constitute the Congress of the United States a careful reading of these reports.

In this inventory of our national wealth we follow the custom of prudent people toward their own private property. We as a nation take stock of what we as a nation own. We consider the uses to which it can be put. We plan these uses in the light of what we want to be, of what we want to accomplish as a people. We think of our land and water and human resources not as static and sterile possessions but as life-giving assets to be directed by wise provision for future days. We seek to use our natural resources not as a thing apart but as something that is interwoven with industry, labor, finance, taxation, agriculture, homes, recreation, good citizenship. The results of this interweaving will have a greater influence on the future American standard of living than all the rest of our economics put together.

For the coming 18 months I have asked the Congress for $4,000,000,000 for public projects. A substantial portion of this sum will be used for objectives suggested in this report. As years pass the Government should plan to spend each year a reasonable and continuing sum in the development of this program. It is my hope, for example, that after the immediate crisis of unemployment begins to mend we can afford to appropriate approximately $500,000,000 each year for this purpose. Eventually this appropriation should replace all such appropriations given in the past without planning.

A permanent National Resources Board, toward the establishment of which we should be looking forward, would recommend yearly to the President and the Congress priority of projects in the national plan. This will give to the Congress, as is entirely proper, the final determination in relation to the projects and the appropriations involved.

As I have already stated, it is only because of the current emergency of unemployment and because of the physical impossibility of surveying, weighing, and testing each and every project that a segregation of items is clearly impossible at the moment.

For the same reason the constituting of fixed and permanent administrative machinery would retard the immediate employment objective.

Our goal must be a national one. Achievements in the arts of communication, of transportation, of mechanized production, of agriculture, of mining and of power, do not minimize the rights of State governments, but they go far beyond the economics of State boundaries.

Only through the growth of thought and action in terms of national economics can we best serve individual lives in individual localities.

It is, as these reports point out, an error to say that we have "conquered nature." We must rather start to shape our lives in more harmonious relationship with nature. This is a milestone in our progress toward that end. The future of every American family everywhere will be affected by the action we take.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 24, 1935.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that for the present the message of the President lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BILBO in the chair). Without objection, the message will be printed and, with the accompanying documents, lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably the nomination of Austin J. Mahoney, of Rochester, N. Y., to be collector of customs for customs collection district no. 8, with headquarters at Rochester, N. Y., in place of Andrew Wiedenmann, resigned, which was ordered to be placed on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Charles B. Faris, of Missouri, to be United States circuit judge for the eighth circuit, to succeed William S. Kenyon, deceased.

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Maine, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

STATE OF MAINE, 1935 A. D.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States urging the elimination of the taxation of gasoline by the Federal Government

Whereas the Congress of the United States of America has imposed a tax upon all sales of gasoline; and

Whereas the State of Maine and all other several States of the United States have already imposed taxes upon such sales; and

Whereas the Federal tax on such sales is untimely and prohibitive and, coupled with the respective State taxes on such sales, places a burden upon the users of gasoline beyond that which they should carry and beyond that which the traffic can legitimately bear; and

Whereas the taxation of sales of gasoline should properly be left to the exclusive use of the States as a means of providing funds for road construction and maintenance: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Maine in legislature assembled, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, respectively memorialized to enact with all convenient speed such legislation as may be necessary to abolish the Federal gasoline sales tax and to surrender to the States exclusively the power to tax such sales in the future; and be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution duly certified by the secretary of state be transmitted to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Maine, and that the latter be urged to use their best offices to procure the enactment of such legislation as will accomplish the purposes of this resolution.

In senate chamber, January 16, 1935. Read and adopted.

ROYDEN V. BROWN, Secretary.

House of representatives, read and adopted in concurrence, January 17, 1935.

HARVEY R. PEASE, Clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a telegram from Hon. Robert F. Waldron, speaker of the House of Representatives of the State of Washington, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OLYMPIA, WASH., January 24, 1935.

Honorable PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C.:

We beg to advise you that the Legislature of the State of Washington is in session and that it has voted against entry of the United States in the World Court. We assure you, however, that the members of the Washington Legislature are 100 percent back of the President on issues vital to the welfare of the people of the United States. We feel that the memorial urging the United States to enter the World Court is not in the interest of the welfare of our people; therefore, we reserve the right on issues of this kind to disagree with the President. Public sentiment in this State decisively supports our stand. May we urge that this message be read to your body.

ROBERT F. WALDRON,
Speaker of the House.

Mr. WAGNER presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Supervisors of Erie County, N. Y., which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ERIE COUNTY, CLERK'S OFFICE,
Buffalo, N. Y., January 21, 1935.

To whom it may concern:

I hereby certify that at a session of the Board of Supervisors of Erie County, held in the county hall in the city of Buffalo on the 15th day of January, A. D. 1935, a resolution was adopted, of which the following is a true copy:

"Whereas we, the special grade-crossing committee of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Erie, N. Y., are informed that the railroads are in no condition financially to undertake the grade-crossing improvements recommended by our committee; and

"Whereas the President of the United States in his recent message to Congress recommended an appropriation of $4,000,000,000 to be used for public works and improvements: Be it hereby

"Resolved, That the clerk of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Erie be empowered to write to each Senator of New York State and also the Congressmen representing New York State, requesting them to use their influence with the colleagues in the Senate and House of Representatives to effect passage of a bill authorizing the appropriation of $4,000,000,000 recommended by the President. Said bill to contain a provision allotting to the railroads a suitable appropriation to be used for grade-crossing improvements; and be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be mailed to each of the United States Senators and to the Congressmen representing New York State.

"HORACE S. SOUTHALL, Chairman.
"BENJAMIN J. ELDRIDGE, Secretary.
"FRANK A. SLADE."

Attest:

ERIE M. WHEELER,
Deputy Clerk of the Board of Supervisors of Erie County.

Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. TYDINGS) presented a resolution adopted by My Maryland Lodge, No. 186, International Association of Machinists, of Baltimore, Md., protesting against ratification of the World Court protocols, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions adopted by Miami Post, No. 156, American Legion, of Paola, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation for the immediate payment of adjusted-service certificates of World War veterans, the payment of benefits to widows and dependent children of such veterans, the conscription of capital, industry, and manpower in time of war, and the maintenance of a strong national defense, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WALSH presented petitions numerously signed by sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the publication at Government expense of all testimony taken by the Federal Communications Commission, Broadcast Division, in relation to the broadcasting of programs of interest, convenience, and necessity, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

BLACK-CONNERY 30-HOUR WEEK BILL

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask to be noted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and appropriately referred memorials from employees of several manufacturing companies in Massachusetts in opposition to the Black-Connery 30-hour week bill.

The memorials, endorsed by hundreds of employees, embody a protest in the following form:

The undersigned employees of * * * desire to register our opposition to the passage by Congress of the Black-Connery bill, or of any other measure designed to reduce the working hours per week in industry to 30, as we realize that any further reduction in weekly hours must be followed by a reduction in weekly pay, and that any such restricted working schedule as proposed will increase unemployment, as was the case when the hours were reduced from 48 to 40 per week.

The memorials submitted are from the following, all in the State of Massachusetts:

L. L. Brown Paper Co., of Adams.
H. E. Locke & Co., Inc., of Boston.
E. F. Hodgson Co., of Dover.
Falulah Paper Co., of Fitchburg.
T. Morey & Son, of Greenfield.
The Holyoke Wire Cloth Co., of Holyoke.
Cluett, Peabody & Co., of Leominster.
Gilet Carbonizing Co., Inc., of Lowell.
Rodney Hunt Machine Co., of Orange.
Musgrove Knitting Co., of Pittsfield.
Groton Leatherboard Co., of West Groton.
Sleeper & Hartley, Inc., of Worcester.
G. F. Wright Steel & Wire Co., of Worcester.
Worcester Wire Works Division of the National Standard Co., of Worcester.

I ask also that there be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a letter from the Allied Building Trades Council, Springfield, Mass., urging the passage of the 30-hour week bill.

There being no objection, the letter and memorials were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ALLIED BUILDING TRADES COUNCIL,
CENTRAL LABOR UNION HALL,
Springfield, Mass., January 8, 1935.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: At the meeting of the Building Trades Council held Friday, January 4, 1935, it was voted to request your support of the 30-hour week bill. This bill, as we understand it, carries 40 hours' pay for 30 hours' work.

Respectfully yours,

M. J. SCANLAN, Secretary-Treasurer.

AMENDMENT OF MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1920

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 619) to amend section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 24) thereon.

REPORT OF AMERICAN INSTRUCTORS OF THE DEAF

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the report of the proceedings of the twenty-eighth meeting of the Convention of American Instructors of the Deaf, held at West Trenton, N. J., June 18 to 23, 1933, reported favorably thereon with the recommendation that the matter be printed as a document.

On motion by Mr. HAYDEN, it was Ordered, That the letter from the President of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, transmitting the report of the proceedings of the twenty-eighth meeting of the Convention of American Instructors of the Deaf, held at West Trenton, N. J., June 18 to 23, 1933, be printed with illustrations as a Senate document.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. BYRNES. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 56 and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 56), submitted by Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma on the 17th instant, was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-fourth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

INVESTIGATIONS BY THE COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Mr. BYRNES. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 42, which is on the calendar.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from South Carolina, as I understand, proposes to offer a substitute for a resolution on the calendar, does he not?

Mr. BYRNES. For Senate Resolution 42, which is on the calendar, I desire to offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BILBO in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. Res. 42) submitted by Mr. COPELAND on the 10th instant, and reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, without amendment, on the 21st instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized to sit during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Seventy-fourth Congress at such times and places as it may deem advisable, to make investigations into all matters within its jurisdiction, and to compile and prepare statistics and documents in relation thereto, as directed from time to time by the Senate and as may be necessary, and to report in due course to the Senate the result thereof, to send for persons, books, and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ such expert, stenographic, clerical, and other assistance as may be necessary; and all of the expenses incurred in pursuance hereof shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, and the committee is authorized to order such printing and binding as may be necessary for its use.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina offers an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to strike out all after the word "Resolved", and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

That the Committee on Commerce, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized, during the Seventy-fourth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per hundred words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 43) for the establishment of a commission for the construction of a Washington-Lincoln Memorial Gettysburg Boulevard connecting the present Lincoln Memorial in the city of Washington with the battlefield of Gettysburg in the State of Pennsylvania; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

Mr. SHEPPARD, by unanimous consent, introduced two joint resolutions, which were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 44) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to intoxicating liquors; and

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 45) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to intoxicating liquors.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the two joint resolutions I have introduced relate to national constitutional prohibition.

On June 15, 1934, during the second session of the Seventy-third Congress, I introduced a resolution known as Senate Joint Resolution 144, amending the Constitution in reference to national prohibition. That resolution differed from the eighteenth amendment in that it conferred upon Congress the power to prohibit and did not by its own terms provide specifically and immediately for prohibition for the Nation. It also provided for regulation by Congress in territory where local prohibition did not prevail, pending complete Federal prohibition.

I stated in introducing that measure that in my judgment the eighteenth amendment provided the best method of handling the liquor traffic, but that in view of the fact that the early restoration of that amendment would be difficult, I felt that the enabling and regulatory provisions embodied in the Senate Joint Resolution 144 comprised what seemed to be the best steps at that time toward the ultimate return of the eighteenth amendment.

Today, 7 months after the introduction of the enabling amendment, events have moved so rapidly and the ravages of the liquor traffic have increased so tremendously that I feel that the time is already here for the consideration of the eighteenth amendment, along with the enabling amendment. I have made considerable revision of the enabling amendment itself, omitting all reference to regulation, confining its scope to prohibition, and providing for its submission to legislatures in place of conventions. In again presenting the eighteenth amendment, I have substituted the words "alcoholic liquors" for "intoxicating" liquors.

In order that both methods of procedure may be fully and fairly considered, I am introducing a resolution embodying the original eighteenth amendment, revised as indicated, and a resolution for a revised enabling amendment.

INVESTIGATION OF TELEPHONE COMPANIES

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent, as in legislative session, to introduce a joint resolution authorizing the Federal Communications Commission to investigate and report on the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and so forth. It is a joint request and will be offered in the House of Representatives by the Chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 46) authorizing and directing the Federal Communications Commission to investigate and report on the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and on all other companies engaged directly or indirectly in telephone communication in interstate commerce, including all companies related to any of these companies through a holding-company structure, or otherwise, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

FEDERAL COMPENSATION—NOTICE TO SUSPEND RULE

Mr. McCARRAN. I desire at this time to file and send to the desk a notice in writing of a motion to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI, for the purpose of offering an amendment to House Joint Resolution 88; and I also send to the desk the amendment connected therewith.

I desire to say that I do not regard the filing of this notice at this time as at all essential, but I file it merely as a matter of precaution.

Mr. KING. The Senator does not desire the reference of the matter to any committee, does he?

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice will be read.

The notice was read, as follows:

Pursuant to the provisions of rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that I shall hereafter move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI, for the purpose of proposing to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 88) making additional appropriations for the Federal Communications Commission, the National Mediation Board, and the Securities and Exchange Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, the following amendment, viz, on page 3, after line 21, insert the following:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. McCARRAN to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 88) making additional appropriations for the Federal Communications Commission, the National Mediation Board, and the Securities and Exchange Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935.

At the end of the joint resolution insert the following new section:

"COMPENSATION OF GOVERNMENT OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

"SEC. 2. (a) Section 3 (b) of title II of the act entitled 'An act to maintain the credit of the United States Government', approved March 20, 1933, as amended, is amended by striking out 'shall not exceed 5 percent during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935', and inserting in lieu thereof 'shall not, during the portion of the fiscal year 1935 prior to January 1, 1935, exceed 5 percent, and after December 31, 1934, there shall be no such reduction.'

"(b) Subsections (b) and (c) of section 21 of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act, 1935, are amended by striking out 'the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935', wherever such phrase appears, and inserting in lieu thereof 'that portion of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1935, prior to January 1, 1935.'

"(c) Nothing in this resolution shall be construed as permitting any reduction in rates of compensation in effect at the time of the passage of this resolution."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

WAR-RISK INSURANCE CONTRACTS

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate a joint resolution reported unanimously yesterday by the Finance Committee and which is now on the calendar. The joint resolution passed the House unanimously. It is with reference to clarifying the definition of disagreement in section 19, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended. It affects a great number of service men in the presentation of their claims. It would permit the claims to go to trial and the matters involved to be cleared up. A case went to the Supreme Court and the Veterans' Administration and the Solicitor General of the Department of Justice thought the matter so important that an arrangement was made in the Supreme Court for the postponement of the case until legislation could be enacted by Congress clarifying the particular point involved.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, can the Senator state in just a few sentences the difficulty which has arisen and which is sought to be corrected by the joint resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. Before I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution, I will make a brief statement as to its purposes.

Suit on a contract of war-risk insurance may be filed under the act of July 3, 1930, only after a disagreement exists between the claimant and the Veterans' Administration. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, in conformity with an opinion of the Acting Attorney General of September 14, 1931, delegated authority to finally deny claims so as to create the required disagreement to what is called the "Insurance Claims Council of the Veterans' Administration." When that council denied a claim, the claimant was notified of the denial and definitely told that that was sufficient disagreement on which to file suit. Hundreds of cases went to suit and judgment on this kind of denial; and where the judgments were against the Government, these judgments have been paid. There are now pending in the courts about 8,000 suits on war-risk insurance, and about 90 percent have this same kind of denial.

In a case which arose in the district court in Arkansas the question of the sufficiency of this kind of a disagreement was raised and the court held that there was no disagreement. Appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals of the Eighth Circuit was taken, and that court certified the question to the Supreme Court of the United States. That case, John H. Frederick against the United States, is now pending in the Supreme Court. Motion to defer decision was filed by the Government with the promise to the Supreme Court that legislation would be sought to enact into law the practice and procedure followed by the Veterans' Administration. This resolution will make good the promises which were made to these veterans and on which the veterans acted. In addition, it will permit reinstatement of similar cases which were dismissed and in which the judgments of dismissal have become final. There are about 100 such cases. Further, since it settles by law the practice followed by the Veterans' Administration, it will permit the Veterans' Administration to proceed in its adjudication of approximately 20,000 cases in which insurance is being claimed.

While the joint resolution will protect the cases in court and will permit men to accept as final the denial of their claims by the Insurance Claims Council of the Veterans' Administration, which is delegated authority to so act by the Administrator, it will in no way deprive the veteran of the right of appeal to the Administrator if he does not care to accept the subordinate denial as final.

In other words, this is a measure which the Veterans' Administration favors in order to remove the ambiguity now existing. It will help a great number of World War veterans and ex-service men.

Mr. JOHNSON. As I understand the Senator, the whole design of the measure is to eliminate a technicality which has wrought injustices in veterans' cases?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is absolutely right.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 112) to clarify the definition of disagreement in section 19, World War Veterans'

Act, 1924, as amended, which had been reported without amendment from the Committee on Finance, and which was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That a denial of a claim for insurance by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs or any employee or agency of the Veterans' Administration heretofore or hereafter designated therefor by the Administrator shall constitute a disagreement for the purposes of section 19 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 38, sec. 445). This resolution is made effective as of July 3, 1930, and shall apply to all suits now pending against the United States under the provisions of section 19 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, and any suit which has been dismissed solely on the ground that a denial as described in this resolution did not constitute a disagreement as defined by section 19 may be reinstated within 3 months from the date of enactment of this resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Mississippi if the committee was unanimous in its report?

Mr. HARRISON. It was unanimous. Furthermore, the joint resolution was passed unanimously by the House of Representatives.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understood the Senator to say the measure is recommended by the Veterans' Administration?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; and action ought to be taken speedily because of the large number of cases which are being held up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is open to amendment. If there be no amendments, the question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. CONNALLY. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter transmitting a report of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

QUARTERLY REPORT OF THE RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

QUARTER ENDED SEPTEMBER 30, 1934

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION,
Washington, December 3, 1934.

SIR: Pursuant to the provisions of section 15 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, the Corporation has the honor to submit its report covering its operations for the third quarter of 1934, and for the period from the organization of the Corporation on February 2, 1932, to September 30, 1934, inclusive.

During the third quarter of 1934, under section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, the Corporation authorized 412 loans. These loans, together with increases during the quarter in loans previously authorized, aggregated $165,893,490.15, as follows: $154,679,593.79 to banks and trust companies (including $145,898,707.81 to aid in the reorganization or liquidation of closed banks; $370,000 to insurance companies; $8,191,223.72 to mortgage loan companies; $300,000 to an agricultural credit corporation; $1,327,113.49 (rediscounts) to regional agricultural credit corporations; $25,559.15 to a livestock credit corporation; and $1,000,000 to a railroad.

During the third quarter of 1934, under section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, the Corporation made 180 authorizations to industrial or commercial businesses, aggregating $11,809,175, as follows: Loans in the amount of $11,381,250; purchases of participations in the amount of $250,300; and agreements to purchase participations in the amount of $177,625.

During the third quarter of 1934, under the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended, the Corporation authorized 17 loans aggregating $275,694,255.74, as follows: Under section 201 (a) (1), title II, as amended by section 9 of the act approved June 19, 1934, loans aggregating $15,315,000 for self-liquidating projects; under section 201 (d), title II, loans aggregating $260,379,255.74 to aid in financing the carrying and orderly marketing of agricultural commodities and livestock produced in the United States.

During the third quarter of 1934, under section 304, title III, of the act approved March 9, 1933, as amended, the Corporation made 590 authorizations. These authorizations, together with increases during the quarter in authorizations previously made, aggregated $57,141,175, as follows: Loans secured by preferred stock of banks and trust companies in the amount of $1,182,175; subscriptions for preferred stock of banks and trust companies in the amount of $35,375,000; and purchases of capital notes or debentures of banks and trust companies in the amount of $20,584,000.

During the third quarter of 1934, under section 1 of the act approved June 10, 1933, as amended, the Corporation made two authorizations aggregating $10,100,000, as follows: A loan in the amount of $10,000,000 on the preferred stock of an insurance company; and a subscription in the amount of $100,000 for preferred stock of an insurance company.

During the third quarter of 1934, under section 36, title II, of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, the Corporation authorized 92 loans aggregating $27,549,850, to or for the benefit of drainage, levee, irrigation, and similar districts.

During the third quarter of 1934, under the act approved April 13, 1934, the Corporation authorized three loans aggregating $1,550,000, for financing the repair of property damaged by earthquake or flood in the year 1933 and in the months of January and February 1934.

During the third quarter of 1934, under section 16 of the act approved June 19, 1934, which authorized the Corporation to make loans to public-school districts or other similar public-school authorities for the purpose of payment of teachers' salaries due prior to June 1, 1934, the Corporation authorized one loan in the amount of $22,500,000, of which $200,000 was subsequently canceled.

Summarizing the above, the Corporation, during the third quarter of 1934, made 1,297 authorizations. These authorizations, together with increases during the quarter in authorizations previously made, aggregated $572,237,945.89. Cancelations or withdrawals during the third quarter of 1934, of authorizations made during that quarter and prior thereto, aggregated $218,775,616.12.

During the third quarter of 1934 the Corporation under the above acts disbursed $447,558,662.60 and received repayments in the aggregate amount of $638,641,684.78. The decrease in the amount outstanding on September 30, 1934, as compared with June 30, 1934, was $191,083,022.18.

During the entire period from the organization of the Corporation on February 2, 1932, to September 30, 1934, inclusive, the Corporation authorized under section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, 17,468 separate loans to 8,949 institutions, aggregating $3,888,019,958.24, as follows: $2,196,194,845.16 to 7,270 banks and trust companies (including $869,461,855.88 to aid in the reorganization or liquidation of closed banks); $122,474,119.14 to 1,007 building-and-loan associations (including $1,335,000 to receivers of closed building-and-loan associations); $102,558,867.51 to 130 insurance companies; $407,113,449.07 to 363 mortgage-loan companies; $622,967.80 to 6 credit unions; $399,636,000 to 12 Federal land banks (including $193,618,000 representing refinancing of loans previously made by the Corporation to Federal land banks for different individual amounts, but in the same aggregate amount); $21,103,172.68 to 24 joint-stock land banks; $9,250,000 to 8 Federal intermediate credit banks; $6,013,379.64 to 20 agricultural credit corporations; $178,489,460.09 (rediscounts) to 12 regional agricultural credit corporations and their branches; $14,449,962 to 20 livestock credit corporations; $421,699,930 to 69 railroads (including $19,690,960 to 7 railroad receivers and $744,252 to the trustee of a railroad); $26,089.27 to 7 processors or distributors who are subject to processing taxes; and $8,387,715.88 to a State fund created for the purpose of insuring the repayment of deposits of public moneys.

Under section 5d of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act the Corporation from June 19, 1934, when this section was approved, to September 30, 1934, inclusive, made 185 authorizations to 181 industrial or commercial businesses, aggregating $12,733,675, as follows: Loans in the amount of $12,305,750 to 173 businesses; purchases of participations in the amount of $250,300 in loans to 6 businesses; and agreements to purchase participations in the amount of $177,625 in loans to 2 businesses.

Under the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, as amended, the Corporation from July 21, 1932, when the act was approved, to September 30, 1934, inclusive, made 766 authorizations to 318 institutions aggregating $1,377,478,282.91, as follows: Under the provisions of section 1, title I, $300,000,000 was made available to 42 States and 2 Territories for purposes of relief and work relief; under the provisions of section 201 (a), title II, as amended, loans or contracts aggregating $246,079,351.07 were authorized to 182 institutions for self-liquidating projects (including $10,450,000 to 6 institutions for financing the repair or reconstruction of buildings damaged by earthquake, fire, tornado, or cyclone in 1933); under the provisions of section 201 (c), title II, loans aggregating $52,880,542.80 were authorized to 3 institutions for the purpose of financing sales in foreign markets of agricultural surpluses; and under the provisions of section 201 (d), title II, loans aggregating $778,518,389.04 were authorized to 89 institutions to aid in financing the carrying and orderly marketing of agricultural commodities and livestock; produced in the United States (including authorizations of $704,000,000 to the Commodity Credit Corporation).

Under the act approved March 9, 1933, as amended, the Corporation from March 9, 1933, to September 30, 1934, inclusive, made 7,408 authorizations for loans on preferred stock, or for the purchase of preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures of 6,406 banks and trust companies, aggregating $1,104,772,295, as follows: Loans in the amount of $30,398,675, secured by preferred stock of 227 banks and trust companies; subscriptions for preferred stock of 3,470 banks and trust companies in the amount of $660,425,820; and purchases of capital notes or debentures of 2,709 banks and trust companies in the amount of $413,947,800.

Under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933, the Corporation from May 12, 1933, when the act was approved, to September 30, 1934, inclusive, authorized a loan of $3,500,000 to the Secretary of Agriculture to acquire cotton.

Under the act approved June 10, 1933, as amended, the Corporation from June 10, 1933, to September 30, 1934, inclusive, made seven authorizations aggregating $29,475,000, as follows: Loans in the amount of $29,375,000 secured by preferred stock of six insurance companies; and a subscription in the amount of $100,000 for preferred stock of an insurance company.

Under the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, the Corporation from May 12, 1933, when the act was approved, to September 30, 1934, inclusive, authorized 358 loans in the amount of $75,387,573.77 to or for the benefit of 343 drainage, levee, irrigation, and similar districts.

Under the act approved April 13, 1934, the Corporation, from April 13, 1934, to September 30, 1934, inclusive, authorized four loans in the amount of $2,150,000 for financing the repair of property damaged by earthquake or flood in 1933, or in January and February of 1934.

Under the act approved June 19, 1934, the Corporation from June 19, 1934, to September 30, 1934, inclusive, authorized one loan in the amount of $22,500,000 for the purpose of payment of teachers' salaries; of this amount $200,000 was subsequently canceled.

Summarizing the foregoing, the Corporation, during the entire period from February 2, 1932, to September 30, 1934, inclusive, made authorizations aggregating $6,516,016,784.92. Of the total amount authorized, $707,493,889.14 was later withdrawn or canceled.

At the close of September 30, 1934, the Corporation under the above acts had disbursed $4,848,624,276.66, and repayments amounted to $2,167,726,238.90, leaving $2,680,898,037.76 outstanding on the books of the Corporation.

In addition, the Corporation had outstanding on September 30, 1934, agreements to make loans, subscribe for preferred stock, and purchase capital notes or debentures, totaling $231,292,756.21, upon the performance of specified conditions.

Under section 84 of the Farm Credit Act of 1933, with the approval of the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, the Corporation, during the third quarter of 1934, authorized the reduction of the capital of six regional agricultural credit corporations, as follows: The Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation of Albany, N. Y., from $750,000 to $600,000; of Baltimore, Md., from $200,000 to $150,000; of Columbus, Ohio, from $500,000 to $325,000; of Jackson, Miss., from $325,000 to $275,000; of Raleigh, N. C., from $375,000 to $325,000; and of Spokane, Wash., from $8,000,000 to $7,000,000. The Corporation, with the approval of the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration, during the third quarter of 1934, authorized increases in the capital of three regional agricultural credit corporations, as follows: The Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation of Minneapolis, Minn., from $10,000,000 to $10,300,0000; of Sioux City, Iowa, from $9,500,000 to $10,025,000; and of Wichita, Kans., from $6,250,000 to $6,900,000.

Under section 4 (b) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, the Corporation during the third quarter of 1934, paid $46,000,000 to the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of making payments upon stock of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation subscribed for by him. This made a total of $200,000,000 so paid through September 30, 1934, and completed the payment, by the Corporation, of the entire amount allocated under section 4 (b) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933.

Under section 2 (a) and section 6 of the Federal Emergency Relief Act of 1933, upon certification of the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator, the Corporation, during the third quarter of 1934, made payments for relief aggregating $6,139,011, making a total of $499,251,915 so disbursed through September 30, 1934; and disbursed $3,202.81 to the Federal Emergency Relief Administrator for expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the above act, and received refunds of expenses previously disbursed amounting to $10,939.03, making a net total of $337,487.18 so disbursed through September 30, 1934.

Under section 4, title I, of the National Housing Act, approved June 27, 1934, which authorized the corporation to make available to the Administrator such funds as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of that act, the Corporation, during the third quarter of 1934, paid to the Federal Housing Administrator $10,000,000.

Under the act approved June 19, 1934, which authorized the Corporation to purchase marketable securities from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, the Corporation, during the third quarter of 1934, purchased $10,025,100 face amount of such securities of which $67,000 (par value) maturing September 1934 was held to maturity by the Corporation. Invitations to submit bids on the remaining $9,958,100 (par value) were forwarded to banks, insurance companies, and dealers in securities. These securities were awarded to the highest bidder in each instance, the total of the high bids thereon being $10,081,426.83, exclusive of accrued interest. Of this sum, $10,068,826.83 plus accrued interest to the date of purchase from the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works was paid during the third quarter to that administration, and on October 1, 1934, the remaining $12,600 was paid to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works.

During the third quarter of 1934 the Corporation sold $65,000,000 series D–3 notes and $10,000,000 series D–4 notes, aggregating $75,000,000, to the Secretary of the Treasury.

During the third quarter of 1934 the Corporation redeemed and canceled $255,000,000 of its series D–4 notes held by the Secretary of the Treasury, and $5,100,000 of its series E notes held by banks and trust companies.

During the third quarter of 1934 the Corporation authorized the issuance of $100,000,000 series H notes, maturing July 1, 1937, to be sold to institutions from which the Corporation subscribes for or purchases preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures. During the third quarter $16,250,000 series H notes were sold.

As of September 30, 1934, there were outstanding $3,320,964,666.67 of the Corporation's notes, as follows:

|---|---|
| Series D–1 | $475,000,000.00 |
| Series D–2 | 1,290,000,000.00 |
| Series D–3 | 740,000,000.00 |
| Series D–4 | 570,000,000.00 |
| Series E | 149,621,666.67 |
| Series F | 64,093,000.00 |
| Series G | 16,000,000.00 |
| Series H | 16,250,000.00 |
| Total | 3,320,964,666.67 |

BOULDER DAM—ARTICLE BY ARTHUR BRISBANE

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article on Boulder Dam, appearing in the Washington Herald of January 22, and written by Mr. Arthur Brisbane, be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Herald, Jan. 22, 1935]

TODAY—A DAY AT BOULDER DAM—THE OLD SIOUX CHIEF—1,835,000 HORSEPOWER—EQUAL TO FOUR NIAGARAS

By Arthur Brisbane

GALLUP, N. MEX., January 21.—This is written between Flagstaff and Winslow, traveling along the high levels of Arizona, more than 7,000 feet above sea level. The hills and dark green trees are covered with snow, the sky is miraculously blue, the climate is worth more than all our gold; and you ought to be told, once more, about these wondrous western lands of California, Arizona, New Mexico, Nevada, Colorado.

But yesterday, Sunday, was devoted to the great Boulder Dam Canyon, where, in about 10 days, water will start slowly rising in the gigantic reservoir, and all space must be devoted to that marvel of engineering science.

The automobile trip to the dam from the writer's ranch at Hodge, Calif., and back, a run of about 400 miles across part of California and Nevada was made comfortably by "Jimmy" Dixon, of Los Angeles, in 6 hours. Every American may be proud of Boulder Dam, especially Mr. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior, in charge of the project, the "Six Companies", American contracting corporations that have combined to undertake the $165,000,000 job, and F. T. Crowe, tall American from the Northwest, general superintendent of the job.

The contractors agreed to finish not later than January 1, 1938, and pay a forfeit of $9,000 damages for every day's delay.

The work will be finished in July, this year, 2½ years ahead of time, the dam itself completed in 30 days, with water running into storage back of the dam, within 15 days. This extraordinary efficiency will mean millions for the Government in increased and immediate receipts, and interest saved, but the contractors get no bonus to offset the damage clause.

Taxpayers will learn with joy that contracts already made for power with the city of Los Angeles, power companies of southern California, and others will pay for the dam, principal and interest, within 50 years. It pays to improve the country.

Most impressive, as you stand at the edge of the deep canyon, are the face of the giant dam structure, rising more than 726 feet from bedrock, and the faces of some old Sioux Indians, to whose ancestors this river once belonged, looking at work done by white men to harness their river and put it to work.

A fine face is that of the Sioux chief, nearly 80 years old. The racial stock in Asia that produced such a man, might with education and science back of it, come flying some day as Columbus came sailing, to take possession of these lands again, driving out effete whites as those whites once drove out barbarous Indians. (You will observe, perhaps with gratitude, that nothing is said this time about airplane protection.)

The old chief sees that the Colorado River, held by a cofferdam far up the river and forced to leave its natural bed, now flows through great tunnels in the solid rock on either side of the canyon, resuming its muddy course far below the dam, allowing the white men to work on dry land that was once the river bed. Never again will the river choose its path.

Below the dam, on the old river bed, you see buildings for power development, where giant generators will produce 1,835,000 horsepower, more than four times the power of Niagara.

Above the complicated machinery and the power houses will be erected from wall to wall of the canyon, deeply anchored in the rock on each side, a protecting, reinforced, concrete roof, 25 feet thick, to be covered deeply with sand and gravel, fertile soil, and growing grass, protecting the precious machinery from falling rock that might be shaken loose by earthquakes.

Men are building there for 1,000 years to come, despite the fact that in a few centuries all this work may be obsolete, a sample of man's primitive scientific work, and the earth's real power supply produced by harnessing the tides of the giant sun itself.

The wall of the dam, 660 feet thick at the base, tapers off to 45 feet in width at the top. Water pressure is greater at the bottom of the dam because of the weight of water above it.

In the wall and the power plant there have been used 4,200,000 cubic yards of concrete, and contractors will want to know that pebbles as large as 9 inches in diameter are used in the mixture.

Just above the dam, on Government land, an inexhaustible bed of beautifully polished pebbles was found ready for the work.

Water will cover that deposit when the dam is filled, but it might be dredged for future work when other dams are built higher up the river to use power generated above the Boulder level.

The amount of concrete in that job, according to the Department of the Interior, would build a monument 100 feet square, 2⅛ miles in height. Men will build such monuments some day, and wider and higher, with apartments all the way up, allowing tenants to choose the climate and altitude they want, with airplane landings on top. What men can imagine, they can do.

Secretary of the Interior Ickes informs the public that the concrete used at Boulder Dam job would build a standard 16-foot wide paved highway reaching from Miami in Florida to Seattle in Washington.

This country will build many such roads in the years to come, now that Franklin D. Roosevelt has taught the people how to spend money, and sections of the roads at intervals will be wide enough for airplane landings, the national slogan, "Land your plane anywhere from the northwestern tip of Alaska to Key West."

Across the top of the dam, 45 feet wide, a paved highway for automobiles will carry travelers from Nevada to Arizona; on the Arizona side a winding road will lead to the top of the canyon.

The dam forms an arch, like a section of a circle, reaching from wall to wall of the canyon, the outer curve turned upstream, the arch holding the weight of the accumulated waters, in a reservoir lake, reaching upstream 110 miles.

It is the height of the water back of the dam, not the volume accumulated upstream that creates pressure on the dam. You might put the whole Atlantic Ocean upstream back of that dam, at the same height, as planned for the reservoir, and the dam would hold it.

Kind-hearted ladies and sportsmen that like to kill things will be glad to hear that the reservoir lake and all that Colorado River region belonging to Uncle Sam has been made a bird sanctuary. You may fish in the reservoir, but may not kill wild ducks or other birds that are expected to breed there. In millions from Boulder Dam they will fly in all directions and sportsmen will have the pleasure of killing them.

Boulder Dam is the highest dam in the world, towering 726 feet above bed rock, 110 to 130 feet below the river bed.

The Sautet Dam, now building in France, comes next—446 feet. Third is our 405-foot Owyhee Dam in Oregon. The world's greatest dam is not really a "Boulder Dam" for it is built in Black Canyon. Boulder Canyon farther up the river would provide less storage for water; the dam would be wider there, more expensive. Also the walls of Boulder Canyon are of granite, not as strong for anchorage purpose as the volcanic rock that is in the walls in Black Canyon, on both sides.

Intense volcanic heat, applied in comparatively recent times, gives a tougher rock to Black Canyon walls.

On both sides of the canyon the wall of the dam is anchored in the canyon rock walls to a depth of 60 feet.

Across the canyon, from wall to wall, are stretched numerous cables, over which engineers, workmen, and materials travel back and forth. Suspended below these cables are open swinging platforms on which you stand as you cross the canyon four times with Mr. Crowe. The platforms are strong enough to hold 20 tons, but carrying you from one side to the other, 600 feet above the canyon floor, swaying and dipping, they seem a little insecure, traveling 1,200 feet a minute across to the Arizona side and back.

Another trip leads to the bottom of the river bed, where you enter a round tunnel 50 feet in diameter cut in the rock to bring the water under 600 feet of pressure to turbine that will produce electric power equal to the strength of 1,800,000 horses.

Pseudo-economists who recently were prattling about "theocracy", well meaning, silly gentlemen that would now do away with machinery and go back to hand labor, should visit Boulder Dam.

The wall of the dam alone contains more cubic yards of masonry than would be needed to reproduce the great pyramids of Egypt. And it would take the men that have been employed on this dam, working with old Egyptian methods, at least 1,000 years to finish the concrete wall of the dam alone, to say nothing of double tunnels through the solid rock on either side of the canyon, and all the steel and machinery that ancient methods could not have produced at all.

What this country wants is not men working with pick and shovel, but more highly productive machinery, plus brains enough to distribute that which is produced.

The wall of the dam weighs 6,600,000 tons, and pressure of the water against the cement wall at the base of the dam will be 45,000 pounds to the square foot. The concrete wall, more than 600 feet thick, will hold that easily.

Chemical action caused by the setting of the cement, plus intense pressure, raises the wall to a temperature of 150 degrees. This is overcome by circulating water just above the freezing point through the cement in 570 miles of 1-inch steel tubing. The water is artificially cooled, and it takes the cement about 2 years to cool off.

The wall of the dam is not reinforced, but 35,000,000 pounds of reinforcing bars and rails will be used, all supplied by United States Steel, which for this job has provided materials of unusually strong quality. The Bureau of Standards inspects everything.

The dam, which goes from 110 to 130 feet into the rock below the river bed, will raise the level of the river back of the dam 584 feet, and will be 1,180 feet wide at the top. The Government purchases all materials, contractors supplying the labor and mechanical equipment, including trucks that carry 50 tons.

The reservoir back of the dam will hold 30,500,000 acre-feet of water, enough to cover 30,500,000 acres 1 foot deep. That amount of water would cover the State of New York to a depth of 1 foot, which means 10,000,000,000,000 gallons of water, 80,000 gallons for each person in the United States, 5,000 gallons for every inhabitant of the earth. The average flow of the river would fill the reservoir in 2 years, and water for power and irrigation can be used before the reservoir is full.

Gigantic emergency spillways on both sides of the canyon in addition to the huge diversion tunnels through the canyon rock walls will provide for any possible flood or sudden rise in the river. The spillways are arranged to take care of 525,000 cubic feet of water per second.

The Colorado River is now controlled and docile. There will be no more floods in the Imperial Valley, but instead regular supplies of water and power as may be needed. Spillways and other outlets with their capacity of 525,000 cubic feet of water per second would carry water enough to develop 25,000,000 horsepower. Any one of the numerous spillways would take care of all the water that flows over Niagara Falls and the power-developing drop would be three times as great as at Niagara.

All other water powers on earth are small compared with this giant power-producing dam. The next greatest power plant in the world, the Dnieprostroy, Russian plant, develops only 750,000 horsepower against Boulder Dam's 1,835,000 horsepower. That energy means 4,330,000,000 kilowatt-hours of power per year.

That must cause a little heartache among private owners of power plants, but no private owner could, no banking group would, undertake that $165,000,000 job at Boulder Dam.

Uncle Sam is the gentleman for that task.

You should see Boulder Dam. Railroads will take you there or your trusty automobile. In about 10 days water will begin to run in, above the dam, but you may always see the great unobstructed wall of the dam on the lower side.

A visit to that dam will convince you that those who fear for this country's future, and think it needs the guidance of England, France, Czechoslovakia, and the World Court, underestimate the United States.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

THE WORLD COURT

The Senate resumed the consideration of Executive A (71st Cong., 3d sess.), protocols concerning adherence of the United States to the Court of International Justice, the pending question being the amendment of Mr. VANDENBERG to the resolution of adherence as reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask the particular attention of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] with a view to submitting a request for unanimous consent.

I ask unanimous consent that after the hour of 4 o'clock today no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the resolution of adherence or more than once or longer than 15 minutes on any reservation that may be pending or that may be offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am unable to accede to the request which is submitted by the Senator from Arkansas. I should be glad to accept a suggestion of that sort if it were made, say, for Monday or Tuesday next, but not for today. I think it would be entirely inappropriate that it should be done today, and for that reason I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made.

Mr. ROBINSON. I shall confer further with the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. I shall be very glad indeed to have the Senator do so.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I would not address the Senate today on the question before it were it not for the fact that I believe we have entered a period of time when history is about to repeat itself. We have the identical condition in the world today that we have had before. The technical discussion which has taken place in the Senate has been illuminating. The subject of the World Court and the League of Nations has been discussed here since the end of the war. I do not intend to go into a technical discussion of the question, because it has been fully discussed by men more able than I, and if I should undertake to do it it would be merely a repetition of what has been said.

I repeat, if I did not believe we are entering or have already entered a period where history is about to repeat itself, I should not address the Senate. We have a situation in the country and throughout the world whereby everyone talks of peace and thinks of war. Being an apostle of peace I want to read a paragraph written something like 40 years ago by the greatest apostle of peace since the Prince of Peace came to earth. I refer to Leo Tolstoi. What he wrote at that time is as prophetic now, in my opinion, as it was at that time.

At that time the whole world was talking of peace and thinking of and preparing for war. After analyzing these peace organizations, and these movements and drives for peace, Tolstoi wrote a thesis on the question of peace and of patriotism and of war.

I read it when I was a boy, and this morning I sent to the Library of Congress to get it. I find on the leaf of this book that the Library of Congress bought it in 1899. It is the greatest document on peace since the Sermon on the Mount; and it is a strange paradox and an irony of fate for me to discover that with all the peace organizations in the United States, and all the debates in the Halls of Congress in the past 20 years, this book containing this thesis on the question of peace has its leaves uncut. It has rested there for 35 years without being read.

I recommend this book to the Carnegie Peace Foundation. I recommend it to the Rockefeller Foundation. I recommend it to the League of Nations. I recommend it to every Member of Congress.

Here is what Tolstoi wrote at the time a great peace organization was formed—in fact, several of them were formed. He said:

> It is true that it was constantly proclaimed in all the speeches, in all the toasts pronounced at these festivities, and in all the articles upon them, that the object of what was taking place was the establishment of peace. Even the partisans of war, the Russian correspondent previously cited amongst them, speak not of any hatred toward the conquerors of the lost provinces, but of a love which somehow hates.
> However, we are well aware of the cunning of those that suffer from mental diseases, and this constant iteration of a desire for peace, and silence as to the sentiments in every man's mind, is precisely a threat of the worst significance.

In the early nineties a peace organization had been formed by a great proponent of peace, Kaiser Wilhelm II, by uniting with the Austrian Emperor. That union, which later became the Triple Alliance when Italy joined it, was hailed throughout the world as a great peace organization. Meetings were held in Austria and in Germany in the interest of peace, where speeches were made in the interest of peace, and toasts were drunk in the interest of peace.

Not to be outdone, Russia and France formed another peace organization which later, with the adherence of Great Britain, became the Triple Entente; and then great peace celebrations were held throughout Europe and throughout the world. It is these peace festivities about which Count Leo Tolstoi writes, and writes so prophetically that 20 years afterward his prophecy became true. Because we have that kind of a situation in the world today, where everyone is talking of peace and preparing for war, I think his prophecy, written 20 years before the World War, is as prophetic today as it was then.

I should like to read a few paragraphs from this thesis dealing with peace organizations, showing how the war makers make war in the name of peace, how they control these peace organizations, as has been shown here by the special investigating committee of the Senate, how ammunition makers control disarmament conferences and peace conferences.

In confirmation of this peace organization, this "league of nations" of France and Russia, Tolstoy writes what took place when different delegations from various countries came to celebrate at great peace festivals. He explains how a Russian delegation came to France, to Toulon, and to Paris; how speeches were made, all in the name of peace. The Russian delegation told how they loved peace and how they loved France. French speakers told how they loved peace and how they loved Russia. The newspapers all over the world hailed the alliance as a great peace organization. Newspaper correspondents were overcome with sentiments of peace that they found throughout Europe, and particularly at these peace festivities in France, to celebrate the formation of this great peace organization.

Because the sentiments expressed at that time were so similar to the sentiments expressed today, I shall, with the indulgence of the Senate, read what one great French correspondent wrote about the profound peace sentiment he found in France at that time.

He said:

> It may truthfully be said that this event is of universal importance, astounding, sufficiently touching to produce tears, and elevating influence on the soul, making it throb with that love which sees in men brothers, which hates blood, and violence, and the snatching of children from a beloved mother. I have been in a kind of torpor for the last few hours. It seems almost overpoweringly strange to stand in the terminus of the Lyons Railway, amid the representatives of the French Government, in their uniforms embroidered with gold, amongst the municipal authorities in full dress, and to hear cries of "Vive la Russie!" "Vive le Czar!", and our national anthem played again and again.
> Where am I? I reflected. What has happened? What magic current has united all these feelings, these aspirations, into one stream? Is not this the sensible presence of the God of love and of fraternity, the presence of the loftiest ideal descending in His supremest moments upon man?

Why, God had descended among them and had imbued them all with a spirit of fraternity, according to the press.

The correspondent continues:

> My soul is so full of something beautiful, pure, and elevated that my pen is unable to express it. Words are weak in comparison with what I saw and felt. It was not rapture, the word is too commonplace; it was better than rapture. More picturesque, deeper, happier, more various. It is impossible to describe what took place at the Cercle Militaire when Admiral Avellan appeared on the balcony of the second story. Words here are of no avail. During the Te Deum, while the choir in the church was singing "O Lord, save Thy people", through the open door were blown the triumphal strains of the Marseillaise, played by the brass bands in the street.
>
> It produced an astounding, an inexpressible impression.

Then Tolstoy goes on to say:

In an English journal a list of all the intoxicating liquor drunk during the festivities was given. The quantity mentioned was so enormous that one hardly believes it would have been possible that all the drunkards in France and Russia could account for so much in so short a time.

The speeches made were also published, but the menus were more varied than the speeches. The latter, without exception, always consisted of the same words in different combinations. The meaning of these words was always the same—we love each other tenderly and are enraptured to be so tenderly in love. Our aim is not war, not a revanche, not the recovery of the lost provinces; our aim is only peace, the furtherance of peace, the security of peace, the tranquillity and peace of Europe.

Long live the Russian Emperor and Empress! We love them, and we love peace. Long live the President of the Republic and his wife! We love them, and we love peace. Long live France, Russia, their fleets, and their armies! We love the army, and peace, and the commander of the Russian fleet.

* * * * * * *

In general, the women on all these occasions played the leading part and even directed the men. Besides the throwing of flowers and various little ribbons and the presenting of gifts and addresses, the French women in the streets threw themselves into the arms of the Russian sailors and kissed them.

* * * * * * *

There is no single speech or article in which it is not said that the purpose of all these orgies is the peace of Europe. At a dinner given by the representatives of the Russian press all speak of peace. M. Zola, who, a short time previously, had written that war was inevitable and even serviceable; M. de Vogüé, who more than once has stated the same in print—say, neither of them, a word as to war but speak only of peace. The sessions of Parliament open with speeches upon the past festivities; the speakers mention that such festivities are an assurance of peace to Europe.

It is as if a man should come into a peaceful company and commence energetically to assure everyone present that he has not the least intention of knocking out anyone's teeth, blackening their eyes, or breaking their arms, but has only the most peaceful ideas for passing the evening.

"But no one doubts it", one is inclined to say, "and if you really have such evil intentions, at least do not presume to mention them."

In many of the articles describing the festivities a naive satisfaction is clearly expressed that no one during them alluded to what it was determined, by silent consent, to hide from everybody, and that only one incautious fellow, who was immediately removed by the police, voiced what all had in their minds by shouting, "À bas l'Allemagne!"—Down with Germany!

In the same way children are often so delighted at being able to conceal an escapade that their very high spirits betray them.

Why, indeed, be so glad that no one said anything about war, if the subject were not uppermost in our minds?

* * * * * * *

No one is thinking of war; only milliards are being spent upon preparations for it, and millions of men are under arms in France and Russia.

"But all this is done to insure peace. Si vis pacem para bellum. L'empire c'est la paix. La République c'est la paix."

Then Tolstoy goes on to say:

The deluded ones are always the same eternally deluded, foolish working folk; those who, with horny hands, make all these ships, forts, arsenals, barracks, cannon, steamers, harbors, piers, palaces, halls, and places with triumphal arches; and who print all these books and papers; and who procure and transport all these pheasants and ortolans and oysters and wines which are to be eaten and drunk by those who are brought up, educated, and maintained by the working class; and who, in turn, deceive and prepare for it the worst disasters.

Always the same good-natured, foolish working folk, who, yawning, showing their white, healthy teeth, childishly and naively pleased at the sight of admirals and presidents in full dress, of flags waving above their heads, and fireworks, and triumphal music; for whom, before they can look round, there will be no more admirals, or presidents, or flags, or music, but only a damp and empty field of battle, cold, hunger, and pain; before them a murderous enemy; behind relentless officers preventing their escape; blood, wounds, putrefying bodies, and senseless, unnecessary death.

"But nothing of the kind exists; we have no bellicose intentions", it is replied. "All that has happened is the expression of mutual sympathy between two nations. What can be amiss in the triumphal and honorable reception of the representatives of a friendly nation by the representatives of another nation? What can be wrong in this, even if we admit that the alliance is significant of a protection from a dangerous neighbor who threatens Europe with war?"

It is wrong because it is false—a most evident and insolent falsehood, inexcusable, iniquitous.

It is asked, "What is wrong in France and Russia expressing their mutual sympathies for the preservation of peace?" The expression is wrong because it is false, and a falsehood once pronounced never ends harmlessly.

The devil was a murderer and the father of lies. Falsehood always leads to murder; and most of all in such a case as this.

Just what is now taking place occurred before our last Turkish War, when a sudden love on our part was supposed to have been awakened toward certain Slavonic brethren none had heard of for centuries; though French, Germans, and English always have been, and are, incomparably nearer and dearer to us than a few Bulgarians, Servians, or Montenegrins. And on that occasion just the same enthusiasm, receptions, and solemnities were to be observed blown into existence by men like Aksakov and Katkov, who are already mentioned in Paris as model patriots. Then, as now, the suddenly begotten love of Russ for Slav was only a thing of words.

Then in Moscow, as now in Paris, when the affair began, people ate, drank, talked nonsense to one another, were much affected by their noble feelings, spoke of union and of peace, passing over in silence the main business—the project against Turkey.

The press goaded on the excitement, and by degrees the Government took a hand in the game. Serbia revolted. Diplomatic notes began to circulate and semiofficial articles to appear. The press lied, invented, and fumed more and more, and in the end Alexander II, who really did not desire war, was obliged to consent to it; and what we know took place, the loss of hundreds of thousands of innocent men and the brutalizing and befooling of millions.

Now listen to this:

What took place at Paris and Toulon, and has since been fomented by the press, is evidently leading to a like or a worse calamity.

That like and worse calamity to which he refers came in the early days of August 1914—and he wrote this 20 years before. And then he said that when that day comes when will take place, as the result of these peace organizations, the league of nations formed by Germany and Austria and France and Russia, later joined by Great Britain on the one hand, and Italy on the other—when that day comes he tells us what is going to happen. And we know it did happen. He said:

The bells will peal, long-haired men will dress in golden sacks and pray for successful slaughter. And the old story will begin again, the awful customary acts.

The editors of the daily press, happy in the receipt of an increased income, will begin virulently to stir men up to hatred and manslaughter in the name of patriotism. Manufacturers, merchants, contractors for military stores will hurry joyously about their business in the hope of double receipts.

All sorts of government functionaries will buzz about, foreseeing a possibility of purloining something more than usual. The military authorities will hurry hither and thither, drawing double pay and rations, and with the expectation of receiving for the slaughter of other men various silly little ornaments which they so highly prize, as ribbons, crosses, orders, and stars. Idle ladies and gentlemen will make a great fuss, entering their names in advance for the Red Cross Society, and ready to bind up the wounds of those whom their husbands and brothers will mutilate, and they will imagine that in so doing they are performing a most Christian work.

And, smothering despair within their souls by songs, licentiousness—

And he might have said community singing—and wine, men will trail along, torn from peaceful labor, from their wives, mothers, and children—hundreds of thousands of simple-minded, good-natured men with murderous weapons in their hands—anywhere they may be driven.

They will march, freeze, hunger, suffer sickness, and die from it, or finally come to some place where they will be slain by thousands, or kill thousands themselves with no reason—men whom they have never seen before, and who neither have done nor could do them any mischief.

And when the number of sick, wounded, and killed becomes so great that there are not hands enough left to pick them up, and when the air is so infected with the putrefying scent of the "food for cannon" that even the authorities find it disagreeable a truce will be made, the wounded will be picked up anyhow, the sick will be brought in and huddled together in heaps, the killed will be covered with earth and lime, and once more all the crowd of deluded men will be led on and on till those who have devised the project weary of it, or till those who thought to find it profitable receive their spoil.

And so, once more men will be made savage, fierce, and brutal, and love will wane in the world, and the Christianizing of mankind, which has already begun, will lapse for scores and hundreds of years. And so once more the men who reaped profit from it all will assert with assurance that since there has been a war there must needs have been one, and that other wars must follow, and they will again prepare future generations for a continuance of slaughter, depraving them from their childhood.

That is what Tolstoy wrote of the peace movements of the early nineties, which were, in fact, preparation for war in the name of peace.

That, however, was not the first war organization which was organized in the name of peace. When Napoleon started to raise trouble in Europe, overthrowing the dynasties, the monarchies, the legitimate heirs to the thrones, he gave some consideration to the political and economic rights of the ordinary, common man, and so those who would rule by divine right formed an alliance to get rid of Napoleon. The slogan in the Napoleonic wars in their later stages was the same as the slogan in the last World War—the slogan of which was "Get rid of the Kaiser." The slogan in the Napoleonic wars was "Get rid of Napoleon." The Foreign Minister of Great Britain wrote to the chancelries, when he was forming his alliance against Nepoleon, and said, "We must have a league of nations after we get rid of Napoleon to maintain the status quo, to keep the legitimate heirs on the thrones, and stop the onward march of democracy." And that league was formed. It was called the "Holy Alliance."

History shows that it was hailed all over the world as a league of peace, as an organization to keep the peace of the world and to save civilization by enforcing peace upon the world. History also shows that it did not prevent any war, and it did not preserve any peace in Europe, because the alliance was based upon injustice to humanity, because it had for its ultimate purpose the defeat of the movement of democracy to protect the economic and political rights of the average man. It did not prevent the revolution in Germany in the forties; it did not prevent the war against Denmark; it did not prevent the war of 1870. It was not meant to prevent war. It was meant to keep down democracy and protect the autocracies and those upon the thrones of Europe. But the evolutionary movement of democracy to free every man and to give the same right of equality before the law to every land was too strong, and it was overthrown.

I said in the beginning I believed history is repeating itself. It may do no good to repeat that history repeats itself, and that we can learn something today from what has happened in history before. Hegel said the only thing we learn from history is that we cannot learn anything from history. However, I am not so cynical as Hegel. I believe that we can learn something from history. There is nothing new in diplomacy; there is nothing new in statecraft. Since the time of Pitt the same formulas of conquering nations are written into peace treaties and into organizations for peace.

So we come to the present moment when we have an organization which is set up to be an organization for peace. I come to the League of Nations. If this Court were not an instrument of the League of Nations, if it were not created by the League of Nations, if it were not given life and nourishment by the League of Nations, and if it were not created to be used as a tool to carry out the political purposes for which the League of Nations was founded, I would not impose upon the time of the Senate. I know that honest, able men disagree with me. If I believed that the thing for the United States to do as a matter of national policy was to join the League of Nations, I would be for the World Court. I do not believe the national policy of the United States is one that should make us enter either the League or its instrument—the League Court—because I do not consider either one of the two as instruments of peace.

What is the League of Nations? It was created by the Treaty of Versailles. The Treaty of Versailles was written by the conquering nations of the World War. They were the victors of the war. After the war was over, and after the signing of the armistice, they sat down and divided territory and the oil fields of the world among themselves, and then formed an organization to protect each other in the loot of that war.

Mr. President, we did not take any of the loot of that war. Having assisted them in acquiring that loot, men who believe it is our duty to go over and help them protect that loot would join the League of Nations; men who sincerely believe that that organization was formed to keep the peace of the world would join the League of Nations, and they think the United States should so do. According to the Treaty of Versailles, the only peace the victorious European nations would stand for was a peace that would protect them in their loot gained from the World War; and in that theory and in that idea and in that principle is contained the cause of the next war.

A league of nations to keep the peace! We got into the World War in the name of peace; we got into the World War in order "to put an end to war." That was the propaganda; that was the slogan. The Carnegie Foundation—founded by Andrew Carnegie, who, as is well known, said the United States ought again to become a part of the British Empire—at the outbreak of the World War that organization became a propaganda organization to take us into the war, and one of the pensioners of the Carnegie Foundation, who had been traveling all over this country in the interest of peace, stood in the gallery of the House of Representatives when war was declared and waved the American flag because the United States was going into the war. Leading Socialists and other leaders of pacifist organizations became high-paid war propagandists, and church pulpits became recruiting stations.

As a young Nation, something like 150 years old, we have prospered beyond the dreams of the imagination. In that comparatively short time we became a Nation of 130,000,000 people, the wealthiest and most powerful nation in the world. During that century and a half, which made us prosperous and a great Nation, we minded our own business; we attended to our own political affairs; we had friends in every land; we traded in every land; our ships were welcome in every port; we were the envy of the world; we had friends in every corner of the world. In 1914 we departed from the policy of minding our own affairs and started to mix into the politics of Europe. That was the year when the World War broke out. I say that we departed from that policy in 1914, not with military force, but the seeds were sown in 1914 that took us into the World War with an army in 1917, when the emissaries of foreign governments, acting as financial agents for Great Britain, France, and Russia, with American credit began to finance foreign governments in war. Those agents of foreign governments, for a commission and for pay, sowed the seeds by means of loans to economic entanglements which led to political entanglements. These roving ambassadors and Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan headed that conspiracy to finance with American credit foreign countries and foreign governments in a war. By 1917 the American Ambassador to the Court of St. James cabled the President of the United States that Great Britain and France were at the end of their ropes so far as loans were concerned, that the house of J. Pierpont Morgan could not carry their load any longer, that the only thing that could save her was the American taxpayers' credit, and the only way that could be obtained was to have the United States declare war.

Then, after the war, when they could not get more money out of the taxpayers' pockets, the roving ambassadors started over again with the Dawes Plan to provide a method by which private investors of the United States could be induced to buy bonds and loan the proceeds to Germany so that Germany could pay her reparations to France and Great Britain. When they could not raise any more money under that scheme, another roving ambassador by the name of Owen D. Young went over to Europe and put over another scheme by which the bankers helped Great Britain and France to collect some more reparations from Germany through loans of the United States, and our American investors held the bag.

Then came the London naval treaty, sponsored by the pacifists and peace organizations in the name of disarmament, in the name of peace. As the result of that treaty we are now going to spend a billion dollars more to increase our Navy.

I allude to these facts to show how, in the name of peace, we are led to greater armaments and greater commitments in the interest of war.

Then came the Kellogg Pact for the outlawry of war. In that pact nations renounced war as a national policy; but when Japan made war upon China and took territory from China, the pact to renounce war was not in evidence, and Japan has obtained the loot of that war. There was no advisory opinion asked for by the League of Nations in that case. Whether or not they did not dare to do so, or whether or not they thought Japan was entitled to something for what little aid she gave in the World War, and had a secret understanding that she should go ahead I do not know, but our Secretary of State disregarded the solemn treaty signed by nine powers, that in such an event we would call a conference and discuss frankly the condition that existed, and, instead, went over to Europe to seek the aid of this great peace organization—the League of Nations—and they told him to go ahead. He went as far as he could, and then he discovered that he was alone. We came out of that affair, as we usually come out of foreign conferences, as "suckers."

Mr. President, as I have already said, we have heard a great deal about peace, and we hear very many expressions of a desire to settle international controversies by peaceful means, and we are told that the World Court is the only place we can go. We forget we have settled many controversies by peaceful methods. We settled the Alabama claims with Great Britain; the North Atlantic Fisheries case, the Alaskan boundary question, and just a few days ago we settled a controversial question with Canada in the I'm Alone case.

We are a member of the International Court of Arbitration at The Hague. We have a court to which we may go if we want to go to it to settle controversies peacefully. I have still to find any man who can tell me what controversies involved in international law can be brought to the League of Nations Court which cannot also be brought to the Arbitration Court at The Hague. Herr Lauder, of The Hague, in Holland, was the first president of the court, but he is no longer a member of it. I asked him a few years ago if he knew of any instance where a case or a controversy could be brought to the League of Nations Court that could not be brought to the Court of Arbitration at The Hague and adjudicated according to the same rules of international law, and he told me he did not know of any. So entrance into this Court, the open door to the entrance into the League of Nations, cannot be based upon a theory that the World Court is the only method we have of settling international controversies by peaceful means. We have found other methods heretofore. We have other doors open now at the Hague Court of Arbitration, of which we are a member.

Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, if I believed the existing League of Nations was anything else but the repetition of the leagues of nations that have gone before for military purposes to control the destinies of other nations, I would be for the entrance of the United States into the League of Nations. I cannot, however, help but believe that the policy we have pursued for 150 years, which made us a great people, is the policy we should continue to pursue; and, having departed from it, I believe it is the policy to which we should return.

It has been explained here how political was the decision in the German-Austrian case. The debate that has taken place on the part of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], at least, is illuminating and is convincing that the decision in that case was a political decision, and therefore not within the province of a judicial tribunal but perfectly within the province and jurisdiction of a political tribunal. It has been said it was a wise decision and has proved to be wise. That may be true, but as to the wisdom of that decision, if any good results have followed from the failure of Germany and Austria to unite on tariffs, they are not due in any measure to anything the judges of that Court could foresee.

Hitler at that time did not rule Germany. The trouble has come since the Nazi movement in Germany came in conflict with the sentiment of Austria. There are those who believe that under the circumstances which now exist such a tariff union could not exist between those two countries, but that has nothing to do with the decision of the League of Nations Court.

Let me call the attention of the Senate, and for the purpose of the RECORD, to what took place in the summer of 1931. France has been financing the nations of the Little Entente for political and armament purposes. France expressed great concern for the independence of Austria; but it is well known that when the Creditanstalt of Vienna went bankrupt in 1931 and applied to the Bank of France for aid, for a loan, they could not get it unless the Austrian Government would consent to certain policies in connection with France affecting the politics of eastern Europe.

Austria refused conditions imposed, so France refused to make the loan. Then Austria applied to the Bank of England for the loan, and the Bank of England loaned the money. England thus swung the balance of power away from France in 1931 to a sympathetic attitude toward Germany with her allies. Since J. Pierpont Morgan became the impresario of roaming ambassadors of the United States, the United States has usually followed the lead of Great Britain. The other countries were in political alinement with Great Britain, and their judges have voted with Great Britain. Those under political obligation to France and in political alinement with France voted with France.

Mr. President, I began my remarks by reading a paragraph from Tolstoy's thesis on Patriotism and Christianity, written 20 years before the World War, in which as a prophet he showed how war was being prepared for in the name of peace. While peace meetings were being held in every country, millions were being spent in preparation for war. Because the same thing is going on all over the world today, I hold that his essay on Patriotism and Christianity is as prophetic today as it was 20 years before the war.

Again, to students of peace, lovers of peace, and students of the chicanery of diplomats I recommend that thesis. Since the book has laid in the Congressional Library for 35 years without having its pages cut, I hope that every peace organization in the United States will now get a copy of it and read it in order to understand how the efforts and the motives for peace are being prostituted by the makers of war.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The Senator from Oregon suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Adams | Connally | Johnson | Pope |
| Ashurst | Coolidge | Keyes | Radcliffe |
| Austin | Copeland | King | Reynolds |

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LONERGAN in the chair). Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read by the clerk certain resolutions adopted by the house of representatives of the Georgia General Assembly protesting against the entrance of this Nation into the World Court or the Court of the League of Nations.

Our house of representatives is one of the largest legislative bodies in the United States, and I think the resolutions correctly reflect the opposition on the part of the people of the State of Georgia, and I believe of the United States, to the adoption of the pending resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolution

Whereas there is now pending before the Senate of the United States a proposition to enter this Government into the World Court; and

Whereas the World Court is a creature of the League of Nations, whose members are chosen and code of procedure determined by the League of which this Government is not a member; and

Whereas a membership in the World Court would subject this Government to the control of powers whose interests are allied between themselves, but antagonistic to ours, and would by necessity submit to foreign control questions which this Government should decide for itself; and

Whereas the reservations are impractical of enforcement, and the representatives of this Government could not in decency pass upon the rights of others and decline a similar submission of its own; and

Whereas the South has particular interest regarding immigration and finance which should not be submitted to foreign judgment; and

Whereas it is wiser now to avoid foreign entanglements than when Washington advised against it: Therefore be it

Resolved, by the house of representatives that the Senators from Georgia be requested to vote and use their influence against the entry of the United States into the World Court, and that a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Senators from Georgia.

Resolved further, That this resolution be immediately transmitted to the Governor for his approval.

Approved this 18th day of January 1935.

EUGENE TALMADGE, Governor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, much has been said on the subject of our adherence to the World Court protocols. At the risk of some repetition, perhaps, I should like to review briefly certain aspects of reservations which have been before this body from time to time.

In 1923 the Secretary of State recommended to the President that we adhere to the World Court with certain reservations which he set forth. In 1926 the Senate adopted a resolution which embodied the Secretary of State's recommendations, plus the now famous Reservation 5.

The Senate reservations contained, in brief, 5 specific reservations, 1 condition, and 2 understandings.

At this point in my remarks I ask that the Senate resolution of 1926 be inserted in the RECORD. This resolution appears in full on pages 131 and 132 of the World Court hearing before the Committee on Foreign Relations, part 2, May 16, 1934, third paragraph.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Whereas the President, under date of February 24, 1923, transmitted a message to the Senate, accompanied by a letter from the Secretary of State, dated February 17, 1923, asking the favorable advice and consent of the Senate to the adherence on the part of the United States to the protocol of December 16, 1920, of signature of the statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice, set out in the said message of the President (without accepting or agreeing to the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction contained therein), upon the conditions and understandings hereafter stated, to be made a part of the instrument of adherence: Therefore be it

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring), That the Senate advise and consent to the adherence on the part of the United States to the said protocol of December 16, 1920, and the adjoined statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice (without accepting or agreeing to the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction contained in said statute), and that the signature of the United States be affixed to the said protocol, subject to the following reservations and understandings, which are hereby made a part and condition of this resolution, namely:

1. That such adherence shall not be taken to involve any legal relation on the part of the United States to the League of Nations or the assumption of any obligations by the United States under the Treaty of Versailles.

2. That the United States shall be permitted to participate through representatives designated for the purpose and upon an equality with the other states, members, respectively, of the Council and Assembly of the League of Nations, in any and all proceedings of either the Council or the Assembly for the election of judges or deputy judges of the Permanent Court of International Justice or for the filling of vacancies.

3. That the United States will pay a fair share of the expenses of the Court as determined and appointed from time to time by the Congress of the United States.

4. That the United States may at any time withdraw its adherence to the said protocol and that the statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice adjoined to the protocol shall not be amended without the consent of the United States.

5. That the Court shall not render any advisory opinion except publicly after due notice to all states adhering to the Court and to all interested states and after public hearing or opportunity for hearing given to any state concerned; nor shall it, without the consent of the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest.

The signature of the United States to the said protocol shall not be affixed until the powers signatory to such protocol shall have indicated, through an exchange of notes, their acceptance of the foregoing reservations and understandings as a part and a condition of adherence by the United States to the said protocol.

Resolved further, as a part of this act of ratification, That the United States approve the protocol and statute hereinabove mentioned with the understanding that recourse to the Permanent Court of International Justice for the settlement of differences between the United States and any other state or states can be had only by agreement thereto through general or special treaties concluded between the parties in dispute; and

Resolved further, That adherence to the said protocol and statute hereby approved shall not be so construed as to require the United States to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions of policy or internal administration of any foreign state; nor shall adherence to the said protocol and statute be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions (S. Doc. No. 1, 72d Cong., 1st sess., p. 10).

Mr. DAVIS. Those reservations were communicated formally to the various members of the League of Nations. Did the League members accept our proposals, which were stated in clear unequivocal language? Only five powers accepted. They were Albania, Cuba, Greece, Liberia, and Luxemburg.

A total of 24 powers desired to vary the reservations; so the result was that a committee of jurists was named by the League of Nations Council to consider our reservations. This committee made a study and drafted the so-called "protocol of accession."

What the League of Nations said, through its committee, was this: "We have studied your reservations, and we want you to join our Court. But we believe that your reservations should be reworded in language we understand. Therefore you can come in if you accept our version of your own reservations."

Can such discourtesy be imagined?

We were told, Mr. President, that we could not come in unless the League of Nations worked over our reservations and put them down in words that they understood, and that they would interpret.

The eminent Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in a learned discussion of the matter of adherence, quoted Viscount Grey as saying:

Let them come in with their reservations; we will construe their reservations.

This situation would be bad enough if the so-called "protocol of accession" contained everything we asked. The simple truth is that all our requirements were not met. The reservations proper, as embodied in the protocol, were so reworded that a number of points are not entirely clear. The condition was varied, and the two understandings were omitted entirely. That is how the League of Nations garbled our reservations.

We are now asked by Court proponents to accept that protocol as meeting our objections.

When this protocol was before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee it caused considerable discussion, with the result that we have before us, by a majority vote of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, a resolution to which is added a certain proviso said to give the United States certain safeguards with regard to advisory opinions.

I call the attention of the Senate to the specific language of the resolution introduced by the leader of the majority, Mr. ROBINSON.

The Robinson resolution says, page 2, lines 9 through 12:

With the clear understanding of the United States that the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not, over an objection by the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion.

And so forth.

In other words, Mr. President, the duty is on the United States to object if an advisory opinion touching an American interest is requested. That places the duty of acting on us, not on the Court or the League of Nations.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the duty should be on the Court to obtain our consent. That is, the burden should be on the Court to obtain our consent. This thought is set forth in the report of 1932 by the able Senator from Montana, Mr. Walsh. This report, known as Report 758, Seventy-second Congress, first session, says:

> With the clear understanding of the United States that the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not, without the consent of the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion.

And so forth.

It is my understanding that my former colleague in this body, Senator Reed, made such a proposal or is the author of such a proposal as that embodied in the Walsh report, which would place the burden on the Court and not on the United States.

Therefore, Mr. President, I think certain amendments should be made to the Robinson reservation which would change the language to read as follows:

> With the clear understanding of the United States that the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not, without the affirmative consent of the United States, entertain any request for any advisory opinion.

And so forth.

Yesterday I presented to the Senate a reservation which I asked at that time to have printed and lie on the table. I ask the consent of the Senate to have the reservation placed in my remarks at this particular point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The reservation is as follows:

> On line 17, after the comma, strike out "over an objection by" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "without the consent of."

So as to make the resolution read:

> Whereas the President, under date of December 10, 1930, transmitted to the Senate a communication, accompanied by a letter from the Secretary of State dated Novemeber 18, 1929, asking the favorable advice and consent of the Senate to adherence by the United States to the protocol of date December 16, 1920, of signature of the statute for the Permanent Court of International Justice, the protocol of revision of the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice of date September 14, 1929, and the protocol of accession of the United States of America to the protocol of signature of the statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice of date September 14, 1929, all of which are set out in the said message of the President dated December 10, 1930: Therefore be it
> Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring), That the Senate advise and consent to the adherence by the United States to the said three protocols, the one of date December 16, 1920, and the other two each of date September 14, 1929 (without accepting or agreeing to the optional clause for compulsory jurisdiction), with the clear understanding of the United States that the Permanent Court of International Justice shall not, without the consent of the United States, entertain any request for an advisory opinion touching any dispute or question in which the United States has or claims an interest.

Mr. DAVIS. In the first place, Mr. President, I do not think the protocol of accession contains all the protections which the Senate of the United States has requested. In the second place, if it be the desire of this body to accept that protocol, I think an amendment or reservation should be made such as I have suggested, which will change the position of the United States with respect to advisory opinions. That is, if we are going to be taken into the League Court on terms which the League of Nations and not the Senate specified, we should have the protection of taking affirmative action for consent rather than be placed in an opposite situation relative to advisory opinions. That is to say, Mr. President, without this amendment the Court could entertain a request for an advisory opinion unless we made specific objection. The situation should be that the Court cannot act on such an opinion without first securing our consent.

I should like to raise the question as to who, under the resolution before the Senate, will make the objection? If the Senate, the constitutional body to advise with the Executive on matters of foreign relations, is not in session, who will object on behalf of the United States? Will it be some administrative official or some sort of delegate? Such power is too great to delegate to one man.

Mr. President, I should like to make brief reference to a communication I have received from the Honorable George Wharton Pepper, former Senator from Pennsylvania, a distinguished member of the bar and nationally recognized student of international law and foreign relations. Says Senator Pepper:

> I think the terms of the Senate resolution of 1926 give the minimum protection which the United States should have.

Note the words "minimum protection."

The letter also says:

> It seems to me to be wholly inconsistent with the dignity of the Senate, 8 or 9 years after the passage of the resolution, to permit itself to be put in the position of allowing the impression to prevail that nonadherence in 1926 was the fault of the United States, when actually it was due to the perverse refusal of the signatories to accept the terms which we then offered. That their refusal was perverse is demonstrated by the fact that they now contend for adherence upon terms of the Root-Hurst formula, coupled with the positive assertion that this means the same thing as the original Senate resolution. It obviously does not mean the same thing but something far less satisfactory.

Senator Pepper has for years made a detailed study of the question of our adherence to the World Court, and his words should be taken as those of one in authority to speak on this subject.

I continue with the letter:

> It is then proposed to convert the unsatisfactory Root-Hurst formula into the equivalent of what its promoters claim for it by adding a reservation that our clear understanding of the formula is that it means something which it does not mean. If I were in the Senate and wished to vote for adherence, I should do it upon the precise terms of the original Senate resolution or not at all.

As Senator Pepper observes by inference, if the offer we now have is equivalent to the Senate resolutions upon which we insisted, why must we bother with all the trouble of passing a new set of resolutions?

It seems clear to me that either the proposal we have before us is the same or different from the resolutions of 1926. If the proposal is equivalent to the resolutions of 1926, we have spoken, and it only remains for the other powers to accept. They have given their answer; they have refused. It follows, therefore, that the proposal must be different; and if it is different, it must be in favor of the foreign powers, for the proposals are written by them in perverse variance to our resolutions.

I repeat Lord Grey's remark:

> Let them come in with their reservations; we will construe their reservations.

Senator Pepper further on in his letter touches on the matter of adherence being a step forward to membership in the League of Nations. He says:

> Few people realize how subtle and far-reaching has been the propaganda put forward in the interest of the League of Nations and the Court. The whole thing seems to me to be a menace to our American birthright. * * * It is like letting the wooden horse inside the fortress, and finding too late that it is full of armed Greeks.

I am in favor of a Court of International Justice; but in this Court, with its advisory opinions, I have but little faith, since it is tied in with the League of Nations. The League can ask for advisory opinions at any time, which would in many cases, I am sure, be very embarrassing to the people of the United States.

In order that the Senate may have the benefit of the entire letter addressed to me by Senator Pepper, I desire to read the letter to the Senate. It is as follows:

> PEPPER, BODINE, STOKES & SCHOCH,
> Philadelphia, January 21, 1935.
> The Honorable JAMES J. DAVIS,
> Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.
> DEAR SENATOR: I am awfully sorry that I missed your telephone call on Saturday.
> I am as much interested as ever in the World Court controversy. I think that (if we are to adhere at all) the terms of the Senate resolution adopted in 1926 give the minimum protection which the United States should have. It seems to me to be wholly inconsistent with the dignity of the Senate, 8 or 9 years after the passage of this resolution, to permit itself to be put in the position of allowing the impression to prevail that nonadherence in 1926 was the fault of the United States, when actually it was due to the perverse refusal of other signatories to accept the terms which we then offered. That their refusal was perverse is demonstrated by the fact that they now contend for adherence upon the terms of the Root-Hurst formula, coupled with the positive assertion that this means the same thing as the original Senate resolution. It obviously does not mean the same thing but something far less satisfactory. It is then proposed to convert the unsatisfactory Root-Hurst formula into the equivalent of what its promoters claim for it by adding a reservation that our clear understanding of the formula is that it means something which it does not mean. If I were in the Senate and wished to vote for adherence I should do it upon the precise terms of the original Senate resolution or not at all. Events which have occurred since 1926 have led me to feel that the whole movement for World Court adherence is really a "turning movement" to get us into the League; and as this is absolutely undesirable and more than counterbalances any fancied advantage of adherence to the Court, I should think the best thing to do is to stay out altogether.

In any event, I think the reservation of Senator NORRIS is a perfectly sound one. Each time we agree with another nation to refer a question to the World Court we are making an international agreement, which is in substance a treaty of limited scope. I think that each such treaty should be passed upon by the Senate, and that we should not confide to the Executive the general and continuing power to make a series of these limited treaties with no check upon his individual discretion.

Few people realize how subtle and far-reaching has been the propaganda put forward in the interest of League and Court. The whole thing seems to me to be a menace to our American birthright. As I said once, with your much-appreciated approval, it is like letting the wooden horse inside the fortress and finding too late that it is full of armed Greeks.

Faithfully yours,

GEORGE WHARTON PEPPER.

I hope, Mr. President, that when the reservation which I have sent to the desk comes up for action on the part of the Senate, the Senate will adopt it, because it has had the support of distinguished men who have been members of the Foreign Relations Committee and of that very noble-hearted and good soul, the leader of the Foreign Relations Committee in his day, the late Senator from Montana, Thomas J. Walsh.

Mr. BORAH. I am led to occupy the floor again on the matter of the World Court briefly, by reason of some observations made in reference to remarks presented at the time I occupied the floor on Monday. First, I refer to a statement made by the able Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], in which he said:

I invite attention to this fact because I have incorrectly referred to the Court and its judges as if they represented nationalities. Yesterday the Senator from Idaho read the names of the seven dissenting judges and he did something that made me very, very happy. As a man who has had occasion to defend the poor yellow man on the other side of the world time and time again, I was greatly pleased to have him list the Chinese justice and the Japanese justices as Teutons. I realize it was a slip of the tongue, but his idea was that it was the Teuton influence that brought about the decision of the minority judges.

I take occasion to say that the able Senator had reference, I have no doubt, to an editorial which I read. It was not a statement of mine, but I read an editorial from the Bund, a paper published in Switzerland, and that paper said:

All the rejecting judges of the World Court hail from Latin countries—

Naming them—

while the seven judges in favor of the Austro-German custom union belong to Teutonic races—united to the far-eastern Japanese judge and the Chinese judge.

Naming them—

I think the Senator confused the reference in the editorial as my own statement. I would feel somewhat chagrined, even through a slip of the tongue, to refer to the Chinese and the Japanese as members of the Teutonic race. I make that correction for the RECORD.

I have no doubt, as I said, that the Senator listening to the editorial mistook it for a statement of mine, and also that he failed to note in the editorial that the Japanese and Chinese were separated from the Teutons.

Mr. President, the able Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] upon yesterday said, after quoting from my remarks:

I will agree that it is called forth in the Covenant of the League, but I deny that it is a part of or is dependent upon the League. It is not a part of anything, no more than the Supreme Court of the United States is a part of the Congress which wrote the Constitution.

That statement by so learned and so distinguished a lawyer as the Senator from North Carolina is entitled to particular consideration. It represents a view which I know to be entertained by students of this subject, but a different view is entertained by others. I am going to discuss the latter view briefly.

I contend that this Court is an inseparable part of the League of Nations; that it was designed to be an inseparable part of the League of Nations. There was a movement to set up an independent Court which friends of the League would not consent to have done. And it was created with the design, intent, and purpose that it should be a part of a system composed of the League, of the Court, and of the Labor Bureau.

In the communication of the secretary-general to the jurists inviting them to serve on the committee to prepare a plan for the Court the secretary-general has this to say. The Court—

Is a most essential part of the organization of the League of Nations.

The jurists were invited to the conference with a view of establishing a court as a department and an essential part of the League. It was not contemplated that they should establish a separate and independent judicial tribunal.

Ex-Secretary Root, who was a member of the committee which organized the Court in the first instance, said:

We must first consider that this new Court must be provided for as a part of a system of which the League of Nations is a part. We cannot accept the invitation of the Council and recommend a plan for a court which is not going to form a part of that system.

Thus, in the very inception it was clearly understood that in creating this judicial department they were creating a department of the League. They set out to accomplish that thing and they did accomplish it.

The distinguished Senator from North Carolina said that the Supreme Court of the United States is not a part of Congress, and that is true; but it is a part and an essential part of the Government of the United States; that is what I contend with reference to this Court—that it is a part of this international government or League.

The distinguished Frenchman who was the first president of the Council of the League of Nations and was active in the creation of the League and the Court, M. Bourgeois, said:

It (the Court) must have close at hand a political organization, first, to supply it with the law which it is to apply; and, second, to give it the necessary authority and, if need be, sanctions. Similarly, the League itself must have at hand a court of law for the administration and interpretation of its laws and regulations. The political phase of the League will be as dependent upon the legal phase as the legal phase is upon the political.

It was regarded in no different sense, so far as its relation to the League was concerned, than the Supreme Court of the United States sustains to our Government. The League was an international government, as it were, possessing certain powers, and at one time designed to possess very much greater power; this judicial tribunal was to be its department for the interpretation and administration of law; and, so far as its advisory opinions are concerned, the League was given control of putting into operation the jurisdiction with reference to advisory opinions; and it has such jurisdiction now.

The advisory jurisdiction of the Court comes exclusively from the League of Nations Covenant, article 14, which I will take the time to read. It is as follows:

The Council shall formulate and submit to the members of the League for adoption plans for the establishment of a Permanent Court of International Justice. The Court shall be competent to hear and determine any dispute of an international character which the parties thereto submit to it.

Had they stopped there, there would have been an opportunity, had they followed it out, to establish an independent judicial tribunal—and, when I say "independent" I mean independent of the League—but they followed that by saying:

> The Court may also give an advisory opinion upon any dispute or question referred to it by the Council or by the Assembly (of the League).

That is the sole source of power for the advisory jurisdiction of the Court. Eliminate article 14 from the League Covenant and the authority to render an advisory opinion disappears. If the League should break down and disappear, the Court would have no power left to render advisory opinions; it would have no such jurisdiction. The League is the sole source of this authority and the League alone determines when this jurisdiction may be availed of.

That is not true with reference to the jurisdiction where nations may go voluntarily and submit a judicial question for determination. Here is the direct contact with the League, and the Court is dependent every hour of its existence in the matter of its advisory jurisdiction upon the existence of the League of Nations. The very subject which we are now discussing and which has been the subject of discussion for 12 years springs alone from the League.

Again the same distinguished Frenchman from whom I read said at the first meeting of the committee:

> May I be permitted to state why the Council of the League of Nations consider the two institutions—

That is, the League and the Court—

> as complementary the one to the other, as of necessity being organized at the same time and as being unable as long as they wish to preserve their existence to do without each other. * * * Finally, there is a last point of view which we must take in order to envisage the necessary relations between the League of Nations and the International Court of Justice and the close solidarity which exists and which will always exist to an increasing degree between their two actions.

The reporter of the committee, M. De Lapradelle, said:

> The new Court, being the judicial organ of the League of Nations, can only be created within this League.

And it was only created within the League. There was a movement to separate it entirely from the League, insofar as it could be done, with the exception of the election of judges, but it was not consented to and therefore it was created in accordance with the view expressed by former Senator Root, the legal department of the League of Nations.

At page 704 of the official proceedings of the jurists who organized the Court it is said:

> As it is to be a component part of the League, it must originate from an organization within the League and not from a body outside of it.

These discussions took place at the time they were debating the question as to just what relation should exist between the League and the Court.

Again it is said later in the report, referring to the proceedings:

> Nevertheless, as the Court is a component part of the League of Nations, it is clear that it is the duty of the Court registrar to inform the members of the League of the application through the Secretary General of the League, who is the natural chairman of communication between the members of the League and the various organizations, the Assembly, the Council, and the Court of the League of Nations.

Throughout the report, and all through the discussions, which are reported, when they were creating the Court, it was referred to as "the Court of the League of Nations."

On February 15, 1922, Sir Eric Drummond, secretary of the League, said:

> The definite establishment of the Court completes the organization of the League as laid down under the Covenant.

Lord Phillmore, the distinguished English jurist, with whose writings I know the Senator from North Carolina is familiar, says, speaking of it as a part of the League:

> I want force behind this Court. I want the sheriff behind me; and, if a decision is resisted by any state, the League of Nations must intervene.

I now refer to the report where they discussed the proposal that the judges be named by the old Hague Tribunal instead of the Council or the Assembly, in which the committee says:

> The new Court, being the judicial organ of the League of Nations, can only be created within the League.

These were the conceptions, Mr. President, which they all had at the time they were organizing the Court. It was the design and purpose of the builders of the Court, taken in connection with article 14, where alone we find the jurisdiction for advisory opinions, to make it an inseparable part of the League of Nations.

Other writers upon this subject, such as Dr. James Brown Scott, a noted authority upon international questions, say:

> The Court is the agent of the League, and therefore is intimately connected with it.

Mr. M. O. Hudson, an earnest advocate of the Court and also one who thinks that we ought to join the League, says, speaking of the Court:

> It is in many respects dependent on the continued existence of the machinery of the League; indeed, is itself a part of the machinery.

Again, in an article in Foreign Affairs in December 1922 he says:

> In May 1922 the Council of the League, acting under a power conferred by article 35 of the statute of the Court, opened it to all nations of the world, regardless of the membership in the League, on condition of the deposit of a declaration accepting the jurisdiction of the Court.

In other words, it is only a World Court by authority of the League, which authority may at any time be withdrawn.

Dr. Loder, who, I think, if I remember correctly, was president of the Court at one time, said:

> It occupies within the League of Nations a place similar to that of the judicature in many states, which is an integral part of the State and depends upon the national legislature as regards all that concerns its constitution, its organization, its powers, its maintenance, but which recognizes no master in the fulfillment of its duties, in which respect it possesses absolute liberty, and is bound only by the law which is its task to apply.

In other words, the Court has the power, in construing the law, to make, of course, its construction free from the influence of the League if it desires so to do, just as the Supreme Court of the United States is presumed to make its decisions free from the influence of any political department of the Government; but that does not separate the Supreme Court of the United States from the governmental system of the United States.

In article 415 of the Treaty of Versailles the Court is referred to as "The Permanent Court of International Justice of the League of Nations."

Sir Robert Horne, speaking before the Interparliamentary Union October 1925, remarked that although the United States does not formally take part in the League of Nations, yet he was glad to say "she appears likely to give her adhesion to one of the most important functionaries of the League, the International Court of Justice."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator intend to make it perfectly clear that the Permanent Court of International Justice is utterly free and only mechanically connected with the League? Is that the position the Senator takes?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know that I understand the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator mean to say that the Permanent Court of International Justice is free of the League of Nations? That was the language the Senator used. Is his argument addressed simply to the fact that there is a historical mechanical connection?

Mr. BORAH. No; it is not confined to the fact that there is historical connection. There is the historical connection, but it is followed by the fact that the sole jurisdiction of the Court in matters of advisory opinions is found in the Covenant and is exercised only when the League acts. The Court is made a part of the League and is dependent for its existence upon the League.

Mr. President, I am not contending that the Court has not the power when its jurisdiction is invoked and processes are put into action to render an opinion entirely free. But by reason of its freedom to act, it may, in rendering advisory opinions, base such opinions on political or economic grounds as well as legal. It is not constrained to act upon judicial grounds alone.

Mr. BAILEY. It is free?

Mr. BORAH. It is free to render its opinions.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; free to take cognizance of every consideration looking to justice, regardless of the League of Nations or anyone else.

Mr. BORAH. I think that is a correct statement. It is free to do so; it has the power to do so. I discussed the other day the question as to what happened in one instance when they were exercising that power, but I do not contend that that opinion came directly through the influence of the League itself at the time. It came from political influences exerted by the nations interested.

In one of the latest publications of the League of Nations, a booklet entitled "The League of Nations", on pages 15 and 16, under date of January 1920 to June 1930, is this quotation:

> For a clear understanding of the actual record of the League it is perhaps necessary to give a few essential indications upon the organizations. The main organs (of the League) are the Assembly, the Council, and the Permanent Secretariat, with the two essential wings, the Permanent Court of International Justice and the International Labor Organization.

Ex-Governor Sweet, of Colorado, in the Yale Daily News, November 25, 1925, said:

> Senator BORAH declares that the Permanent Court of International Justice is not a world court but is a League of Nations court. I agree with the Senator that it is a League of Nations court. It is a department of the League and an instrument created by it.

Hon. Josephus Daniels, now Ambassador to Mexico, has declared:

> The World Court is only a step into the League.

Justice De Bustamante, one of the judges on the World Court, has declared:

> Any tempest that beats down upon the League will inevitably react upon the Court.

At the time of the establishment of the Court we find the following was placed in the record:

> The Council of the League of Nations reserves the right to rescind or amend this resolution, which shall be communicated to the Court, and on the receipt of such communication by the registrar of the Court and to the extent determined by the new resolution, existing declarations shall cease to be effective except in regard to disputes which are already before the Court.

Mr. President, that concludes what I have to say in justification of the statement which I made to which the able Senator from North Carolina was replying. I felt, upon the record and in view of the relationship growing out of the advisory jurisdiction of the Court, that it is a part of the system of the League of Nations, that as to its advisory jurisdiction that jurisdiction is controlled—the jurisdiction, mind you—by the League. It was put into operation and initiated by the League, and therefore is necessarily a part of the League. In my opinion that is the understanding entirely throughout Europe by all the advocates of the League and of the Court. In other words, it constitutes a part of that system.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator concede that since the advisory jurisdiction is derived exclusively from the League of Nations, the League of Nations would thereby be prevented from submitting a request for an advisory opinion touching any country outside of the League of Nations?

Mr. BORAH. The League of Nations would have absolute control of the kind of question and the nature of the question submitted. Undoubtedly it could submit questions which did not have anything to do with the operations of the League of Nations, and that did happen in the German-Austrian case.

Mr. BAILEY. Could the League of Nations submit a request for an advisory opinion concerning a controversy between any nation and another nation, one or the other not being a member of the League of Nations? What power would the League of Nations have and where would it get its jurisdiction save from its members?

Mr. BORAH. The nearest approach to that proposition is found in the East Karelia case. There Russia was not a member of the League of Nations and objected to the Court having jurisdiction to render an advisory opinion. Finland was a member of the League of Nations. Finland and Russia were unable to agree to submit it to the Court and Russia protested against submission to the Court; nevertheless, Finland went to the League of Nations and asked that an advisory opinion be requested upon the part of the League.

The Council or Assembly, I have forgotten which, requested an advisory opinion as to the treaty involved. The Court refused the advisory opinion 7 to 8, or some division, I may not be accurate as to the division. After the advisory opinion was refused, the Council of the League of Nations passed a resolution of censure upon the Court for not entertaining the jurisdiction.

Mr. BAILEY. But the Court did not respond to the resolution requesting the opinion.

Mr. BORAH. No. It was divided upon that question.

Mr. BAILEY. It thereby set a precedent that it would not undertake to thrust a controversy between a member nation and a nonmember nation into the Court by way of a request for an advisory opinion.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; if we may call a 7-to-8 opinion a precedent, that would be a precedent.

Mr. BAILEY. I think we so regard such opinions in our courts here.

Mr. BORAH. The majority opinion at least settles the controversy in that case. It is a poor precedent.

Mr. BAILEY. And it is the precedent until reversed, is it not?

Mr. BORAH. I concede it would be regarded as a precedent until reversed.

Mr. BAILEY. If the League of Nations should undertake to have the Court render an opinion nominally and the Court should respond and undertake to give an advisory opinion concerning any matter in which this country claimed or had an interest, and the Court should assume jurisdiction, our resolution of accession gives us absolute right to offer an objection and that is an unqualified estoppel. That is the resolution now before us. We go in understanding and making it perfectly clear that if there is any attempt to thrust upon us any advisory opinion whatsoever, one objection from us stops the Court and all proceedings. That is perfectly clear, is it not, to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BORAH. If the United States has an interest or claims an interest in a matter and the Court undertakes to entertain jurisdiction, as I understand the resolution, over our objection it could not entertain it. But that leaves open entirely the other question, which is that upon matters relating to European affairs in which we could not claim an interest and did not have any interest, there would be no way for us to prevent the Court entertaining jurisdiction.

Mr. BAILEY. Why should we wish to undertake to interfere with those affairs?

Mr. BORAH. Because I do not want to get into the affairs of Europe. I do not want to see this Government adhere to a Court which can give advice relative to the political affairs of Europe.

Mr. BAILEY. But if we could not prevent it, that fact would not tend in the remotest degree to make us responsible for it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. With his indulgence, I wish to ask the Senator from Idaho this question: Manifestly under present conditions, while the United States is not a member of the Court, and assuming that the present protocol should not be agreed to, if either the Assembly or the Council should request an advisory opinion touching a matter in which the United States has or claims an interest, the Court would have jurisdiction to entertain the opinion and to render a decision, would it not?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it could render an opinion.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the United States adheres to the pending protocol and adopts the resolution now before the Senate, and either the Council or the Assembly asks for an opinion or a request for an advisory opinion is made, the United States would first have the same right that any member of the League of Nations would have to block the opinion in the Council or the Assembly; and if it should not be done there, in the end if it should interpose an objection after conversations which are contemplated, it could prevent the rendition of the advisory opinion. That is correct, I believe.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator mean by an objection?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I concede that.

Mr. ROBINSON. So that it is perfectly clear that the interests of the United States are far better safeguarded and protected, assuming we have interests that might be involved by an advisory opinion, through adherence to the protocol than through nonadherence.

Mr. BORAH. I answered the Senator correctly and candidly, I believe, that that does not meet what seems to me is the insuperable objection, which is that as a member of the Court, after adhering to the Court and becoming a member of the Court, we are in a wholly different situation with reference to all affairs in Europe than we would be if we were not a member, because if we were not a member it would be of no concern to us whatever what the Court might do in Europe. If we are not a member, we would in no sense be concerned as to what the Court should do and in no sense would we be involved.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why is that true? The Court merely considers and renders a decision in cases which are referred to it by the parties to those cases. We have an American who is now a judge of that Court. We have had an American judge on the Court for practically all the period of its existence. I cannot conceive of how membership in the Court would involve us in European controversies. Of course, European controversies, it is hoped by the advocates of the Court, would come to the Court. Far better that they should come there than that they should be resolved by other processes partaking of the nature of military conflicts. But the mere fact that a United States citizen sits on the bench which decides a case would not involve the United States in war or conflict.

Mr. BORAH. The mere fact that a citizen of the United States sat upon the bench would not be of very much concern to us; but when the Government itself adheres to the Court and becomes a member of the Court, and sends its judge there as the result of its membership in it, then a wholly different relationship seems to me to obtain from that time on. The Government as a government has a relationship and has a certain responsibility in regard to it. It is different.

They might come over here, as they did for tactical reasons, and select a citizen of the United States to be a member of that Court. But they still want and the friends of the Court want something different from that. They want the Government to be a member of the Court and they want the Government to adhere to the Court. That is what the controversy is over. The present judge of the Court, Mr. Kellogg, is there, but he is merely a citizen of the United States sitting upon a court of which we are not a member and with which we have nothing to do.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The Senator does not infer that our adherence to the Court will make the least bit of difference in the status of Judge Kellogg, does he?

Mr. BORAH. I think it will make a vast difference.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. In what way, may I ask?

Mr. BORAH. At the present time Mr. Kellogg has been selected by the Council, and we are not a member of the Court. They selected him, and he had a right, as a citizen, to accept if he desired to do so. He does not represent this Government. He has not the prestige of the Government behind him. He has no connection whatever with the Government. He might have been selected from some island of the Pacific, and his action would not be binding in any sense upon us, nor would he be representing our Government or speaking with the authority of our Government or the prestige of the Government.

If that be not true, why is it that the Senator wants us to join the Court? Why not leave Mr. Kellogg where he is? Why do we not refrain from adhering and leave matters as they are?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, if I may continue, that is not the point at all. I think it will be found that there would be not the least bit difference in the status of the judge, who happens to be an American. If what the Senator surmises is true, then the judges who are on the Court today represent their respective countries, which, of course, they do not. They were nominated as was the case, for example, when Judge Moore was nominated. We had a right to make a nomination, because nominations come from the countries which are parties to the panels of the International Court of Arbitration; but we refused even to make a nomination. The nomination of Mr. Justice Moore, I think, was made by the group from the State of Italy.

The justices in no sense represent their nations. Nationality is not at all a basis of membership. If it had been a basis of membership, the American who has sat on the Court would always have been disqualified; but if we read the way in which the Court is set up we find that national qualifications are not there at all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we are arguing now the question of whether there is really any justification for this country's adhering at all. If the Senator is correct, why do we want to go into the Court? Why do we want to adhere, if Mr. Kellogg is there now, and we give no additional authority, do not change the situation, give no additional authenticity to the Court by adhering? What is the object?

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. The answer, if I may reply to the Senator from Idaho, was made in the opening statement by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. We have all the advantages of the Court. The only difference in our status will be a declaration that we are willing to support and sustain the Court from a financial standpoint.

It is true that we can take cases to the Court at the present time. It is true that we have had an American judge on the Court; but we have not contributed one cent to the maintenance of the Court. I think the Senator from Arkansas called that a "sponging" relationship. I should not call it that. I should call it merely a straight out-and-out dishonest relationship. I believe that if we are to have the advantages of the Court we should help pay the bills of the Court.

Another reason why we should adhere—and it is not a legal one at all—is a very simple sentimental reason. While we have the right to go into the Court, as long as the Senate of the United States has refused to give its advice and consent to our adhering to the Court it is, of course, very, very natural that the Executive, the State Department, or the United States would not submit cases to the Court.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is also true that by adhering to the Court the United States Government does give a measure of moral support which, I think, the Court is entitled to if we are to employ it as an agency for the settlement of our disputes.

Mr. BORAH. By adhering to the Court we give the prestige of the United States to the Court.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. We put the United States behind the Court, the same as the other nations are behind it which are members of it.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. May I further state——

Mr. BORAH. But let me say, before the Senator interrupts again, of course I know that theoretically the Senator is correct when he says that the judges do not represent their nations in the sense that an ambassador represents his nation; not in that sense; but still, the French judge is a Frenchman, and if, as in the advisory foundation, he acts politically, he will act for France.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, there is not any way in which a court can be created and that consideration be obviated. If the court which the Senator from Idaho proposed in 1923 were established—a court that should have absolute jurisdiction of all international questions, thus completely abolishing war and all other methods of settling international disputes—the Frenchman would still be a Frenchman, the American would still be an American, the German would still be a German. There is not any process with which I am familiar by which that condition can be changed.

How does the Senator apply that to the court he proposed in his World Court resolution to which I refer? He proposed a resolution for the creation of a court with the broadest jurisdiction that it was ever proposed in the history of the world to give to any tribunal. There was no limitation as to the manner in which judges might be selected, or as to the localities from which judges might be chosen; but they were to be invested with unqualified and unlimited jurisdiction to determine every question that might possibly arise involving international relationships under a code which the Senator conceived should be agreed upon.

If the Senator fears the limited jurisdiction which it is proposed shall be given in this case, how is it that he brought himself to the conviction that he would create an international court with powers analogous, as he said in his resolution, to those exercised by the Supreme Court of the United States in matters of controversy between the States? How is it that the Senator is willing to give the Frenchman and others sitting on the court the unlimited and unrestrained power to determine every question, whether it be a political or an economic question which might arise under a code which the Senator conceives should be formulated and agreed upon?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the basis of the court which I had in mind was a code of international law. If I could have a court with a code of international law, there never has been a time when I should not have been glad to support it. I want a court, acting under the restraint of law, not a tribunal advising politically.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; but the Frenchman who sat upon the bench of such a court would still be a Frenchman.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is no more relief in the Senator's resolution from that difficulty, if it be a difficulty, than there is in the present case. There is no way of divesting a man of his blood, or his relationship, or his national tendencies, or national sympathies. If the Senator would give the court which he proposes unlimited power to pass upon any international question, how is it that he finds objection to giving the Permanent Court of International Justice jurisdiction only in those cases as to which the United States consents it shall have jurisdiction?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think I can differentiate the two proposals, at least from my viewpoint.

The difference arises out of the fact that in one case we have a body of men acting under a code of law. The objection to this Court, as I endeavored to make plain the other day, arises out of the fact that so far as the advisory jurisdiction is concerned, it is a court which is not acting under a code of laws at all. It is a court which is acting upon any dispute or any question, political or economic, which a political body sees fit to submit to it. And when politics comes in be assured they will yield to national interests.

The Senator referred to the matter of the Supreme Court of the United States passing upon questions between the States. It was that idea which I had in mind at the time I undertook to formulate my ideas with regard to it.

The Senator will recall that when this matter of creating a court came before the Constitutional Convention, the question arose as to whether they should give it jurisdiction over controversies between sovereign States. The Constitutional Convention finally decided that they would give it jurisdiction over controversies between sovereign States. Then the question arose as to what they would do with a judgment against a sovereign State after it was rendered; how would the Court enforce a judgment against a sovereign State?

In the first instance Mr. Madison thought it would be sound to call in the military forces of the United States; but the Constitutional Convention finally reached the conclusion that while they would give the Court jurisdiction over controversies between sovereign States, they would allow the judgment to be enforced, if at all, through power of public opinion; and, in my opinion, that is the way the matter stands today.

I should have no objection whatever to—indeed, I should be in favor of—an international court if we had a code of international law, and if all questions which had to be decided would have to be decided in accordance with the principles of the code under which the court were operating. Within that realm the court could be kept deciding judicial questions, and judicial questions alone. If you confine the court to the law you have a court, otherwise you have a political conclave.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. If we should undertake to establish a code of international law prior to the constitution of the Permanent Court of International Justice, there would necessarily be legislation. Somebody would have to establish the code. That is agreed to, I am sure.

Mr. BORAH. The nations of the world would have to agree upon a code.

Mr. BAILEY. Then that would predicate something in the nature of a league of nations——

Mr. BORAH. Not at all. The very opposite of a league of nations—a political organization.

Mr. BAILEY. Or an assembly of nations——

Mr. BORAH. Not at all.

Mr. BAILEY. Or a concert of nations.

Mr. BORAH. The nations would have to agree upon a code of international law.

Mr. BAILEY. Exactly.

Mr. BORAH. They have, in different instances, agreed upon certain principles of international law—that is, a limited number of nations.

Mr. BAILEY. And the Senator desires above all things to avoid anything that would smell of or suggest a league or a concert of nations of a formal character.

Mr. BORAH. I certainly do.

Mr. BAILEY. How could we get the code then?

Mr. BORAH. We would get the code just the same as we would get a treaty. Nations meet and make a treaty. That treaty would be a code of international law.

Mr. BAILEY. Somebody would have to draw up the code.

Mr. BORAH. Of course the United States would have to agree upon the code. It would be a voluntary act.

Mr. BAILEY. A committee appointed by some nations would have to draw it up.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him at that point?

Mr. BAILEY. I want to dwell upon that a little bit further.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Then, since the laws of living things must change from time to time, there would be amendments to the code, or even new articles in the code. That would require either a concert by way of a treaty or a concert by way of a league or an assembly, I assume.

Mr. BORAH. There might be a necessity of amending the code, and that would be done in the same way that the original code was adopted, by agreement; and if there was no voluntary agreement upon the part of the nations, no code would be agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. But, on the other hand, a court of international justice might conceivably develop a common law of nations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that was the idea of John Bassett Moore. John Bassett Moore felt that if this court should be confined to the decision of purely judicial questions voluntarily submitted by the nations, in time their decisions would constitute a kind of international common law. For that reason he was opposed to the advisory jurisdiction, which, in his opinion, undermined and destroyed the possibility of building up a code of international law. If the court were limited to the determination of judicial questions voluntarily submitted to it by the two nations which were interested, they might in time come to build up a code of international law. But that is wholly different from a political body dragging nations before its advisory tribunal which may include advice on political matters.

Mr. BAILEY. That is the normal process of building up one. It is by judicial determination rather than by legislation.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, referring now to the resolution of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] introduced in the Senate on February 14, 1923, should such court be established and the United States have a treaty with a foreign nation respecting the subject of immigration or any other related subject, and a difference of interpretation, or a dispute arose between the parties to that treaty, under the Senator's resolution, the world court which he proposed would take jurisdiction of the subject and decide it, and the United States would have no recourse. Is not that true?

Mr. BORAH. No; that is not true.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why?

Mr. BORAH. Simply for the reason that the Senator from Idaho did not intend by his code of international law to permit that kind of questions to be considered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Wait a minute, though. That is the very point. I will show the Senator that he did. That is, the legal intention of his language was that all international questions arising under a code and all questions arising under the treaties should be submitted to the court.

That a judicial substitute for war should be created (or if existing in part, adapted and adjusted) in the form or nature of an international court, modeled on our Federal Supreme Court in its jurisdiction over controversies between our sovereign States, such court to possess affirmative jurisdiction—to hear and decide all purely international controversies as defined by the code or arising under treaties * * *.

Under that language there is not a lawyer in the Senate who wishes to preserve his reputation as a lawyer who will rise and say that that would not submit to the compulsory jurisdiction of the world court proposed to be created by the Senator from Idaho any question that might arise under a treaty between this Government and any other government relating to the subject of immigration or relating to any other subject that was involved in the treaty. The language is so comprehensive that it does not require legal interpretation. It is explicit. It is not that the question must arise under a code, but it is "or" "that arises under a treaty."

So that all questions which arise under any treaty, either of the past or of the future, are subject to the compulsory jurisdiction of the court which the Senator would create. And yet he has stood on the floor of the Senate for years and years complaining that the United States is proposing to do a dangerous and a damnable thing by going into a Court whose jurisdiction is expressly limited by its statute and by provisions in the statute that jurisdiction cannot be extended without the consent of the United States; the jurisdiction is limited to only such cases as the United States may choose to refer to it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator is quite correct. I advocated then and I advocate now an international judicial body governed by a code, confined in its decisions to a code and to the construction of treaties. I advocated and now advocate a court governed by law; not a tribunal governed by politics. I have no modification to make of the position which I took at the time. I would be perfectly willing, as I have said many times, if the Court could be confined to judicial questions, to permit it to pass upon judicial questions, and I realize, as the Senator has said, that when they were passing upon a judicial question it would be a Frenchman and a German and an American that were passing upon a judicial question. But what I was seeking to do was to confine the action of the international judicial body to judicial determination, and to keep it out of what I would conceive to be the politics of any country, and particularly of Europe.

Mr. President, it is not very material what my position has been upon these matters—it is not even material if I am inconsistent—but as a matter of fact I am not inconsistent with the position which I took then, because this matter was being proposed at the very time that I was opposing the advisory powers of the present so-called "Permanent Court of International Justice." It was the desire to get into a court and to relieve it from those duties which seemed to me to be quasi-political or quasi-economic. I am opposing a court not governed by laws, by a code; I am opposing a so-called "court" whose jurisdiction is controlled by a political body and whose opinions may be based on political principles.

Mr. ROBINSON. In connection with the remarks that have been made touching the resolution heretofore offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I ask to have that resolution printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

Senate Resolution 441

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 13 (calendar day, Feb. 14), 1923.

Mr. BORAH submitted the following resolution, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

Resolution

Whereas war is the greatest existing menace to society and has become so expensive and destructive that it not only causes the stupendous burdens of taxation now afflicting our people but threatens to engulf and destroy civilization; and

Whereas civilization has been marked in its upward trend out of barbarism into its present condition by the development of law and courts to supplant methods of violence and force; and

Whereas the genius of civilization has discovered but two methods of compelling the settlement of human disputes, namely, law and war, and therefore, in any plan for the compulsory settlement of international controversies, we must choose between war, on the one hand, and the process of law, on the other; and

Whereas war between nations has always been and still is a lawful institution, so that any nation may, with or without causes, declare war against any other nation and be strictly within its legal rights; and

Whereas revolutionary wars or wars of liberation are illegal and criminal, to wit: high treason; and

Whereas under existing international law wars of aggression between nations are perfectly lawful; and

Whereas the overwhelming moral sentiment of civilized people everywhere is against the cruel and destructive institution of war; and

Whereas all alliances, leagues, or plans which rely upon force as the ultimate power for the enforcement of peace carry the seeds either of their own destruction or of military dominancy to the utter subversion of liberty and justice; and

Whereas we must recognize the fact that resolutions or treaties outlawing certain methods of killing will not be effective so long as war itself remains lawful; and that in international relations we must have not rules and regulations of war but organic laws against war; and

Whereas in our Constitutional Convention of 1787 it was successfully contended by Madison and Hamilton that the use of force when applied to people collectively—that is, to states or nations—was unsound in principle and would be tantamount to a declaration of war; and

Whereas we have in our Federal Supreme Court a practical and effective model for a real international court, as it has specific jurisdiction to hear and decide controversies between our sovereign States; and

Whereas our Supreme Court has exercised this jurisdiction, without resort to force, for 135 years, during which time scores of controversies have been judicially and peaceably settled that might otherwise have led to war between the States and thus furnishes a practical exemplar for the compulsory and pacific settlement of international controversies; and

Whereas an international arrangement of such judicial character would not shackle the independence or impair the sovereignty of any nation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the view of the Senate of the United States that war between nations should be outlawed as an institution or means for the settlement of international controversies by making it a public crime under the law of nations, and that every nation should be encouraged by solemn agreement or treaty to bind itself to indict and punish its own international war breeders or instigators and war profiteers under powers similar to those conferred upon our Congress under article 1, section 8, of our Federal Constitution, which clothes the Congress with the power "to define and punish offenses against the law of nations"; and be it further

Resolved, That a code of international law of peace based upon equality and justice between nations, amplified and expanded and adapted and brought down to date, should be created and adopted.

Second. That a judicial substitute for war should be created (or, if existing in part, adapted and adjusted) in the form or nature of an international court, modeled on our Federal Supreme Court in its jurisdiction over controversies between our sovereign States, such court to possess affirmative jurisdiction to hear and decide all purely international controversies, as defined by the code or arising under treaties, and to have the same power for the enforcement of its decrees as our Federal Supreme Court, namely, the respect of all enlightened nations for judgments resting upon open and fair investigations and impartial decisions and the compelling power of enlightened public opinion.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Idaho a question? If I understand the Senator correctly, if the Court has no jurisdiction to render an advisory opinion, he would be for it?

Mr. BORAH. I have said if the advisory jurisdiction were eliminated I would not oppose it.

Mr. CONNALLY. I did not know that the Senator said so.

Mr. BORAH. I would go a long way toward supporting an international judicial body if I thought that there were eliminated from it the constant influences of politics and nationalism.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, permit me to ask the Senator one further question. Assuming, then, that he would be willing to trust the Court and be willing that this country should be a member of the Court; assuming that the judges were men of high ability and integrity; admitting that the League would be honeycombed and influenced by politics; if the Senator would have enough confidence in the Court for us to join it, does he not think that a little judicial advice from men of high ability and high integrity would have a good influence to calm down the passions and political intrigue that the League might otherwise let loose?

Mr. BORAH. I would not want the Court to be turned into an attorney general for the League or for any other political body. If a constitutional amendment were proposed authorizing the Supreme Court of the United States to entertain advisory opinions of any matter of dispute or any question which might arise in the United States, I doubt very much if the Senator from Texas would support it, and yet we would be living under one government, one people, one constitution. I venture to say that if we should authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to entertain and render advisory opinions upon any question of dispute or any question which should arise, you would destroy it inside of a quarter of a century.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator not concede that the advisory opinions are assumed to be on legal questions and not on political questions?

Mr. BORAH. If you confine them to legal questions, but the Senator could not confine them to legal questions and permit the Court to render an advisory opinion, I suspect. I certainly would not permit it to render an advisory opinion upon any dispute or upon any questions which a political body saw fit to submit to the Court. You would then destroy the Supreme Court in a decade. Who is there in this Chamber who would vote to give the Supreme Court of the United States the jurisdiction you are giving this Court? Who would turn the Supreme Court of the United States into an adviser of the President or of the Congress?

Mr. BAILEY. By way of commentary on the position taken by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], it appears that precisely the same sort and tenor of suggestion was made shortly after the Union was formed concerning the Supreme Court of the United States—that it could not function and that its jurisdiction ought not to be recognized by one of the States in the absence of a code of laws to guide it. That was in the first case of Rhode Island against Massachusetts. The Attorney General, stating the case for Massachusetts, said:

Massachusetts maintains that before she can be called to do this—

That is, submit her controversies to judicial decision in the Supreme Court of the United States—a court must be established and a law made or code propounded suitable to the decision of the case. The merits of any case depend on the conformity of and past conduct to a previously prescribed rule of law, but if there is no such rule, there can be no test of such merits and no decision of them. If there is no law regulating the intercourse between the States of the Union, there is no rule for settling a controversy that may arise between two or more States by reason of such intercourse. The court, having no law to expound, cannot settle a judicial controversy, depending, as all such controversies do, on the question of whether the conduct complained of, as in the case presented, conformed to or departed from the obligations which are imposed by law.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask, Mr. President, from what the Senator is reading?

Mr. BAILEY. It happens that this is a pamphlet with the subject matter the Supreme Court and the World Court, 1832 to 1932, by the Honorable Charles Warren, author of the Supreme Court of the United States in our History, published in Washington by the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, and it appears that the title of the pamphlet is "International Conciliation."

To this argument the counsel for Rhode Island replied that the Supreme Court, like any competent court, in the absence of any statutory provision, would govern itself by the principles of justice, equity, and good conscience, and not dream that any different rule was furnished by the common law, or the civil law, or by any State law.

This reply was upheld by the Court.

I think, Mr. President—I do not intend to detain the Senate long—that nothing is better established than that the statute law is necessarily inadequate. Legislatures and parliaments cannot comprehend the relationships of men. They are so complex; they are so infinite. Likewise are those of nations.

The historical process in the development of the law is not statutes by parliaments and legislatures; it is custom determined by the practices of men and the approval of society and judicial decisions. While we do not like the conception of court-made law, the courts have throughout the entire history of jurisprudence reached out into the controversies of men and applied to them the principles or the instincts for justice, the sense of conscience in the breasts of human beings, thereby developing the great system of law under which men live everywhere.

The remarks that I have made are peculiarly true of equity. And, of course, equity is law in the broader sense. The definition of equity implies that it is never to be written, because the moment that it is written as the law it becomes inelastic.

Equity, if I may venture a general statement, applies the elasticity of the conscience to correct the rigidity of both the written and the unwritten law. So I conceive, Mr. President, that if we are to proceed in the course approved by precedent and of history we would not undertake to write the law first and then establish the court. That would be a very difficult undertaking.

Imagine the nations of the earth getting together and writing a code. But we establish a court, and dedicate it to justice, and out of it in the long process of human experience and national trial and just adjudication we find the ultimate system of international law and international peace, and erect thereby the standards of civilization throughout the earth.

I take it that that is the great idea which the Permanent Court of International Justice presents to us, and I will agree that it is an ideal. I do not know how men may work or parliaments may strive except in the direction of ideals. They are the only standards that guide us forward. So I commit myself notwithstanding all the criticism, to this proposition wholly because it holds out before me the light of an ultimate system of justice that will take the place of the contentions and the irritations and the controversies and the greed and the overbearing and the wars and the bloodshed which now are resorted to and vainly resorted to, for the settlement of questions which inevitably would be settled by the accepted standards of righteousness and justice administered by a court.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

| | | | |

| Caraway | Hastings | Nye | Walsh |
| Carey | Hatch | O'Mahoney | Wheeler |
| Clark | Hayden | Pittman | |

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to repeat the announcement made on a previous roll call concerning the absence of certain Senators and the reasons therefor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the innumerable arguments in this Chamber relative to what the World Court could do to us if we entered it; I have listened with equal interest to the arguments presented as to what they could not do to us after we entered it. I wish today to have the opportunity of addressing myself on this floor to my constituents in North Carolina especially, in whom I have a personal interest; in other words, I, as does every other Senator in this Chamber, believe in self-preservation.

It is natural for me to say—and I unhesitatingly say—that today I find myself in an enviable position, enviable, sir, insofar as my personal individual interests are concerned, because I find myself delightfully in accord with the great majority of the thinking people, the voters, of North Carolina. I am, therefore, happy at this hour to be availed of the opportunity of making doubly sure to the people in North Carolina why I oppose my country, our country, our United States, entering the World Court; and, secondly, Mr. President, I wish to address myself on this floor to the great American people, the rank and the file, the masses of these United States, in order that they may be sure of the fact that I am standing here at this hour opposing, to the last breath in my body, the entrance of our great Nation into the World Court which will unquestionably and eventually involve us in great trouble if the step proposed shall be taken.

I was greatly impressed a short while ago when I lifted from the top of my desk here on the floor of the Senate a message from our great President, directed to the Congress of the United States, and my eyes fell upon these lines, which read:

> We should not too largely blame our ancestors, for they found such teeming riches in woods and soil and water—such abundance above the earth and beneath it—such freedom in the taking, that they gave small heed to the results that would follow the filling of their own immediate needs. Most of them, it is true, had come from many peopled lands where necessity had invoked the preserving of the bounties of nature. But they had come here for the obtaining of a greater freedom, and it was natural that freedom of conscience and freedom of government should extend itself in their minds to the unrestricted enjoyment of the free use of land and water.

O Mr. President, years upon years ago our ancestors found their respective ways from those restricted portions of the earth in continental Europe to the shores and the fertile soils and virgin forests of America—and why? As has been well and truly said today by the President of the United States to the Congress, it was in order that there might be freedom of government. I stand here at this hour in inspirational and in heavenly accord with Franklin D. Roosevelt, that great, God-fearing, courageous leader of this the strongest, the most powerful Nation on earth today. Those people left those other lands and planted their feet firmly upon the virgin soil of this great North American Continent in order, as has been said by our President, that there might be freedom of government.

We have within almost a moment's time, insofar as comparisons might be made in the recording of history for thousands upon thousands of years past, made indisputably the greatest progress of any nation the world has ever known. I cite to you, Mr. President, the fact that our phenomenal progress has been due almost wholly to the fact that we have looked after our own business; we have kept aflame the fires in our own homesteads, and have kept our noses out of the business of the other nations of the world until at last gloriously we have arrived at that point where today the eyes of all the nations of all the world are turned inspirationally upon this beloved land of ours which has freed them with freedom of government. So long as America carries out the original intentions of our forefathers and ancestors, then just so long and no longer will we of the North American Continent, the 48 States of this Union, be supreme in the affairs of the world.

Mr. President, I say to you, and I wish at this hour to say to the great American people, 125,000,000 of them, that they do not want their country, their Government, now to enter the World Court because, as I said upon the floor of this Chamber a few days ago, entrance into the World Court means entrance by way of the cellar door, the back door, or the side door, into the League of Nations—because I argue that if the League of Nations had never been created, then the World Court would not be in existence now.

We have had enough. We have learned our lesson. When I say "we", I refer to the American people around whose necks there has been hung a burden of taxation which will be transferred from one generation unto another as a result of the forty-odd billions of dollars which those across the seas and whose language is not ours cost us during the World War, a burden of $40,000,000,000 in taxation that hangs around the shoulders of every living, breathing person within the confines of this America today, a burden to descend to the shoulders of our children and their children's children. To propose again, after that lesson, that we should inject ourselves into any foreign controversy, that we should place ourselves with those abroad who are our enemies, is to me unbelievable, unthinkable.

I want to make respectful inquiry, Mr. President, first, as to what we of the States are to gain by entering the World Court? What have we to gain? What have we to settle now? We have no boundary questions. We have not now any international problems of immigration. We have not now any subjects for consideration by our enemies involving problems of tariff. We have not now for consideration by our enemies any problems of debts; but therein lurks the "nigger in the wood pile." If they get us into the World Court, they will get us into trouble. The first thing they will be wanting to do over yonder will be to wipe out the barriers of debt existing between the United States of America and those of the Allies in continental Europe.

Insofar as I am concerned, Mr. President, I do not want to mix up with "them furriners." [Laughter.]

We are told this is the "Permanent" Court of International Justice. It will be just about as permanent and will last just about as long after we get into it as that little snowball lasted when it went to a warmer climate. Insofar as international justice is concerned, I do not want it. The American people do not want any international justice. The people down in North Carolina who vote—I was about to say nine out of ten, but I will say ninety-eight out of one hundred—do not want any such justice as those foreigners give us.

The people of the United States do not want any foreign justice or international justice. They want American justice. If anybody doubts that statement, let that anybody or let somebody go to anyone of the 3,200 counties in the United States, into any township, and direct his inquiries, respectively, to the high and to the low, to the intellectual and to the ignorant, to the rich and to the poor, and he will find that Americans, rich or poor, black or white, intelligent or ignorant, are tired of fooling with "them furriners", because we have been stung too much already. Ask our people about it and see what they say.

I say it is a pity, indeed, that the whole American people will not be accorded an opportunity of saying for themselves whether their United States shall enter the World Court—because it is not yours, it is not mine solely; it belongs to the people. They are the ones who are paying the taxes and they ought to be the ones to say whether or not we want international justice, of which we have had a stomachful, or whether we want good old-fashioned American justice such as we have had here since the days of George Washington.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REYNOLDS. With pleasure.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know whether the Senator has used or read the names of the justices comprising the World Court.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will tell the Senator why I have not.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thought he might be interested in attempting to do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. REYNOLDS. I do not "parlez-vous Français!" [Laughter.] I am not linguist enough to pronounce the names of some of those foreigners who are going to deal out international justice to us. I thought about doing that, may I say to the Senator from Georgia, but my tongue would not twist around enough to pronounce their names. Therefore I thought I had better not undertake to do it. I am coming to that matter right now. I thank the Senator immensely for the interruption, which is pleasantly and gratefully received.

Mr. President, this ought not to be called "the World Court." I said the other day that it ought to be called "the Court of Intrigue." That does not adequately describe it, however. This thing that they are trying to get us into, this thing that is referred to as "the World Court", ought to be called "the Court of Babel and Bunk."

If you have read the Bible, Mr. President, you remember that away back yonder in Biblical days the people started the erection of a tower, and all languages there were spoken, and so innumerable were the languages that they could not understand one another; and so innumerable are the languages to be spoken in this Court that it ought to be called "the Court of Babel."

I turn to my colleague here, Mr. BILBO, from away down in Mississippi, where the bullfrogs jump from bank to bank, I understand. [Laughter.] I ask my colleague here, if some of his constituents were to be brought up from his State of Mississippi and brought into the court room where these foreign judges are, and the foreign judges should render a decision in regard to the interests of the people of his State and the other States of the Union, how much of their language could those fellows down there in Mississippi understand? The Senator's people down in Mississippi do not want to have their rights passed on by any foreigner whose language they do not understand.

Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] that there are 11 judges on this Court.

Mr. KING. Fifteen, Mr. President.

Mr. REYNOLDS. No; 11 judges and 4 deputies, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, the amendment to the original statute provides for 15.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator. All right; 15 judges. There are so many amendments to this thing coming up that they confuse me; and I desire to speak of those amendments in just a minute.

Fifteen judges! I believe there are two of those judges who speak English. Mr. Kellogg is a member of the bench, if I recall correctly, and the British Empire has one member there. There are two who speak English. There are 13 who do not speak English. If we are to have 13 men on the bench of this court discussing and passing upon any interest of the United States of America, we want to know what they are saying; and what would we have to do? We would have to employ 13 different interpreters who speak the 13 different languages to tell our man over there what they were jabbering about, and then we would have to get 13 more who spoke the 13 different languages to swear to us that the way these interpreters were interpreting to us what the judges were saying was true [laughter], because we have been deceived so much, we have been so badly treated, that we cannot trust them. It is agreed that we cannot trust them, Mr. President. We have stated that we cannot trust them.

Now, let us see:

Away back yonder last year, I remember when this thing came up. I happen to remember about it. I remember about it because during my campaign in North Carolina, when I spoke all over the State, every time I would say anything about the World Court and say that I would stand here until doomsday opposing our going into the Court and dealing any more with those foreigners, the people almost tore down the house with applause, because they do not want us to get mixed up with them any more. We have been burned sufficiently.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. Speaking of languages, is there an official language for the Court?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have never heard of the 13 languages spoken by those people being built into 1 language that all 13 of them understood, so I assume that there could not be an official language.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator means in regard to the languages that they speak? I know that most of the proceedings there are carried on in French and English; but——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The statute provides that the official language of the Court shall be either English or French. May I say to the Senator that the judges of that distinguished body—and we have had members of that Court, three of the most distinguished lawyers of the United States—are not ignoramuses. I know a number of the judges. They speak more than one language. Many of us do not have the facility of expression of some of our friends across the sea whom my friend calls "foreigners." Most of the members of the Court speak French; many of them speak German, and many of them speak English. The official proceedings of the Court are conducted in English or French.

If the Senator will pardon me, he may recall that under the administration of Mr. Harding we had an international conference here, a great congregation of representative men from nearly all the nations of the world. In that conference we worked out the Limitation of Armament Treaty and many other treaties to which we were a party and which have played an important part in the affairs of the world.

Some of those who were present representing other governments did not speak English. Nearly all of them spoke French. The proceedings were carried on in English; and in some instances where some of the delegates could not understand the English language, a French translator was there and promptly made the translation.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] will tell my friend—and I have tried lawsuits in his State—that the courts there are conducted in two languages, Spanish and English; and I found some little embarrassment in addressing juries, some of whom did not speak fluently, at least, the English language, in having the translator at my elbow, reechoing to the juries and to the courts the language in which I spoke.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator for his contribution.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. It was the question of language in my State, to which the Senator from Utah has referred, which prompted my question. I have presided over a court where some of the jurors could not speak English; and I will say to the Senator that those jurors who had no knowledge of the English language rendered fine and efficient service as jurors.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senators greatly, Mr. President.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. While this point is in no sense important or essential, in addition to the fact that the official languages of the court are English and French, before a person can become a candidate for a judge of the Court he must be able to speak either French or English, and in addition to that he must be able to read both French and English.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I desire to take this opportunity to thank my distinguished friend from Utah [Mr. KING], my distinguished friend from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and my distinguished friend from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] for their kindness in these interruptions, because they have been instrumental in aiding the American people, instrumental in showing the American people at what a great disadvantage we will be over there for this reason:

My distinguished friend from Utah [Mr. KING] has told us that there are gentlemen of foreign lands on the continent of Europe who are linquists, who speak many, many different languages fluently, and who understand the tongues of innumerable foreigners from innumerable different lands; all of which goes to show that we simple Americans, who have not been able to avail ourselves of the opportunities they have over there of mingling frequently with the people of the various countries and learning how to speak all these languages, will be at a great disadvantage in dealing with them on this Court. We Americans never have had those educational opportunities, if that is what Senators may be pleased to term them. We speak only a single language—plain old English.

The Senator from Utah tells us that some of the judges over there speak five or six languages. What chance would we poor Americans have with some fellow there speaking five or six languages? Those foreigners could sit on the bench there, talking half a dozen different languages, and our judge sitting up there could not understand a doggone word of what they were saying. [Laughter.]

I thank the Senators. That is one of the points I was making, Mr. President, that our judges could not understand what it was all about.

Now let us find out something about this thing.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly. I am always glad to yield to my distinguished friend from Oklahoma, for whom I have a great deal of respect and admiration.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Does not the Senator believe that America is always at a disadvantage when we meet in these international conferences, for the very reason that our conferees, as a rule, speak but one language, while the other conferees are able to speak in all these various tongues?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I agree thoroughly with the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. If the Senator will yield for just one further observation——

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly, sir.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. There is an organization in the world called the "Interparliamentary Union." It is a congress of congresses. Every congress in the world is entitled to have representatives attend the Interparliamentary Union. To be a delegate one must be a member of some world congress. These congresses meet every year. One met in the Capital here some 10 years ago. On two occasions I have had the privilege of attending such conferences—one in Paris in 1927 and one in Berlin in 1928. At the conference in Berlin the only delegates who spoke English were the English delegates, the delegates from the United States, and the delegates from China. There were delegates present from perhaps 40 other nations. The English-speaking delegates, coming from America, the British Empire, and China, were not sufficiently powerful to secure a translation of the speeches as they were made.

There was a translation at Paris, but at Berlin for some reason the English-speaking delegates were not able to—they were not powerful enough even to secure a translation of the speeches made from the platform, and we had to wait until the next day to get a transcript of what transpired, and so we were always at least 1 day behind the proceedings in that conference.

I suggest that as a disadvantage under which American delegates always find themselves in these international conferences. In foreign nations their diplomats and their conferees are schooled, educated, and prepared by many years of training, and they send that character of men to these conferences. In America we have not progressed along that line, and that is another reason why we are at such a disadvantage. Because of the failure of our schools to furnish such training and for other reasons, our delegates do not have that special training in what we call "international statesmanship" or in diplomacy, and we are always at a disadvantage for those reasons.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is unquestionably true, and I thank the Senator from Oklahoma greatly for this enlightenment and this aid.

Mr. President, I desire to ask the American people once again: What have we to gain by going into this Court? That is what I want to know. I have listened attentively here for days, and I have not yet heard a real reason for our entering this Court. We are over here on a clean shore, by ourselves, looking after our own business, and trying to feed our millions of hungry people, trying to clothe our millions of ragged and starving people. Why do we want to get mixed up with something like this at this time?

I say, Mr. President, that just as sure as the sun is to rise tomorrow, if we get into this thing, if we are forced into this World Court, we will regret it every day we live, and our children and our children's children will regret it. But it is going back to that same old thing—self-preservation is the first law of nature. If they force us into it, and we get into trouble, thank heaven I am going to be in a position to say, "Well, I told you so. I told you so." And if we do not get into it, I will be in a position to say, "Well, I was right, was I not? I was right."

Mr. President, let us find out something about this thing. I want to know what good, what benefit has the World Court and the League of Nations been to us as a whole? Of course, we will all admit that it has not been any good to us; but what good has it been to anybody on earth except those who profited by it? And who were they? Well, France and Italy among others. Let us see about it. The way we hear this thing discussed one would think that the doves of peace were all over our Capitol instead of those starlings which we see perched on the eaves of our Government buildings here every night. Why, you cannot pick up a paper but what you find that there is war here, and there is war there, and there is war everywhere. Last night I picked up the Washington Evening Star, and the first thing I saw was a war report. I ask a page to bring in the afternoon paper—any one of the afternoon papers; I do not care which one—and I am sure I will find a like report on the first page. Last night I had the Evening Star, and in it an article dealing with war is given more attention by way of the size of its type and commands more attention than anything else, except the Hauptmann trial up there in Flemington, N. J. The article begins:

Chinese province reports attack by Japanese Army. Invasion by troops is disclosed by dispatches. Three towns near the border are bombed. Planes rain death on villages. Two thousand troops launched movement yesterday.

Here is another Evening Star. A young man just brought it in. I have not seen it before. The first thing that my eyes fall upon on the first page of that newspaper is this:

Japanese planes bombing—

I cannot pronounce that name—

Chahar. Attack reports follow rumored settlement of disputed points.

By the way, I will come back to that, Mr. President. Before we leave that subject I wish to make this statement: Japan is now a member of the League of Nations. And, to repeat, the League of Nations and the World Court are working hand in hand; they are one and the same, because the World Court is the offspring, the child of the League of Nations. Japan gave notice some months ago that she was going to quit, but she gave as an excuse that she was going to quit because belonging to the League of Nations cost her $900,000 a year, and she was not going to pay it any more. I am ready to assume that she wanted to save that $900,000 to buy some more scrap iron from the United States for the purpose of building more battleships. But the real reason, Mr. President, was this: That Japan did not even want international justice. She did not even want it. We do not want any international justice. We do not want any international justice because we want American justice. Japan did not want international justice because she wanted to do as she pleased. And despite the fact that both she and China were and are members of the League of Nations, affiliated with the World Court—the court of intrigue, the court of babble, ballyhoo, and bunk—Japan ran rough-shod over the international settlement in Shanghai and on across the plain and rugged lands of Manchuria, and they were not satisfied with what they got, but now they want a part of Mongolia, and they are bombing that whole country there, slaying, killing, murdering thousands upon thousands of innocent Chinese. And they now tell me that the World Court is going to bring about international peace! No. I shall never be convinced of that fact, Mr. President.

Let us see what else we find here. Mr. President, I shall say to my distinguished colleague from the State of California [Mr. JOHNSON] that if one should pick up a paper at even this hour, when this great subject is being discussed, and look on the front page, one would think that the United States was in war, because there is so much on the front page of every paper about wars all over the world. Right here on the front page I read:

Joint action seen in Ethiopian crisis. Italy seeks French views in belief diplomatic solution may be possible.

I want to bring that to the attention of this body. Let us see. Let us find out something about this. Where is Ethiopia? Ethiopia is away down there about 1,000 miles below Port Said, at one end of the Suez Canal on the African coast, just 700 miles from the borderland of French Somaliland, the capital of which is Djibouti. Let us get the significance of this. The French are seeking diplomatic aid. Over on the plateau is the nation claiming never to have been conquered, the black, broad-shouldered, muscular, naked warriors of Abyssinia. The Abyssinians choose to retain their original name. The Ethiopians delight in calling it theirs.

What do we find? We find that the Italians, the "black shirts" of Italy, where they are training young children from 3 to 4 years of age to become bearers of arms and to join the "black shirts" of the warriors when they arrive at the age of 8—we find the Italian soldiers away down there in Africa, below their own territory of Tripoli, in northern Africa, attacking the Abyssinians, or, in other words, the Ethiopians. They killed a whole lot of them a few days ago. They went in there and claimed some dispute about territory. Do Senators know why the Italians went in there? The Italians went in there because they have found great pockets of oil. They have located great veins of valuable mineral. And Italy needs it, because Italy has a very small territory in its own country, as has Japan. Italy wanted it and found an excuse to go down there and run over those poor people in Abyssinia, and confiscate their land, and kill a lot of their men. And the army of the King of Abyssinia, who chooses to term himself the "King of Kings", was not sufficient to cope with the great, well-armed, modernly equipped army and soldiers of Mussolini.

Then, for a while, the gunfire subsided and the troops for the moment began to lay down their arms. And those brave black warriors of that frontier and that great plateau, burning with the spirit of being saviors of their land, crept down into Somaliland—that French territory—and entered the city of Djibouti, the capital thereof, and killed 18 of the French soldiers and about 95 natives.

Let us see what is going to happen. I will tell the Senate what is going to happen, Mr. President. This matter will be considered diplomatically, and as a result it will be decided that some territory that belongs to Abyssinia or Ethiopia—as you choose to call it—in order to settle the disputes, will be given to the Italians, who need the oil and who need the precious ore. Is that correct? Let us see what they are after right now:

Italy seeks French views in belief diplomatic solution may be possible.

Why, Italy seeks French views. Italy seeks French views. Italy, a nation having a population of 45,000,000 people or more; Abyssinia being a nation with a population of 5,500,000; but Italy seeks international diplomatic settlement.

Italy wants to settle according to international justice because according to international justice Italy is going to get that which belongs to Abyssinia, and Abyssinia cannot help herself, because she has only 5 million people, and poorly equipped soldiers, and Italy has 45 million people. Abyssinia not only for that reason cannot help herself, but Italy is working hand in hand under the covers with France. Let us see. Austria wanted to join Germany. They had a lot of trouble over there. Dolfuss was killed. Italy stood by France diplomatically under cover in the chicanery and worked with France to aid France in keeping Austria from going to Germany. And France is going to stand by Italy because Italy stood by her.

Those Frenchmen, Mr. President, are fine diplomats in getting that which does not belong to them. Fine diplomats in borrowing and then not paying.

So, Mr. President, when Italy wants that territory belonging to Abyssinia and kills a lot of Abyssinians and desires to keep out the people of the world, she seeks to submit the question to the Court and League, asking for "international justice." Italy wants "international justice," and she will get "international justice", which will mean that she will get some property belonging to Abyssinia. That is all there is to it.

Mr. President, what chance would we have if we should enter the World Court? We would not have any chance at all.

By the way, we hear so much on the floor of the Senate about protecting us if we enter the Court; we hear so much about how we will be protected if we get in, and how we will not be protected and what will happen to us if we do not get in, and all that sort of thing, it reminds me of the man who goes around to his neighbor's house for a friendly poker party and carries a .38 revolver on his hip. It reminds me how careful the little fellow is when he goes swimming. Many of us will remember our barefoot boyhood days when we would leave the house in the afternoon with half a dozen other little fellows living in the neighborhood and stroll down to the old swimming hole along the banks of the river. Under the trees in the springtime we would strip off our coats and our shirts and our shoes and our pants and stand there on the bank quivering, and the first one to go in would say, "Now, you boys, watch me, because I may drown and I want you to pull me out." It reminds me of the position we are taking here. We are scared to go into the Court. Why? Because we do not know what is going to happen to us if we go in.

By the way, in this newspaper which has been brought to my attention this afternoon there is another headline reading:

Inquisition defi given munitions probe by Bardo.

Did you ever stop to think, Mr. President, that all the wars in all the world and the wars that are raging right now are largely fomented by munitions makers? There is the great Vickers concern in the British Isles, the world's greatest manufacturers of poisonous gases and munitions, of armaments. America, which stands for peace; America, which, above all nations, wants peace, eternal peace, our great America, is the only country in all the world that undertook to make an inquiry into the profits made by the war lords of the world, while Great Britain, upon whose soil we find the factories of the Vickers and others engaged in similar enterprises and businesses, is taking no such step. We find America taking the lead in the peace of the world as a result of the pending munitions probe, and yet, on the other hand, we find that those who live beyond the blue waters of the Atlantic, while asking us to come into the World Court, are every single moment preparing for war. Is that so? Let us see.

We all know, Mr. President, that one of the biggest standing armies in the world is that of Poland. Where is Poland? Poland is in Europe between Germany and Russia and Austria. We all know that Poland is indebted to the tune of millions upon millions of dollars for loans which were made to her by the French Government. We all know that the most modern, the latest armament, cannon, rifles, sabers, which have been turned out by the plants in France, have gone—where? They have gone into Poland. Anybody who has visited Poland, anybody who has made diligent inquiry on the border or in the interior of Poland or in the countries surrounding Poland, knows that to be so; indeed, as a matter of fact, all Europe knows well that France for a number of years past has been shipping all manner of implements of death and war into Poland and that Poland is indebted to her today in great sums.

It is said, Mr. President, that the World Court will stop war. Why has it not stopped the war which I mentioned the other day on the floor of the Senate, the war between Bolivia and Paraguay? It has not had any effect upon the peace of the world. It has not had any such effect in South America, in central Africa, in the Orient, in Mongolia, and Manchuria. It has not stopped the countries of the world from gathering arms and building up their forces in every single respect, both on land and on sea and beneath the sea and in the air. Then talk to us about peace!

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ADAMS in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator, in referring to the war in South America and reading from the current news, evidently overlooked the item in this evening's Washington Star in regard to the unfortunate conflict in South America, from which it appears that the forces of Paraguay have put on a great offensive in an effort to overwhelm their adversary before the sanction of the League of Nations can take effect, though the war has been going on for approximately 3 years.

Mr. REYNOLDS. They are trying to get through before the sanction of the League can take effect.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is so stated in the article.

Mr. REYNOLDS. As a matter of fact, from all I know about it, it would not make any difference what the League sanctioned about it; they would fight until the war was over.

Now, let us see what we find here. If we go into this "court of Babel", what are we going to find? We will go in under every disadvantage on earth. We will go in with Great Britain having 7 votes to our 1. She would have the votes of herself, Australia, Canada, India, Irish Free State, New Zealand, South Africa, or 7 in all. So Great Britain would have 7 votes to America's 1 if we go into the "World Court of Intrigue."

Mr. President, as we all know, France, which manipulates this court of intrigue, will have more votes than we will have, because we know that Italy kept Austria from going back to Germany; we know that Italy has appealed to her friend, France, for international justice to give her that which belongs to Abyssinia. France will have the vote and cooperation of Poland, Czechoslovakia and Rumania, all of whom owe her money, and with Italy at the same time she is "in cahoots." Why do we want to get mixed up with people who hate us? We all know that envy and jealousy create hatred. France is jealous of us; all the nations of continental Europe are jealous of us and would cut our throat at the drop of a hat.

I wanted, Mr. President, at this time to refer to the list of judges constituting the court. I have such a list on my desk but, having mislaid it for the moment, I will come to that later.

Preliminarily I made mention of the matter which I now wish to bring to the attention of the Senate. In January 1934, there was presented to this body for consideration and adoption, a bill interesting itself in those residing beyond the seas. That bill was introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] and is entitled as follows:

A bill to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States.

I respectfully direct, particularly, the attention of the Senator from California to this measure. It reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter it shall be unlawful within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States for any person—

Mind you, the bill makes it unlawful under the laws of this land—for any person to purchase or sell the bonds, securities, or other obligations of any foreign government or political subdivision thereof or any organization or association acting for or on behalf of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof.

That law makes it a violation of the Federal statute to sell any bond or security of any foreign nation that is in default upon its payments to the United States of America. The bill goes further, in stating that it shall be unlawful to lend any money in those foreign countries that are in default of their obligations to America.

That bill was up for consideration on January 11, and at that time, if I recall correctly, the RECORD reveals that there were not a great many present in the Chamber as a result of the absence of some of the Members on request, and by suggestion final disposition was deferred until February 2, 1934.

Mr. President, at this time I wish to ask that the bill, which became a law on April 13, 1934, be inserted in full in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The act referred to is as follows:

[Public, No. 151, 73d Cong.]
S. 682

An act to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter it shall be unlawful within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States for any person to purchase or sell the bonds, securities, or other obligations of, any foreign government or political subdivision thereof or any organization or association acting for or on behalf of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, issued after the passage of this act, or to make any loan to such foreign government, political subdivision, organization, or association, except a renewal or adjustment of existing indebtedness while such government, political subdivision, organization or association is in default in the payment of its obligations, or any part thereof, to the Government of the United States. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

SEC. 2. As used in this act the term "person" includes individual, partnership, corporation, or association other than a public corporation created by or pursuant to special authorization of Congress, or a corporation in which the Government of the United States has or exercises a controlling interest through stock ownership or otherwise.

Approved April 13, 1934.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, just prior to the discussion on February 2, 1934, of the bill making it unlawful to sell foreign securities in this country there was a discussion upon the floor of the Senate. Of course, there was a discussion. There was a discussion because a child that has been once burned is afraid of the fire. We were afraid to do anything that would involve us with those countries abroad who had refused to pay us their honest debts. While that bill was here before the Senate, having been brought before this body on February 2, 1934, the discussion involved an important statement which was made on the floor of the Senate by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. He said:

> In order that there may be immediate action if it be possible, and in order that the first desideratum of the bill may be accomplished, I have been very glad to consent—whether I was in whole-hearted accord with some of the amendments or not is immaterial—to the amendments thus presented by the different departments and the administration, and have this bill go upon record by vote of the Congress of the United States as the expression of the view of the Congress upon this subject.

Later, it became the law to the effect that it shall be unlawful, and punishable by fine or imprisonment, for any man, individual, company, corporation, or association to make purchase of or to sell any foreign security in this country. When that law was enacted, sir, when ample opportunity was given to every Member of this body to know of its contents and to discuss its features, not one single hand was raised against it. Why? Because, Mr. President, we knew, and well did we know, that many of the European countries had defaulted in the payment of their indebtedness to this country; had not only defaulted in payment of the principal thereof, but had the audacity to deny and refuse payment of the interest.

Further, we knew that many of the bonds of defaulting nations and others throughout the world, who had found a bonanza of investors in America, were such that the investors here had been defrauded. Therefore, this body went on record in favor of that bill making it a violation of the law, punishable by fine or imprisonment, to sell here or even to buy any securities issued by those countries in default to us, all of which leads me to assume and presume that we were for that bill, that we will uphold that bill as a body, because the RECORD reveals that not one single hand was lifted against it; not one voice was heard in opposition to it. It passed because we could not trust those people beyond the seas 3,000 miles away. If in February of 1934, less than a year ago, we could not find ourselves in a position to respect them, and at which time we had evidently lost confidence in them, how can we now trust them to pass upon matters in which the United States of America is or may be vitally interested?

The countries of the world should certainly know that we of all people are desirous of peace, that we of all nations are seeking harmony, because the best evidence of a peaceful attitude may be had from the physical evidence and the appearance of things. By that I mean, if we were a warring nation, if we were an aggressive nation insofar as warfare is concerned, we would build up our armed forces to tremendous proportions in order that we might at least equal the standing forces of the armies of the various countries of the world.

But that we have not done. In evidence thereof and in proof of what I say, I respectfully desire to bring to the attention of this body a record supplied to me as of today entitled "Military Forces of Nations of the World as of December 31, 1933." This record discloses that our country, the United States of America, maintains a force of only 135,000 soldiers and those incident to the fighting troops of the Nation. As we look over the list we find that America, with its population of 125,000,000, maintains a standing army not in excess of 135,000.

On the other hand, we note from the same list that France, with its population of 48,000,000, maintains a standing army of 584,000. There is a country with a population one-third that of the United States maintaining an army four times the size of that maintained by the United States.

As we proceed in our examination of this list we find that the British Empire maintains a force of 396,259, which is three times as many as maintained by the United States.

Then we find another member of the League of Nations, China, with 470,000,000 people, maintaining an armed force of 2,000,000 fighting men. We find Japan with an active armed force of 225,000, almost twice the size of the armed force of the United States, and maintaining not only 225,000 soldiers active and ready for any emergency but in addition thereto 1,952,000 as a trained reserve.

As we follow the list along we find that the proportion remains always in favor of the United States. Particularly will I now, in concluding the several citations from this list, take advantage of the opportunity to mention Poland, to which country I referred a few moments ago, which is cited here in this list with a population of 32,000,000 and with an active armed forced of 325,456 and a reserved trained force of 1,721,579.

As I said, we of the United States, with a population of 125,000,000, maintain a standing armed force never in excess of 135,000 and in addition thereto a trained reserve force of 309,000.

Mr. President, men and nations cry, "Peace", and yet all the time they are adding to their armed forces, all the time they are building up warring factors, and all the time and at the same time they are endeavoring to bring us into the World Court. For what reason I can understand. I cannot fathom in my own mind or fashion therein why they cannot settle their own disputes and not bring us into them.

Mr. President, I request permission to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks two of the lists or tabulations to which I made reference, one being "Data on Membership of the League of Nations", and the other entitled "Military Forces of Nations of the World as of December 31, 1933."

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] No army.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I offer a reservation to the pending resolution of adherence, which I ask to have read and printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reservation will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Reservation intended to be proposed by Mr. NYE to the resolution of adherence on the part of the United States to the World Court, viz: Add thereto the following:

"Resolved further, That in the event the United States adheres to the statute of the World Court it shall make the following reservation:

"That the code of law to be administered by the World Court shall not contain inequalities based on sex."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reservation will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it appears that debate has again been exhausted. The pending question is the amendment or reservation proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

Several times during the course of the debate I have asserted that the reservation is unnecessary, because there is nothing in the resolution of ratification or in the protocols which would involve domestic questions or traditional policies of the United States. It is my understanding that the Senator from Michigan agrees that that is true; but it has been suggested, and he has insisted, that on occasions heretofore, when the subject of the World Court has been before the Senate, a similar reservation has been agreed to. That is entirely true. It has also been agreed, as I understand, that the reservation does not change in any respect the legal effect of the resolution of adherence; and, also, the assertion has been made that it embodies a principle in which all of us concur. In that connection I merely wish to say that we all concur in the Ten Commandments, but we have not incorporated them in the resolution of adherence.

However, Mr. President, I believe that the proper policy to be pursued by the proponents of the resolution of adherence is to acquiesce in or accept the reservation of the Senator from Michigan, and I am willing that that action respecting the reservation may be taken at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved further, That adherence to the said protocols and statute hereby approved shall not be so construed as to require the United States to depart from its traditional policy of not intruding upon, interfering with, or entangling itself in the political questions of policy or internal administration of any foreign state; nor shall adherence to said protocols and statute be construed to imply a relinquishment by the United States of its traditional attitude toward purely American questions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I believe the next matter in order properly should be the reservation offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. I do not see him in the Chamber, but I ask that the reservation be read, and then I shall suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reservation will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved further, That the adherence of the Government of the United States to said protocols and statute is upon the express condition and understanding that no dispute or question in which the United States Government is a party shall be submitted to said Permanent Court of International Justice unless such submission has been approved by the United States Senate by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. NORRIS entered the Chamber.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I see that the Senator from Nebraska has entered the Chamber; and I will state to him that his reservation is now before the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I desire to propound an inquiry to the Senator from Arkansas. Is it desired to go forward with the discussion of this reservation at this late hour?

Mr. ROBINSON. Before moving a recess, I wish to submit another request for a limitation on debate. Obviously, we are proceeding here most of the time with no Senator ready to speak.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that the Senator from Nebraska is ready to proceed. Does he desire to speak this afternoon?

Mr. NORRIS. I would rather not do that; but I desire to make an inquiry. I was called out of the Chamber. Has the so-called "Vandenberg reservation" been agreed to?

Mr. ROBINSON. It has been agreed to.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Arkansas, I should prefer to go on tomorrow. It is now about the usual time of adjourning or recessing. In a conversation I had with the Senator from Arkansas some time ago, we had a sort of an understanding about an agreement which probably could be reached tonight. Would the Senator like to propose that agreement now?

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; I should like to propose it now.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate meets next Monday, debate be limited as follows:

No Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the resolution of adherence, or more than once or longer than 15 minutes on any reservation that may be pending or that may be offered.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. I think we can come to an agreement on that, but I should like to do it in this fashion: The understanding will be, as I gather from what the Senator has said, that tomorrow the Norris reservation will be proceeded with, and disposed of, I presume during the day, although I know nothing as to the length of time which may be occupied upon it; that tomorrow night we shall adjourn until Monday, and that on Monday the limitation of debate shall go into effect.

Mr. ROBINSON. When the Senate meets on Monday next.

Mr. JOHNSON. When the Senate meets; but I desire to amend that part of the proposed agreement. Instead of the limitation taking effect when the Senate meets, I should like to fix the time when it shall take effect at 2:30 in the afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that is so near the request I have made that I will modify it in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from California.

Mr. JOHNSON. I am perfectly frank in saying to the Senator that I want to have the agreement in that form, because I desire to present some little matters in relation to the pending conroversy, and I wish to have the time in which to do it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Monday being the day for the call of the calendar, some time may be consumed in that way.

Mr. JOHNSON. That might take up the whole time.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; I want to be frank and fair with the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; I am glad the Senator mentioned it. The consideration of the calendar may occupy some time. I desire to have an hour of leeway, if possible, before the limitation takes effect.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I make this suggestion as a final compromise proposition which will give the Senator what he wishes:

I will modify the request so as to ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its labors tomorrow it recess until Monday noon, and that after the hour of 1 o'clock on Monday the limitation I have indicated shall go into effect, so that there will be 1 hour for the Senator's discussion if he has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON. There will be no consideration of the calendar? The recess will eliminate that.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; if we recess, the pending matter will be before the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes. I have not spoken to some of the Senators who may desire to speak in regard to the pending subject, but if they object, I presume they will state their objection. I know of no objection to entering into the arrangement. Tomorrow, however, will be devoted to the one proposition that is before us?

Mr. ROBINSON. I expect so—the Norris reservation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, yesterday the Committee on Banking and Currency reported out a bill affecting the Reconstruction Finance Corporation's authority, which expires on the 31st of January. It is extremely important that that proposed legislation be enacted as soon as possible. Does the Senator's plan contemplate any time to be devoted to that prior to a final vote on the World Court matter?

Mr. ROBINSON. I should like to have an understanding that if we desire to do so tomorrow, after the Norris reservation shall have been disposed of, or before, if it meets with the Senator's approval, we may proceed to consider legislative business.

Mr. JOHNSON. I have no objection to that. I simply wanted the understanding that upon the particular pending question of the protocols of the Court we would tomorrow settle or take up one question, that of the reservation of the Senator from Nebraska, and then the Senate would, if it saw fit, subsequently proceed to consider other subjects of legislation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

In order to meet the suggestion of the Senator from Kentucky, which I think is concurred in by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Chairman of the Finance Committee, I should like to withdraw the suggestion about recessing tomorrow night at the conclusion of the consideration of the Norris reservation; but I will say that if the Norris reservation should be disposed of, it would be my purpose to have the Senate proceed to the consideration of legislative business and not take further action in executive session until Monday.

So I will modify the request as follows, with a gentlemen's agreement between myself and the Senator from California:

That when the Senate meets on Monday it proceed at once to the consideration of the World Court protocols and resolution, and that no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the resolution of adherence, or more than once or longer than 15 minutes on any reservation that may be pending or that may be offered.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me suggest to the Senator that he has not included in the proposed unanimous-consent agreement a provision that we shall take a recess tomorrow night instead of an adjournment.

Mr. ROBINSON. No; there is obviously no necessity for that, because I am including in the agreement, if it is entered into, that when we meet Monday we shall proceed with this matter.

Mr. NORRIS. That we shall go into executive session.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; that is the object of the restatement of the matter; and I have stated to the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] that at the conclusion of the consideration of the Norris reservation it is not expected that further action shall be taken until Monday respecting this subject matter.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Senator inadvertently omitted including in the proposed agreement a provision as to the limitation going into effect at 2:30 on Monday, or whatever the hour was that he proposed.

Mr. ROBINSON. At 1 o'clock. We meet at 12 o'clock, and at 1 o'clock the limitation is to go into effect. The Senator said he desired an hour.

Mr. JOHNSON. I do.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I do not wish to be in opposition to the Senator from California. I understood that the Senator from California wanted the limitation to apply at 2:30 in the afternoon.

Mr. JOHNSON. That was quite so until the Senator from Arkansas said he would move a recess so that immediately at 12 o'clock we might go on with this subject.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well. I ask to have the question put.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The unanimous-consent agreement was reduced to writing, as follows:

Ordered, by unanimous consent, That when the Senate meets on Monday, January 28, it proceed at once to the consideration of the World Court protocols and resolution, and that after the hour of 1 o'clock p. m. no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the resolution of adherence, or more than once or longer than 15 minutes on any reservation that may be pending or that may be offered.

REPUBLICAN CONFERENCE

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Oregon a question. I understand that there is to be a Republican caucus or conference on Saturday morning.

Mr. McNARY. I stated to the Senator from Mississippi, the Chairman of the Finance Committee, that I expected to call, and now have called, a Republican conference for 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning. Therefore I requested that the Senator should not call a meeting of the Finance Committee for that time.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator, with notice to the members, that there will be no meeting of the Finance Committee on Saturday morning.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate the courtesy and kindness of the Senator.

THE EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business other than the World Court protocols. It is understood that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is my understanding. I yielded for the purpose of having these other matters disposed of.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wanted to make that clear.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the first business in order on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the nominations of sundry postmasters.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters on the calendar may be confirmed en bloc.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters on the calendar are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate, in executive session, took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, January 25, 1935, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 24, 1935

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father of all the earth, we rejoice that Thou art so accessible as to hear us when we call. Free our understanding from fatal error and deliver us from any false illusions and bring us into the full presence of the divine kingdom and the divine will. By thought and word, in sympathy and in purpose, let the humanities grow along our pathway in whose fragrance there are most excellent virtues. Thy Holy Word is with us: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me." Blessed Lord God, the winter's blast and blight with suffering and destitution are with us. We beseech Thee that the freshness and the generosity of our Nation's heart may be revealed as the poor and the outcast turn wistfully toward the strong and the provident. We pray that the diabolical and the worst forms of selfishness that war against the soul may die and that every heart may be moved by that inspiration and by that eternal sacrifice which dawn in the shadow of our Savior's cross.

"Who gives himself with his alms, feeds three: Himself, his hungry neighbor, and Me."

In the Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TAX-EXEMPT SECURITIES

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted a privileged report on House Resolution 56, which the Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 56

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives the following information: The names and addresses of all persons and corporations who own tax-exempt securities in the amount of $100,000 or over; the amount of such holdings held by each individual or corporation; kind of securities held in each case; and the interest paid on such securities per annum.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report accompanying the resolution be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 56) to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit to the House of Representatives certain information with respect to the ownership of tax-exempt securities, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Tennessee makes that motion, which would cut off all debate, would he kindly yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Texas for a question.

Mr. BLANTON. Why is this information sought by this resolution not the kind that the country is entitled to?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. It is the understanding of the committee that the information is not available in the manner sought by this resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. I realize that the resolution may not be in proper form, but if it were amended and placed in proper form, I believe very earnestly if he would not table it but would leave it to a vote of the House, 85 percent of the Members would vote for the resolution.

I am strictly against tax-exempt securities. I am in favor of properly subjecting to taxation all bonds and securities and taxing the income from all bonds and securities.

I realize that the resolution sought to be tabled asks for information regarding securities issued by the various States which are tax exempt, but which information is not available to the Secretary of the Treasury, as he has information available respecting only Federal securities issued by the Government.

But the Ways and Means Committee has authority to amend this resolution and strike from it that portion which seeks information the Treasury Department cannot furnish and require it to furnish the information which is available.

I am hopeful that before this Congress adjourns, the Ways and Means Committee will report and pass proper resolutions that will obtain for the Congress and the people definite information showing the extent and ownership not only of all Federal tax-exempt securities but also respecting all tax-exempt securities issued by the States, and that will grant constitutional authority to tax all income from such securities.

Of course, if the gentleman from Tennessee, acting for the Committee on Ways and Means, deems this resolution improperly drawn, and insists on his motion to table it, intending to bring in later a proper resolution that will obtain for us the information we seek, and are entitled to, then I shall go along with the committee and vote as the committee desires to table this imperfect resolution.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts for a question.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I think a word of explanation should be offered about this resolution before the gentleman's motion is put.

The Ways and Means Committee took action in accordance with the gentleman's report yesterday, which was entirely agreeable to the minority Members. On the other hand, the gentleman who proposes the resolution, I understand, is not able to be in the Chamber today. If no rights of the committee are abrogated by the delay, I think out of courtesy to the proponent of the resolution, consideration of the gentleman's motion might well be postponed. I am sure it is not the intention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] in any way to interfere with the orderly procedure or courtesy to be extended to a Member introducing a privileged resolution.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. May I say to the gentleman that of course he has correctly stated my view of the matter; however, it so happens that under the rules of the House this is the last day the matter may be reported.

Mr. TREADWAY. I realize that, and I am perfectly willing that the report be made, but I am asking whether the Speaker can postpone under the rules consideration until such time, say a day or two, as would enable the proponent of the resolution to be present.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the Speaker has no authority to postpone the matter. The Chair understands from the statement made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] that this is the last day on which the committee may make its report. Some disposition will have to be made of the matter at this time by the House.

The Speaker has no authority whatsoever to postpone the matter.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I assumed that would be the ruling of the Chair. At the same time, the report of the committee may be acted upon at a specified time tomorrow or some other day without interfering with the rights of the committee, and I am sure the House ought to grant that right to the proponent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the motion to lay on the table is not debatable and no Member loses any rights on account of his absence. If he were here he would not be entitled to discuss the matter.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BOILEAU) there were—ayes 120, noes 18.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present from the count just made. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 271, nays 106, answered "present" 1, not voting 52, as follows:

Mr. PITTENGER, Mr. GUYER, Mr. JENKINS of Ohio, Mr. DEEN, Mr. FIESINGER, Mr. SECREST, Mr. CARLSON, Mr. HARTER, and Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT and Mr. COX changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask unanimous consent that that committee may have permission of the House to sit during sessions of the House on tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 69

Resolved, That JOE H. EAGLE, of Texas, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing Committee of the House of Representatives on World War Veterans' Legislation.

The resolution was agree to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. WEARIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] may be excused for the balance of the week on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

PRIVILEGE OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of constitutional privilege, the privileges of the House, personal privilege, and all other privileges.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. The morning papers, Mr. Speaker, credit me with a very able defense, and not undeserved, on the floor of the House yesterday of the Secretary of the Interior, but the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning gives credit to my colleague Mr. TAYLOR, the acting floor leader. [Laughter.]

Now, far be it from me to make any representations about this matter or to determine which is right—the morning papers or the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that if the gentleman rises to a question of the privileges of the House he must present a resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, of course, I do not care to make this matter a question of personal privilege, because I do not care to determine where the very right of the matter is—with the newspapers or with the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I just want to call attention to the conflict between these two authorities and leave the House to determine the matter as it may see fit, hoping that such a momentous question may be decided with justice to my colleague.

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 117

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DARDEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with sincere regret that I find myself unable to support the measure now under consideration. I have read it with a great deal of care, and I have studied it with the hope that I might be able, since it is an administration measure, to lend it my support.

When we assembled in special session in 1933 such pressing difficulties faced the Nation that speedy and comprehensive legislation seemed absolutely necessary. The result was a delegation of vast power to the Executive in the belief that only in this way could national collapse be averted.

But emergencies do not last forever and sooner or later we come face to face with the necessity of resuming the performance of those duties incident to membership in the House of Representatives. I do not believe that we have anything to gain as individuals or as a party in postponing the hour. We cannot escape the responsibilities and obligations imposed upon us, in our system of government, by delegating to an Executive, who has and who merits our confidence, those duties that we ourselves should perform. In fact, his ability to carry out his full part in the effort now being made to improve conditions rests in no small degree upon our willingness to measure up to the responsibilities which are ours.

We have made no attempt to define in other than the most casual and general terms the rules and regulations which are to govern the distribution of this gigantic fund.

There is in this legislation no intimation that we intend to contribute more to the solution of the perplexing problems now confronting us than a declaration that an emergency exists, which can only be met by an appropriation of public funds so far in excess of current revenues as to stagger the imagination, to be placed in the hands of the President, already overburdened with the many duties of his office, with the expressed hope that he may be able to evolve and push to a successful conclusion a plan of national rehabilitation which we, as Members of Congress, apparently have neither the disposition nor the inclination to draft.

Such procedure must in the end fail, for the very good reason that neither the credit of the United States nor the endurance of the President is inexhaustible. Continued drains on the Treasury must result in an impairment of our national credit, and I doubt that there is a single Member of Congress who would not realize, if he took occasion to think about it, that it is not humanly possible for the President to perform the many tasks which are now so cheerfully being thrown upon him.

He must of necessity delegate the authority herein conferred upon him upon others in whose judgment he has confidence, and he will, of course, have to rely to a considerable extent, as to the necessity and as to the wisdom of the expenditures undertaken, upon their judgment.

In contemplation of this, section 4, among other things, provides for the redelegation of this authority by the President, and, if this measure is passed, we must realize that this almost superhuman task is to ultimately be undertaken by a person or group of persons as yet unknown to the Members of Congress.

Having this in mind, it is interesting to review the provisions of the resolution which have to do with the use of the money which is appropriated. The resolution provides for an appropriation of almost $4,900,000,000 for the purpose of protecting and promoting the general welfare by—

First. Providing relief from the hardships attributable to wide-spread unemployment and conditions resulting therefrom;

Second. Relieving economic maladjustments;

Third. Alleviating distress; and/or Fourth. Improving living and working conditions.

These four heads might well be said to cover the purpose of government. There is hardly any project that cannot, in good faith, be undertaken under so broad a grant of power. The improvement of living and working conditions alone constitutes a policy so broad that government itself might be regarded as one of its functions.

A delegation of the powers enumerated above is a complete abdication of the duties and obligations of the Congress.

We should not lose sight of the fact that one day in the near future, unless we are to suffer serious currency trouble, we must adopt and put into execution a tax program that will yield a vast sum of money to meet the expenditures to which we are now committed.

Virginia, during the past year, contributed, roughly, 5 percent of the Federal internal-revenue collections. Upon that basis she will under this program be called upon to contribute approximately $240,000,000 toward the repayment of the sum contemplated by this bill, and this does not take into account the interest charges that must be paid before the loan is finally liquidated.

Confining ourselves to the principal sum involved, the step here taken means that Virginia will be called upon to pay in taxes an amount equal to six times the annual cost of our present State government, or, to state it another way, an amount in excess of 10 times the present State debt, toward a program of relief which is yet to be formulated and as to which her representatives here have but the most meager information.

And, mind you, the program on which we are about to embark contemplates that this money will probably be spent within the coming 2 years. This will mean that this program of national rehabilitation will cost that State annually three times more than the operation of its entire State government.

I became a member of the general assembly in Virginia early in 1930. The depression which has since caused such intense suffering was but beginning. During my service there, which ended with my becoming a Member of the United States House of Representatives in 1933, every effort was made to keep the State out of debt and to maintain its financial integrity. Salaries of State employees were cut as much as 30 percent and all services save those deemed absolutely necessary were dispensed with. Having taken part in framing State legislation to this end, I cannot come now as one of the nine Representatives of Virginia here and obligate her for a debt as vast as this, a debt which will in fact remain to be paid by succeeding generations, without being better advised as to the plans contemplated to meet our present difficulties.

I am not unmindful of the necessity of supplying funds to meet immediate need and want. I am ready and willing to vote for the appropriation of over $800,000,000 that is needed for immediate direct relief. But the launching of the Government into a broader field of public works is a matter that requires more thought and more consideration on the part of those of us who are required to vote the necessary funds than we have had the opportunity to give it.

I think the question might be viewed differently by many if instead of an appropriation of this size we were today attempting to pass a tax bill sufficient to raise the revenue which must ultimately be raised as a result of the passage of this measure.

It is probable that a great many more questions would be asked about the necessity of raising so large an amount of money and about the purposes to which it was proposed to devote it before we, as Members of Congress, would be willing to vote the additional taxes that would be required.

Yet we are passing a tax bill in effect, because in the end the Government, like an individual, must pay its debts if it is to remain solvent; and when we vote four thousand nine hundred million dollars for the purposes set forth in the resolution we are in effect declaring that it will be necessary at some future time to take this sum from the taxpayers of the country in an effort to better present conditions.

I shall touch only briefly on some of the other features of the resolution which to my mind are open to objection. The authority given to establish and prescribe the duties and functions of governmental agencies and to postpone, but not beyond June 20, 1937, the termination of the existence of any existing governmental agency, including a corporation designated and utilized under this section, seems to me much more than is needed for the prosecution of a plan such as is being considered. It is impossible to say what could or could not be done under authority so broad as this.

Section 6 of the act authorizes the President to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the act and makes the violation of any such rule or regulation punishable by fine of not to exceed $5,000. It would be possible under the terms of this provision for a citizen to offend against an Executive order issued, without his knowledge, thousands of miles from his home, and to suffer a severe penalty as a result thereof.

Personally, I am satisfied that the President would administer this power as fairly and as honestly as possible. But this is not a question of my belief in the President of the United States; it is, rather, my comprehension of a system of government in which I believe and which I want to see prosper and succeed.

A HARMONY CALENDAR

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a very short but learned treatise of my friend, Dr. Swan, who is the head of the chemical department of the University of Mississippi, in regard to the calendar known as the "harmony calendar."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOXEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following short but learned treatise of my friend Dr. J. N. Swan, who is the head of the chemical department of the University of Mississippi, in regard to the calendar known as the "harmony calendar."

A HARMONY CALENDAR

Where can I get a calendar is being asked these days. A few years ago the same persons would be saying, "What can I do with all these calendars?" Before the depression calendars were put in your hands whether or not you wanted them. Possibly the publishers of calendars are getting ready for a changed calendar. Numerous suggestions have been made proposing to reform our calendar and put it on a more logical and usable basis. The present writer wrote such an article just 30 years ago, but like all the rest it did not give a complete solution of the problem, and it has not been followed. The latest article on the subject is in the January number of the Rotarian.

As has been suggested many times, we are using at present a most confusing calendar. In fact, we can do nothing with future dates without having a printed calendar to consult which covers the dates involved. We are so accustomed to this that we do not notice the difficulties to which we are subjected. For example, if one wished to make a date for July 10, 1935, on what day of the week would that date occur? The only ordinary way to answer that question would be to go to a printed calendar. It has occurred to many that we should have a calendar which would not require this at all, but the difficulty has been to find one which will do this for us and not meet with serious objections.

Calendars may be changed. In fact, we are now using a changed calendar, and the one which was changed to make our calendar had been changed at a still earlier date. We celebrate Washington's Birthday on February 22, but he was born on February 11—this was due to the reforming of the calendar, but it does not interfere with the proper celebration of the anniversary of that historic event. Some of our celebrations are moved about on our present calendar, Easter and Thanksgiving being examples of such annual events. These celebrations are on different dates in different years. They are on the same days of the week from year to year. Another set of anniversaries are on the same dates from year to year, but the days of the week on which they are celebrated vary from year to year, such as Washington's Birthday, the Fourth of July, and Christmas.

CALENDAR DIFFICULTIES

All agree that the calendar should be reformed, but there are some acute difficulties to be overcome in bringing this about. First of all is the fact that the time which the earth requires to make the circuit about the sun is not a number of days which has whole-number factors; in fact, it is a number which has a long fraction attached to it, namely, 365.2422 days. Next is the fact that over most of the world we have the 7-day week as a measure of time. The number 7 has no factors and therefore cannot be easily used with 365 days or with that number with its fraction attached.

It must not be forgotten that our calendar does not have to coincide with the time when the earth and the sun reach a certain position with respect to each other. If we wished to do so we could make a year of 350 days which we could divide into 10 months of 35 days each and thus have 5 weeks in each month. It is true that the time of the beginning of the year would move, and in a few years it would begin when we are having summer in the northern hemisphere, and, still later, it would keep on moving until the first of the year would again be in the winter time. We all desire, however, to have a calendar which will start the year at a given relative position of the earth and sun, year after year exactly the same as nearly as we can arrange it.

CALENDAR REFORMS

Two general ideas have appeared in the proposed calendar reforms. One idea is to have the calendar so arranged that each month will begin on the same day of the week. This is best reached by having 13 months of 28 days each. There is 1 extra day to be cared for as well as a fraction of a day. All previous efforts fail to harmonize this with a regular succession of weeks of 7 days each.

The second idea is to make the quarters of the year have the same length by continuing to use the 12 months and rearranging the length of the months. The extra day again gives trouble in these plans. The succession of weeks of 7 days each must be followed and this is difficult to arrange. The only method of overcoming the difficulty is to have successive years start on different days of the week. The changes at the ends of the quarters and at the end of the years would make a calendar just as confusing as the present one. The extra day complicates it just as it does in the present calendar.

Mr. R. F. Chapin, in the January Rotarian, proposes having 12 months, as at present, but changing the figures a little, so that each month should have either 30 or 31 days. He proposes that the eighth and twenty-third and thirty-first days of the month should be "gala days" or holidays, and thus each month would have 28 days which are really counted. This proposal immediately does violence to the religious week of 7 days. Moreover, business in general does not want 2 or more "gala days" or holidays in each month.

A HARMONY CALENDAR

The writer has a proposition which he believes will solve the difficulties in trying to reform the calendar. The proposition is that each year shall have 13 months of 28 days each, and that the first day of all months in all years shall come on the same day of the week. Monday would be the normal week day to be made the first day of each month, but another day could be chosen if it was thought better. Under this plan the calendars for each of the 13 months would be identical and the calendars for the years would be identical, and there would be 52 weeks of 7 days each in the year.

To take care of the extra 1.2422 days of the actual sun year, it is proposed that at the end of each sixth year a week be added to the calendar of that sixth year. Thus, if such a calendar was adopted in 1936, then the years 1936, 1937, 1938, 1939, and 1940 would each have 52 weeks, and the year 1941 would have 53 weeks. December of 1941 would have 35 days or 5 weeks. This extra week at the end of each sixth year might be called a leap-year week, just as we now call the 29th of February a leap-year day.

This plan would in no way interfere with the week of 7 days. Any plan which interferes with the 7-day week cannot be adopted in Christian countries. France tried the 10-day week, but it had to be abandoned. In addition to the fact that it takes care of the 7-day week, it also gives the most desirable monthly calendar.

There is a small fraction of a day, namely 0.4532 of a day in each of the 6-year periods which is not accounted for in the above plan. In 92 years this fraction would amount to 1 week of time and this could be cared for by adding a week to 1 of the first 5 years of the 6-year period of that time, just as we refrain from having a leap year now in certain years, and therefore did not have a leap year in 1900. Had the new calendar been adopted to begin January 1, 1935, the years 2025 and 2031 would be years with the leap-year weeks added. The year 2027 could thus be also made a leap year and would take care of that extra week which had accumulated from the fraction of a day not cared for in the extra week of the 6-year periods during the 92 years.

This plan cares for the holidays in first-rate fashion. In fact, it will make all of them come at regular dates and not at fluctuating dates, unless it is Easter, and there is a movement on foot to make Easter come at a uniform time. This plan, using Monday as the first day of the year, would bring Washington's Birthday on Monday, February 22, every year. Labor Day would come on Monday, September 1, each year. The Fourth of July, Thanksgiving, and Christmas would come on Thursday every year, the 4th and 25th of each month being on Thursday.

In this plan there is no splitting of weeks at the end of the months.

The objection might be raised that the number 13 is not divisible. In answer it might be said that the half year is 182 days, the quarter year is 91 days, and the months are all 28 days—all definite and uniform numbers. These are the terms usually used in business transactions where parts of the year are specified.

This plan does not in any way interfere with special holidays which might be desirable. It is the best arrangement for special holidays, namely, that they are not rigidly determined to come every month at a certain time, but they may be placed where it is best to have them.

The extra thirteenth month may be placed where it is thought to be most desirable. In the proposals which have been given for a 13-month year the most common suggestion is that the extra month be placed between June and July, and some such name as Sol be given to it.

It might be allowable to call this the harmony calendar.

For this harmony calendar it may thus be claimed that—

1. It harmonizes the months of the year, making their schedules of days all identically the same;
2. It makes the detailed calendar of each year just like that of every other year;
3. It preserves the 7-day week undisturbed;
4. It cares for the exactness desired by astronomers; and
5. It may be easily adopted.

It might be asked, When could such a calendar be adopted? It could be adopted January 1, 1936, for example, by calling Wednesday, January 1 (as it will come in our present calendar) by the name Wednesday, January 3, 1936. This would thus assume that January 1936 began on Monday of that week. There is no worth-while objection to such a plan. In the year 1940 January 1 comes on Monday in our calendar. By waiting until that year the new calendar could be put in use without changing of any names of days.

Naturally, it would be desirable to have most of the countries using the Gregorian calendar agree upon a date of putting the new calendar into effect, but this is not essential at all, and the sooner it is adopted the better for humanity.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H. J. Res. 112. Joint resolution to clarify the definition of disagreement in section 19, World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended.

APPROPRIATION FOR RELIEF PURPOSES

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 117, making appropriations for relief purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. O'CONNOR in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 117, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read the title, as follows:

H. J. Res. 117. Making appropriations for relief purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 24 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from New York has 30 minutes remaining.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, my opposition to this bill in its present form is threefold.

First. It calls for a surrender of constitutional functions, great powers and solemn duties of Congress, and the transfer of the same to one man without any restrictions whatsoever. He cannot only spend nearly five thousand million dollars, but he has the power to "establish and prescribe the duties and functions of any governmental agencies", and so forth.

He has the power to "consolidate, abolish, or transfer the duties, the property, the personnel of any governmental agency." He has the power to "postpone, but not beyond January 30, 1937, the termination of any governmental agency." He has the power to transfer any of these powers to whomsoever he pleases—Hugh Johnson, Rex Tugwell, Raymond Moley, Barney Baruch, Frankfurter, or anybody else. He has the right to exercise the power of eminent domain, which is probably the nearest any people can come to making any man king over them. The power of eminent domain is a power which is purely peculiar to sovereignty. It is one of the incidents of sovereignty and has never before in the history of the Republic been surrendered up to any one man. Under it he can take any man's property—real or personal—and do absolutely as he pleases with it. This is the exact language of the bill: "He can acquire by the power of eminent domain any real or personal property and grant, sell, or lease, or otherwise dispose of, any such property."

Ladies and gentlemen, the people of America in this period of unemployment and distress are willing to do anything reasonable, but they are not ready to knowingly surrender their country into the hands of any one man or group of men. I cannot conceive how any patriotic American could accept such power, much less ask for it.

Further, the bill carries a provision that strikes at the liberty of every American. None of us know but that we may be an early victim of this base invasion of our rights. This bill gives the President the right to prescribe rules and regulations which, if violated, call for a punishment of as much as a $5,000 fine and imprisonment in a Federal penitentiary for 2 years. Who can claim for himself the honor of being an American citizen who will, when representing a constituency of about 300,000 people, by his vote sell them into dictatorial bondage? Ladies and gentlemen, to use the misfortunes of our people when hungry to usurp such unheard-of power is not right. It is wrong. It should be opposed.

The second reason I have for opposing this measure is that its authorship is uncertain. As we say in the legal profession it is an illegitimate child. Nobody has claimed it. I am advised on good authority that the President claims never to have read it. I firmly believe that the President did not write it. I know that it was not written by any Member of this House. I would not object if the President had written it or if he would say that it had been written for him by certain individuals. Neither would I object if it had been written by someone not a Member of Congress if some Congressman or committee of Congress would sponsor it. But when something is brought in here from nowhere by nobody and crowded down our throats under gag-rule tactics, I for one refuse to swallow. There are a hundred men on the Democratic side of this Congress who could, in an hour or two, draw up a bill that would meet this situation. I have favored all relief measures, and I have never supported any tactics that are partisan or especially designed to embarrass or thwart the President. I was active in procuring the passage of this first relief measure enacted under Mr. Hoover's administration. I am in favor now of voting an abundance for relief, but I am not willing to Russianize America in doing so. American charity in an American way is what Americans want, and not Russianized charity in a Russian manner. I repeat, it would have been an easy matter to draw a relief bill. I have prepared a bill myself, which may not be worded quite as elegantly as this creature of an unknown world, but it is in good unambiguous English and is constitutional, for it does not even strain any constitutional provisions. It would bring American relief to Americans in an American way. It does not call for a surrender of the powers of Congress, and it recognizes that the Executive, the President, is entitled to be trusted to the fullest extent in the exercise of those powers given him under the Constitution. Matters that call for Executive direction should be placed with the President. The placing of these powers, however, are matters for Congress. My bill is as follows:

Resolved, etc., That in order to promote the general welfare by providing relief from hardship and distress due to unemployment, there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000,000, the same to be used and expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and in the following manner and amounts and for the following purposes and under the direction of the following agencies:

First. One hundred and fifty million dollars to be used and expended for construction and improvement of rural roads not at present included in our Federal and State highway system and not entitled to participate in funds provided under the present Federal Aid Road Act of 1916 as the same was amended by the act of 1921. Said amount to be apportioned among the States, 25 percent according to population and 75 percent according to rural mail routes, star mail routes, and school bus routes located in each State. Said amount to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Postmaster General and to be expended for the benefit of rural people.

Second. One hundred and fifty million dollars to be used for the construction and reconstruction of roads and highways included in the Federal and State highway systems, the same to be apportioned among the several States, 75 percent in accordance with area, road mileage, and population, and 25 percent in accordance with the population. Said sum to be expended in the same manner and by the same agencies as is provided in the Federal Road Act now in effect.

Third. One hundred million dollars for the control of floods and to aid water navigation in the Valleys of the Ohio, Mississippi, and Missouri Rivers; and fifty million for the control of floods and to aid navigation in any and all other navigable river valleys. The same to be spent under the direction of the Board of Engineers of the War Department.

Fourth. Fifty million dollars for the furtherance of reforestation and for the purchase of submarginal lands for that purpose. The same to be spent under the direction of the agencies now lawfully authorized to carry on such work. Said agencies to make a report of their activities to the Secretary of Agriculture monthly and to Congress on the first day of its regular sessions.

Fifth. Fifty million dollars for the furtherance of programs for the prevention of soil erosion. The same to be expended under the direction of the agency now lawfully authorized to carry on such work. Said agencies to report their activities monthly to the Secretary of Agriculture and to Congress on the first day of its regular session.

Sixth. Four hundred and fifty million dollars to be expended under such plans and regulations and by such agencies as the President of the United States might direct. The same to be used for the relief of the blind, deaf, and other physically handicapped classes and for the extension of the work being done by the Civilian Conservation Corps; and for Public Works programs; and for such programs of work relief as the President may direct.

The same to be expended for the following classes of relief in the amounts and extents as the President might direct:

1. Public Works programs.
2. Federal Emergency Relief programs.
3. Civilian Conservation Corps programs.
4. Roads, highways, and grade-crossing programs.
5. Programs for the relief of the blind, the deaf, and other classes of physically handicapped citizens.
6. Such other programs as the President may prescribe.

A report of all expenditures under this item is to be made to Congress on the first day of its regular session.

Any portion of the moneys herein provided for remaining unexpended on June 30, 1936, is to be covered into the Federal Treasury at that time.

My third opposition to this bill is that it is tainted with politics. Why extend this bill beyond the fiscal year which ends June 30, 1936? Never before have we been called upon to appropriate money for more than 1 fiscal year in advance. I am surprised that so many conscientious Jeffersonian Democrats can stand for such an innovation. It marks the Tammanyzing of the Democratic Party. The claws of the Tammany tiger are clearly visible in this deal. There can be no doubt that this is the principal reason why the parentage of this legislative monstrosity has been so carefully withheld. It is not necessary to appropriate billions for use in 1 year. There is yet unspent from last year's appropriations over $5,000,000,000. This is five thousand millions. Not in any single year, with all the graft and extravagance that have attended the administration of relief, have thousands of relief dispensers been able to dispense more than $3,000,000,000 in any one year. With the five billion yet available and unspent, and with the one additional billion that my bill would provide, no sensible man can claim that the funds provided are not adequate. This whole set-up is a plan to see to it that Santa Claus will be able to function in 1936 as he did in 1934.

Ladies and gentlemen, this is not right. I yield to no man in my desire to see to it that adequate relief is furnished to those who need it. My record is 100 percent in that respect, not only by vote but by voice in Congress and out of Congress. I cannot stultify myself to assist any program that makes the destitution of the people a vehicle to ride into political ascendancy or to foist upon this country un-American theories and philosophies. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota such time as he desires.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, the net results of our gigantic relief program do not add up to an impressive total, although the sums that we have expended in relief of all sorts constitute a total that staggers the imagination and is far beyond the grasp of the human mind. We have gone on the theory that we can borrow and spend ourselves into prosperity; but after 22 months' adherence to that fallacious doctrine, we find that we have progressed but little toward economic recovery. Indeed, the Minnesota House delegation met with several officials from the city of Minneapolis on Tuesday who informed us that the number of families on relief in that municipality have increased from something over 11,000 to over 16,000 during the past year. Not a very encouraging sign, is it?

I have been loath to comment upon the administration's program for recovery, for I have realized that those charged with the great responsibility have done their level best to cope with a situation that is without parallel in its seriousness, but it seems to me that the time has come to face the whole thing in a practical and dispassionate manner, and what I shall say will be said in the hope that my suggestions may prove helpful.

Last year we appropriated $3,300,000,000 for relief and relief work. Today we are going to pass a measure calling for $4,880,000,000 for the same purpose, a grand total of $8,180,000,000, or a sum equal to $8.18 for every minute since the beginning of the Christian era. Much of this money has been unwisely spent. We have financed Government projects that will directly compete with private industry, thereby reducing employment in such industries and further aggravate our unemployment problem. This has resulted in creating a feeling of distrust and uncertainty in industry, and the net result has been a further tightening up along the whole line. It must be patent to all that this line of attack has been almost barren of results. The fact that we yet have over 10,000,000 unemployed is sufficient proof for the assertion that the present relief program must be revamped and molded along lines that are economically sound; and as I see it, the first step is to give some of the college professors who have been administering the recovery program the air, if I may use a colloquialism that is expressive, if not elegant, and turn the task over to practical and sound business administrators, whose heads are not filled with impractical and visionary theories.

Mr. Chairman, we should, if necessary, give direct aid to industry by ordering them to immediately reopen factories, mines, quarries, and other activities upon the positive assurance that they will be protected against loss for a specified period, based upon normal production.

Then, Mr. Chairman, we should immediately stop making trade treaties with competing and defaulting countries so that the American producer may again be assured the American market on a basis where he may meet foreign competition upon an equal footing. This would put several million Americans to work at once.

Then, Mr. Chairman, we should immediately take steps to make defaulting countries pay what they owe us, or make satisfactory arrangements to do so, and in this connection I desire to incorporate as a part of my remarks an article appearing in the Washington Herald on January 22.

KNUTSON INSISTS UNITED STATES TAKE ACTION TO COLLECT DEBTS—PROPOSES FIVE MEASURES TO "SMOKE OUT" DEFAULTING NATIONS

By John T. Lambert

Representative HAROLD KNUTSON, of Minnesota, a veteran of 16 years' service in Congress, declared last night the United States must proceed in some way to collect the eleven thousand million dollars owed by foreign nations or be regarded "as the champion international sucker of all time."

Mr. KNUTSON has filed five bills in Congress, the purpose of which, he says, "is to impose a sense of honor upon the foreign defaulters and to obtain justice for the American taxpayers and public." These bills provide:

1. That Secretary Morgenthau, in his daily statement of Treasury conditions, shall publish a concise table of the foreign nations and their debts to Uncle Sam "in order that the American people shall always have these facts before them."

CANAL FEE PROPOSED

2. That a fee 20 percent in excess of the regular transit and port charges shall be levied upon all vessels of defaulting nations that employ the Panama Canal.

3. That the sale of the securities of any defaulting nation, or its subsidiaries, shall be prohibited in the United States.

4. That triple export or import duties shall be assessed upon the products of any nation which has neither paid its war debts nor made a satisfactory adjustment for future payment of them.

5. That Secretary of State Hull be requested not to engage in any new reciprocal-trade agreement with any country that has "welshed."

Mr. KNUTSON said that the emissaries of foreign nations are "pounding at the door" of the Secretary of State with their demands for favored treatment in the tariff treaties which he was authorized by Congress to negotiate.

DANGER TO INDUSTRY

In every one of these treaties, he said, there is the inherent danger that some American industry will be ruined for benefit of foreign competitors in the low-waged countries. He continued:

"The average American citizen hesitates to do business with his neighbor who owes him money until he has a satisfactory agreement on the back bill.

"In the dealings with nations the same policy of honesty and prudence should be pursued.

"The foreign nations have shamelessly repudiated their solemn war debts to the American Nation and American people. We should not grant them a penny or a favor, nor should we engage in any commercial transaction with them, as between nations, until they have told us when and how they are going to pay what they owe us."

RECALLS BLAINE POLICY

Mr. KNUTSON, who is a Republican, believes Congress yielded tariff-treaty-making power to Secretary Hull on the assumption that trade relations would be promoted with the South American Republics. He feels neither Congress nor the American public suspected any cornucopia would be opened for benefit of the European countries that "are shamelessly in default."

He recalls James G. Blaine made the desire for trade expansion with Latin America "the cornerstone of the brilliant policy as Secretary of State." President Coolidge, after many disappointing experiences with France and Europe on debts, disarmament, and other international policies, came to the final and firm decision that the hope of future trade and satisfactory diplomatic relationships lay in the countries of the south.

TRADE GAINED AND LOST

For that reason, Mr. Coolidge left the soil of the United States and went to Havana to address the Pan American Union. He approved the excursion Mr. Hoover made into Latin America after his election as President and before his inauguration.

Prior to the World War, England and Germany possessed about 54 percent of Latin America's foreign trade. The United States had less than 20 percent of it. When the war cut the foreign nations off, the United States captured up to nearly 60 percent of this business. Mr. Coolidge believed that this was one of the substantial contributions to the prosperity of that period.

In the subsequent years, the European nations have again penetrated Latin America. They have conducted an insidious propaganda there against the United States and have regained much of the market recently enjoyed by American business and labor.

On March 24 of last year, when we had before us the administration's reciprocal tariff measure, I said in part:

It has been said that there is nothing new under the sun, but there is, and I refer to the new philosophy on economics for which the proponents of this bill stand. In recent statements to the press and in addresses delivered in various parts of the country they announce without reservations that the first requisite for recovery in this country is to build up the foreign purchasing power through a lowering of our tariff rates, which, of course, can only mean an increase in imports from other countries and a corresponding decrease in domestic production.

To that plea my answer is, let us build up American purchasing power first. That is most urgent, and it is our duty to do so. Why should we lower our tariff at the present time when there is so much unemployment, suffering, and want at home, and when we are already importing too many agricultural and industrial commodities in large volume, such as cheese, rye, barley, flax, sugar, vegetable oils, carpets, footwear, glass and earthen ware, textiles, matches, pulp and print paper, and many other products, and while prices at home, by reason of these imports, are at their lowest levels in history and unemployment the greatest?

In Minnesota and in other States manganese mines are closed down. Does anyone seriously contend that it would materially promote prosperity in this country if we were to buy yet more manganese ores from Russia, Brazil, and India, when thousands of idle manganese miners are walking the streets in this country looking for work?

Does anyone really believe that we should increase our imports of shoes, glassware, earthenware, toys, etc., from Czechoslovakia and Japan and reduce the output of the American factories engaged in the production of these commodities?

Does anyone honestly believe that we should produce less American textiles and worsted goods and buy more from Europe and Japan?

Under the philosophy advanced in behalf of this legislation we would build up the foreigner's buying power by giving him the American market, which is about all that we have left as a result of our ill-fated venture into international politics back in 1917–18; but let us make no more mistakes. To do so would be at the expense of the American farmer, workingman, and manufacturer.

On all sides we find foreign goods and products on sale. Go into any market place, and one will find that all canned beef on the shelves comes from South America, the matches from Japan and Russia, plate glass and cement come from Belgium, the crockery and earthenware from Czechoslovakia, as does a very considerable part of the footwear offered for sale. It is almost impossible to buy clothing made from American fabrics, and the oleomargarine and soaps that we use are largely made from vegetable oils that come from the Orient. Dried and powdered eggs in large quantities come from China, and most of our print paper and pulp come from Canada and Europe. We should not lose sight of the very important fact that when the President reduced the gold content of the dollar he at the same time reduced all specific tariff rates by 40 percent, and as a result we are today on the lowest tariff plane of any country that I know of, and here it is frankly proposed to lower the bars yet more. Have we lost our senses? It would seem so.

The proponents of this measure evidently fail to take into consideration two very important factors which make the proposed plan visionary, impractical, and undesirable: First, the home market consumes over 90 percent of our total production in normal times, hence we should primarily concern ourselves with retaining that market. Second, in order to increase our foreign commerce we will have to extend the credit necessary to permit them to buy from us, and already they owe us billions of dollars for goods bought, which we will never get, or we will have to buy from them commodities to cover such transactions. Save in the case of tropical fruits, tea, coffee, rubber, silk, and a very few more commodities, everything that will be sold to us we already produce at home, and to buy such items abroad can but further restrict production at home, with its resultant curtailment in labor. I ask you, Is it good business for us to go into such a deal?

As I see it, the whole proposition is premised on unsound ground. Surely, we will not be able to help our unemployment situation in this country by buying abroad more of the things we can and should produce at home. The testimony had before the committee clearly shows the real purpose of this program, which is to lower the tariff and make it easier for the foreigner to sell to us.

We are now buying altogether too much from other lands, and much of our unemployment is the direct result of these large foreign purchases. Is it not high time that we give some heed to the welfare of our own people? If we would restore the farmers' and laborers' purchasing power by giving them the home market, we will be able to take care of the surpluses in all American industries.

Those of you who were Members of the Seventy-third Congress will recall that in speaking in opposition to the reciprocal-tariff measure I said that all trade agreements negotiated thereunder would be at the expense of American agriculture and industry. Well, the agreement recently entered into with Cuba bears me out. In that agreement we have reduced the import tax on Cuban sugar from $2 per hundred pounds to 90 cents per hundred, and at the same time increasing her export quota of sugar by 300,000 long tons which was accomplished by arbitrarily reducing American cane and beet production by the same amount. Then, too, we have reduced the import tax on Cuban Irish potatoes from the regular tariff rate of 75 cents per hundred to 30 cents per hundred, and only last week a delegation of potato growers came down here from Maine to protest that they cannot compete under the new arrangement. They ask to make potatoes a basic commodity under the A. A. A.

In the Cuban agreement we have also reduced by 50 percent the protection American growers of early vegetables have heretofore enjoyed. I ask you, Is this the way to end the depression? If it is, then I, and millions of other Americans, will have to admit that we are mistaken, and that the cure lies in free trade.

Mr. Chairman, in closing let me make a final plea that we immediately take steps to bring pressure on the nations that have repudiated their sacred obligations to us. They now owe us approximately $11,000,000,000. The good Lord knows we could use that money to very good advantage just now. Let us pass the five bills that I have introduced to make them pay. If we will employ the weapons we have at hand, they will immediately take steps toward that end in a manner that will be satisfactory to us. And may I at this time quote for the benefit of our State Department from a letter written by George Washington to C. C. Pinckney, dated July 8, 1796:

> It is a fact too notorious to be denied, that the greatest embarrassments under which the administration of this Government labors proceed from the counteraction of people among ourselves, who are more disposed to promote the views of another nation than to establish national character of their own.

Mr. Chairman, that patriotic observation is more applicable today than at any other time in the history of the Republic.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER].

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Chairman, this resolution assaults the dignity and the integrity of the House from two angles. In the first place, it was left like an illegitimate child, fatherless and motherless, upon the doorstep of the south wing of the Capitol, where it was found by some messenger of the "brain trust" and carried into the Rules Committee, where it found fond asylum. It is of unknown authorship. We know not who wrote it. We only know who did not write it. It was not written by any Member of this House, nor written or considered by any committee of the House except the Rules Committee, which wrote only the outrageous rule under which it is considered by the House.

In the second place, it encroaches upon the legislative prerogative of the House not only by delegating to the Executive unprecedented powers, never exceeded even in time of war, but also by conferring the power upon the Executive in turn to delegate these powers and prerogatives to persons and governmental agencies not elected by the people nor in any way authorized to exercise these powers by any mandate from the people. It has been well stated in this debate that the issue at stake is that of the honor and integrity of the House of Representatives as a legislative body. Every Member of the House is ready and willing to vote for relief for those in dire need, but does not relish being bound and gagged and forced to violate his oath of office to support and defend the Constitution of the United States.

Power is a glutton. Human nature is so constituted that a taste of power stimulates the appetite for more power. Given a foot it wants a yard. Given a yard it asks for a mile. In the Seventy-third Congress we were told that if we would grant the President the power asked by him it would be only for the emergency; that it was justified by the stern mother of invention, necessity; that the depression was such an emergency that extraordinary powers were demanded for the Executive; and that desperate diseases demanded desperate remedies—heroic treatment.

We on this side of the aisle were generous. While we hesitated to vote these powers, questioning both their necessity and their constitutionality, we laid aside for the time our reluctance and aided in delegating to the President powers such as were never before granted to a President in time of peace. It was urged that these powers were to be of the most temporary character, that once granted the legerdemain of the "brain trust" with its experiments would rain down prosperity and plenty like manna from the sky in no time, and that then we could go back and live under the Constitution.

So we poured out the money of the people like water, billions upon billions, producing beautiful deficits and unbalancing the Budget contrary to all platform pledges. But the manna failed to materialize and the experiments fizzled out one by one. There was some little financial activity such as prodigious sums spent by the Government would naturally produce. We primed the pump but the old thing just squeaked and groaned and quit and nothing more.

In fact, as a matter of governmental policy, in this new deal, which is not new at all but as old as human history, we are flying in the face of all political tradition and human experience in government. For many years our executive department and Federal authority have been expanding and encroaching upon the natural and constitutional prerogatives of the States. That has been the persistent tendency for the past half a century. This has entailed an enormous centralization of power which has manifested itself in a huge bureaucracy. Anyone not afflicted with political strabismus, cataract, or pink eye can discern that this centralization of power and its delegation to the Executive has advanced in the past two years by leaps and bounds, under the impulse of the "brain trust" whose most important protagonist complains that the greatest obstacle to the progress of the new deal is—

> The unreasoning and almost hysterical attachment some Americans have for the Constitution of the United States.

We have had the executive department exercising not only executive powers but also legislative powers granted by a too subservient, rubber-stamp Congress. I am not blaming the Executive for this, but the House itself.

> The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
> But in ourselves, that we are underlings.

Today we are asked to go far beyond the bad example set by the Seventy-third Congress. We are asked in this resolution practically to abdicate our legislative prerogatives and powers and to turn over to the Executive and his "brain trust" advisers carte-blanche authority to appropriate and spend the money of the people at will, to abolish departments, and to create others not specifically authorized by Congress.

Montesquieu, whom Madison called the "oracle of liberty", declared:

> There can be no liberty where legislative and executive powers are united in the same person or body of magistrates because apprehensions may arise lest the same monarch or senate should enact tyrannical laws to execute them in a tyrannical manner.

That has been accepted as a political axiom for over a century and a half. In our country this centralization of power has grown until it would stagger Thomas Jefferson if he knew this performance of his party, and would astonish Alexander Hamilton by transcending any idea of a strong government that he ever expressed or any that even his enemies ever put in his mouth.

In England, which in his day Montesquieu termed the "mirror of liberty", the tendency has been just the opposite as to centralization and the exaltation of the executive. There the executive has continually diminished in the exercise of his powers and the most numerous branch of the legislative machinery of England, the House of Commons, has continuously augmented its power until it is the real responsible government of England. So well known and established is this that though the King of England has certain powers, for example, the veto, he never exercises them. In fact, he probably would not dare to exercise that power.

I do not want to see the President become a figurehead, but I want him to exercise only those powers that the wise framers of the Constitution saw fit to confer upon him, and to have him insist that Congress exercise its functions of lawmaking and its sacred duties as prescribed in the Constitution, and not demand that the House abdicate its power as a legislative body. As the Commons in England, which represents the people directly, was exalted so was English liberty extended and fortified. As the House of Representatives and the Congress of the United States abdicate their powers and prerogatives and delegate them to the Executive or other agencies or bureaus so will American individual liberty languish.

There is another matter that I wish to direct to the attention of the House, and the country, too, and that is the tendency to use the public money in relief efforts for political capital. From all over the country comes the report that in the November election Democratic politicians appealed to persons on relief rolls to vote for Democratic candidates, particularly those who were candidates for Congress, making use of such expressions as: "Do not bite the hand that feeds you. The President is feeding you." "Vote for candidates for Congress who are 100 percent for the President."

It has been stated that in many cases persons were warned that any activity in opposition to Democratic candidates would result in separation from the relief rolls. It is unbelievable that the President had any part in or knowledge of the prostitution of the money of the people for political purposes if it existed, but his party owes it to the President as well as to the party to institute an honest and thorough investigation of such alleged activities and disavow them if true as well as to mete out proper punishment. No blacker stain could besmirch the record of a party or administration than the infamy of preying upon the hunger and destitution of the people for political advantage at the expense of the Public Treasury. Naturally such allegations are the subject of exaggeration and no doubt in many cases of misrepresentation. There is one sure and positive refutation and that exists in a thorough and impartial investigation of these alleged conditions. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MORAN].

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Chairman, it is with genuine regret that I find myself unable to agree with the leadership of my party on the issue now before the House. Some of my objections may be detailed as follows:

First. I oppose section 6 of the bill. I do not believe that any one man should have authority to prescribe rules and regulations and have the violation punishable by such penalties as $5,000 or 2 years' imprisonment, or both. That is not democracy; that is Fascism. Federal crimes and their punishment should be matters of statutory enactment by Congress and should not be subject to the whim of some bureaucrat to whom the President might delegate such power. To say that it has been done previously is no logical answer. If this section creates any new crimes, the foregoing criticism is applicable; if it does not, the penalty portion of the section is unnecessary.

Second. I oppose that part of paragraph (c) of section 5 of the bill which proposes to grant to the President the amazing power of acquiring personal property by eminent domain. No American citizen would legally be safe in the possession of rights all Americans cherish.

Now I fully realize that under the rules these two sections, 6 and 5, are subject to amendment. But I comment on the fact that they are subject to amendment because of the activity of those Members of Congress who believe that bills should be scrutinized carefully, regardless of their source, and that no amendment could even be offered if all Members adopted the attitude of some who seem to feel their duty is discharged if they merely mumble their faith in the present Chief Executive.

I, too, have a high regard for and great faith in the present Chief Executive, but I have more regard for the Constitution of the United States, the form of government under which we live, and good government for all of the American people.

Third. I oppose in part section 2 of the bill. What is the object of the Appropriations Committee's figuring such items down to the last dollar on other appropriations and then giving a blank check in this case? This new relief organization, whatever it is to be, should come to Congress like every other unit of the Government, explain its needs and desires, and have Congress pass on them.

Fourth. I oppose section 1 of the bill. I am not challenging the motives of any Member of Congress, but I for one do not favor voting $4,000,000,000 in a lump sum to any President to do with as he will. This is a legislative, not an executive function. As one legislator, I stand ready to perform my share of that duty. I oppose delegating a distinctly congressional authority to the Executive. I regret that the Executive has asked for such unprecedented authority. Feeling it my duty to the people who have to pay the bills, and believing strongly that the best interest of our people and our form of government requires that the United States House of Representatives should retain all of its constitutional rights and not delegate them to the Executive, I voted against the gag rule. The issue is now framed between relief on a basis I greatly oppose or no relief. Remembering the suffering of my constituents, I have no option but to vote for the bill. But I want the RECORD to show my viewpoint on this important matter, as I believe the time is coming when the United States House of Representatives will reassert itself under the Constitution in the interest of truly representative government.

I call your attention to page 1 of the printed hearings on this bill, which I quote as follows:

> The CHAIRMAN. * * * Secretary Morganthau, Admiral Peoples, Director of the Procurement Division, and Mr. Bell, Acting Director of the Budget Bureau, are present. As the Secretary has some very important business, we will hear from him first.

This is illustrative of the situation today. As Secretary Morgenthau "has some very important business" he can only tarry a while with the House of Representatives committee to testify regarding an appropriation of $4,000,000,000! My viewpoint is that this appropriation is of vastly more importance than any matter that could possibly engage the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The only answer by administration forces is that we should have confidence in the President; that he is a good man; that he will use those unprecedented policies wisely. The Supreme Court of the United States has very recently answered that argument in the following language:

> The question whether such a delegation of legislative power is permitted by the Constitution is not answered by the argument that it should be assumed that the President has acted, and will act, for what he believes to be the public good. The point is not one of motives, but of constitutional authority, for which the best of motives is not a substitute.

Must the Supreme Court again point out the error of our ways? This admonition should be sufficient to cause us to proceed from now on in accordance with the Constitution.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MARSHALL].

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, as I sat in the Chamber yesterday and listened to the arguments advanced for this measure, my memory took me back to the arguments that were advanced when the $3,300,000,000 was being appropriated in the last Congress. The hope was held out to the country that that would bring about a business millenium, but the results certainly have not justified that hope and belief. The real problem before our country today is that there are still 10,000,000 unemployed. I was interested to note the statement of Gen. Hugh Johnson to the effect that when those 10,000,000 men were employed the volume of business of the country amounted to about $90,000,000,000 per year, whereas now it amounts to only about $40,000,000,000, so that the real problem before the Congress is to bridge a gap of $50,000,000,000 of business, which represents the slack in this country. It will be readily seen that the appropriation of this $4,000,000,000, even though it does employ 4,000,000 people, will be only a temporary employment—only another shot in the arm—and what I am fearful of is that the next Congress will be asked to make another large appropriation for the same purpose. My thought is that the Congress cannot legislate to put to work those other 6,000,000 men immediately, but it can refrain from passing any more legislation that will further hamper recovery, and it is my belief that much of the legislation by the last Congress instead of being an aid to recovery has been a hindrance to recovery.

I refer particularly to most of the provisions of the National Recovery Act, tampering with our money structure, the law authorizing the President to enter into reciprocal-trade agreements, all of which, along with some other acts passed, have discouraged rather than encouraged the investment of capital in private industry, and this is the only process by which recovery will ever come.

The creation of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and in connection therewith the Government's entering into business in competition with private industry, coupled with the threat to establish such projects throughout the land, is now preventing an investment of millions of dollars in betterments and extensions of those industries the very existence of which is threatened by the Tennessee Valley Authority and the other proposed projects of a like nature.

We shall wake up one of these fine mornings and find our Government in debt in an amount impossible of payment without uncontrolled inflation and that all the business left in the country will be the businesses operated by the Government. We cannot tax private industry to raise a fund and then invest this fund in direct competition with the taxed industries without drying up the industry so taxed.

It has been my prediction—and I am more convinced each day—that the Government must get out of business and give private industry a breathing spell, free from threats and cajoling, or it will soon become necessary for the Government to take over all business under a planned State socialism.

The best service that this administration could now render would be to change its threatening attitude as regards private industry and give private industry some encouragement to go forward by announcing some fixed policy on which business might rely for at least a few months in advance.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, no bill that has been presented to the Congress since I have been a Member of the House has given me graver concern than the pending measure. During the Seventy-third Congress I supported every measure recommended to us by the administration. As to the wisdom of some of the emergency legislation, I entertained doubts, but I resolved those doubts in favor of a definite program in preference to a "let-nature-take-its-course" program, and in favor of a leader who has the confidence of the people and who, in the words of Mordecai, seemed to have "come unto the kingdom for such a time as this."

We have weathered the worst of our economic storm. While there is still much unemployment, our banking system has been placed on a sound basis, wholesale foreclosures have been prevented, and much of our debt structure, both public and private, has been refinanced on easier terms. While the farm dollar is still below parity, the income and the purchasing power of farmers has greatly increased, and many private corporations that showed net losses for 1932 show net gains for 1933 and 1934. The increase in the national income has exceeded the amount expended by the Federal Government for relief and for "priming the pump" for recovery. In other words, we have made definite gains since March 4, 1933, and have now reached the point in our recovery program when we could and should calmly and deliberately consider legislation of a permanent character.

The history of every great upheaval has been to carry remedial measures to an extreme, and in an effort to prevent a recurrence of known evils to adopt measures which in themselves create new problems.

I feel that the time has come in our national experience when it is important for every man in public life to confess his political faith and to clearly and unequivocally express his views on social and economic problems. It should be possible to do so without impugning the motives, the unselfishness, and the patriotism of those who entertain different views.

Since, as I have stated, I have previously supported every other administration measure, and since I can neither conscientiously nor consistently with campaign promises support the pending bill, I feel that I owe it both to our great leader, to the constituency that elected me, and to myself to give my reasons. I also feel that I owe it to my colleagues in the House to explain why I voted for the rule and then will vote against the bill.

I voted for the rule because I considered that I was morally bound by the action of the party caucus of which I was a participating member. I believe in government by parties and in playing the game according to the rules. The rules of our Democratic caucus are that a two-thirds majority binds the other members.

But there was no caucus action on the merits of the pending bill, and even had there been I would have been excused from the action of the caucus by reason of my campaign pledge to work and vote for economy with a view to balancing the National Budget as soon as practicable.

There were a number of reasons that induced me to make that campaign promise. I was elected in 1932 upon the Chicago platform of the Democratic Party which pledged our party to economy, sound money, and a balanced Budget. I supported in 1933 the President's economy program, including opopsition to the immediate cash payment of the bonus. I publicly commended the President's message to the Congress delivered in January 1934 in which he expressed the hope that we could balance our Budget for 1936 and thereafter live within our current revenue. I commended the utterances of the President in October 1934 on the occasion of the dedication of the veterans' hospital in Virginia, in which he said that we must put first things first and that while this administration did not intend to permit any man to starve, it would be necessary to curtail the present spending program.

Hon. Montagu Norman, Governor of the Bank of England, said last week that no man was wise enough to fully comprehend the meaning of all the changes through which we are now passing. Certainly I would not be so conceited as to think that I am. I know very little about national finance and still less about international finance. My opinions, of necessity, are based upon my limited personal experiences and personal observations, and colored, of course, by my early instruction in the realm of political science. I grew into manhood believing that our capitalistic system is the best system. I recognize, of course, that there have been and still are inequalities, but the happenings of recent years in Russia, Germany, and Italy fully demonstrate that no other system of government yet tried is free from inequalities.

I grew to manhood believing that the form of constitutional government evolved by Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Franklin, Adams, and their colaborers, with the respective States reserving unto themselves all powers and functions not specifically delegated to the Federal Government, and with the Federal Government composed of three separate and distinct branches, was both wise and sound.

My observation of private financial transactions has been that when an individual, firm, or corporation continues to spend more than he or it earns, bankruptcy is the probable end. For 6 years I was legal adviser to the board of supervisors of my home county—the agency that prepares county budgets and levies county taxes. That experience convinced me that a big bonded debt was a great handicap to any county, and that after it reached a certain proportion of taxable assets repudiation would be the result. For 6 years I served in our State senate and for 7 years as the head of a State department. My experience with State financial affairs convinced me that a large bonded indebtedness was a dangerous thing. Following the World War motor transport developed by leaps and bounds in the United States, and with the wide-spread use of motor cars and trucks came a wide-spread demand for improved highways on which they might operate. In Virginia there was a bitter and long-drawn-out fight over whether these improved highways should be built with the proceeds of a $50,000,000 bond issue or from current revenue. When that issue was ultimately submitted to the Virginia electorate it voted overwhelmingly for a pay-as-you-go policy in road construction. While sister States and political subdivisions thereof were freely spending the proceeds of tremendous bond issues, Virginia and the political subdivisions thereof kept relatively free from bonded debt. As a result, when the depression came Virginia was better able to weather the storm than many States, and ultimate recovery in Virginia, if the taxpayers of that State are not bowed down by an overwhelming national debt, will be more rapid than in some States. And the financial integrity of the Commonwealth of Virginia was preserved not only by refusing to expend the proceeds of bond issues but by making personal sacrifices during the depression. The appropriations for all State activities were drastically reduced, and the salaries of all State employees were cut, not 5, 10, or 15 percent, but 30 percent.

It is with this background, and representing in the House a section of Virginia that was settled and developed by industrious and thrifty Scotch-Irish and Dutch, that I approached the pending proposal to add to the present appropriated and unexpended sum of $5,000,000,000 an additional appropriation of $4,800,000,000. The pending resolution places the entire sum in the hands of the President to be expended as he thinks best. We have been given assurances that the President will personally supervise the expenditure of this huge sum. In my opinion, that will be physically impossible. I am willing to vote for any sum necessary to prevent human suffering; I am willing to vote for a reasonable appropriation to continue a public-works program, notwithstanding the fact that I have not approved of some of the projects for which public-works funds have been expended in the past.

But I cannot bring myself to vote for this appropriation of $4,800,000,000.

I would not undertake to speak dogmatically as to what is wise and what unwise, what is safe and what unsafe with respect to a national spending program and a tremendous national debt, but will content myself with the mere expression of the personal opinion that the present spending tendency is neither wise nor safe. I roughly estimate that Virginia's share, as the seventh largest taxpayer in the Nation, of the proposed aprpopriation will be about $250,000,000, or equal to the entire cost of operating our State government for half a decade. I do not feel that any benefit that Virginia will receive, directly or indirectly, from the total expenditure will be commensurate with the burden of the repayment of Virginia's share of the debt.

When I was a boy an old farmer used to tell me, "The tendency of everything is to be more so." The tendency of a Federal spending program is undoubtedly to be more so. Close on the heels of this bill will come the demand for the immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates. I for one do not feel that I could consistently vote for the current appropriation and then deny my comrades of the World War the payment of a debt already contracted on the ground that the national credit and the public welfare could not stand the payment. I will not undertake to enumerate the other demands of group benefit payments and social reform measures nor the socialistic proposals that have been made that will involve a continuing operating expense as well as direct injury to private business through Government competition. But I do not feel that I am extravagant when I estimate that the demands for the coming fiscal year could easily run our national debt to $40,000,000,000, and since it is so easy to spend when we abandon a tax-levying pay-as-you-go program our commitments for the 1937 Budget could easily reach $50,000,000,000.

The distinguished Chairman of our Appropriations Committee, on February 5, 1934 (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1940), said:

> Direct relief or the dole for the able-bodied produces moral disintegration, destroys industry, self-reliance, and initiative. It dims ambition, converts energy and industry into indolence and idleness. If permanently continued, its recipients become as satisfied with their existence as a miserable worm that ekes out its miserable existence in the dust of the earth.

And again on page 1941 he warned us against an unlimited spending program when he said:

> Mr. Speaker, to those who advocate increased appropriations over this $950,000,000, let me say that relief in a nation the size of ours is like a rapacious maw. It would absorb every dollar you appropriated, whether it was one billion or five billion dollars. We must conduct this relief project with a discriminating judgment, so we will have just enough money to relieve the actual necessities and the real suffering of our people.

We are not told, except in the most general terms, of the present necessity for an appropriation of $4,800,000,000, nor how this vast sum will be expended, but the New York American of last Sunday quoted the Public Works Administrator as stating to the National Housing Conference, on January 19, that $1,500,000,000 would be spent for slum clearing. Under the subheading, Seeks Expansion, Secretary Ickes is reported to have said:

> Low-rent housing is my major personal interest in the whole P. W. A. program, and I propose to do everything in my power to justify this undertaking of the Government.
> We hope that under the leadership of President Roosevelt this program will be greatly expanded this year.

There are other phases of House Joint Resolution 117 to which I could not lend my support. Subsection D, of section 4, on page 5, either authorizes the continuance until June 30, 1937, of all emergency legislation of the Seventy-third Congress, or else we do not know what it means. I do not wish to give a blanket endorsement to N. R. A. Before I vote for a continuance of N. R. A., I wish to know the exact form in which it is to be continued.

In a great emergency, whether a war or economic war, I feel that the legislative branch is justified in delegating to the executive branch great and unusual powers, but in normal times I think the legislative branch should discharge its constitutional functions or else admit its incapacity to do so. The most unusual powers sought to be conferred upon the executive department, with respect to all governmental agencies, the powers of eminent domain, the making of rules and regulations having the force and effect of law and whose violation shall be punishable by a fine of not exceeding $5,000, or imprisonment not to exceed 2 years, or both, are not, under the terms of the resolution, temporary grants of power in the midst of a great emergency but permanent grants. In my opinion this is unwise and in all probability unconstitutional.

And, on page 6, line 1, the resolution provides that the President may—delegate the powers conferred on him under this joint resolution to any governmental agency, including corporations.

I repeat my opening remark: "No bill that has been presented to the Congress since I have been a Member of the House has given me graver concern than the pending measure."

I regret to find myself in opposition to Presidential plans, but I cannot support the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have not heard anyone state that this resolution now before the House is not going to do some real humanitarian work. In other words, nobody has up to the present time proved that it is not going to help the unemployed. I maintain it is an excellent piece of legislation. The only objection I have to the measure is the amount of money requested—which, in my opinion, is insufficient. It should be ten billion instead of four billion dollars. Nevertheless, a great deal of good can be done with the amount of money asked for in this bill.

It has been intimated here that this is a socialistic piece of legislation. Every time a constructive and humanitarian piece of legislation is presented before Congress, someone intimates it is either "socialistic" or "communistic." The fact that it is going to take people off the relief roll and give them employment proves it to be a very constructive and humanitarian piece of legislation. I know in my district—and I believe every other Congressman can say the same thing—I have had men and women come to my office and state that they cannot get work unless they get on the relief roll. I maintain that is abominable, and the sooner we do away with this system the better it will be for the people of the United States. I think it is the duty of every conscientious Congressman to support this legislation because it is going to do something which has not been done before, namely, put people back to work. [Applause.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON.]

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, as the executive branch of the Government receives ample publicity in regard to its policies, I trust that the press will make it clear to the country that the Republicans have not sought to lessen the amount of funds mentioned in this measure. Their only concern is with the application, the handling of those funds, and the attempt to transform the legislative branch of the Government into a debating club which will not function to any degree after this resolution is passed.

Two instances arose yesterday that might be mentioned at this time, one inanimate and the other highly animate. The press reported that for the first time in 50 years the American flag refused to ascend the flagpole on the south part of the Capitol, the portion occupied by the House of Representatives. If this inanimate object could express itself, doubtless it would say that it felt it was to be replaced by a white flag, the badge of surrender, and could not serve further. [Laughter and applause.]

Then, when a Member of another legislative body suggested an amendment to the World Court proposal, the executive branch vigorously and sharply protested against any proposal that would diminish or take from that branch of the Government any of its powers or authority. I do not know whether thought was given to the suggestion made by the same branch to the House of Representatives in proposing to strip the House of its powers. Possibly it was conceded that they had tucked the majority Members of the House of Representatives in their little beds for the session, and they would not need to be awakened until the day we adjourned.

But I want to direct the attention of the House to two words, which I believe are very important in the consideration of this resolution. I refer to section 4, subsection (a), to the word "establish", and, in line 20, to the word "abolition." The first, the right of the Executive to usurp legislative power in creating; the latter to terminate or destroy—both exercising major discretionary legislative power as distinguished from rules and regulations of a minor character.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON] has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'CONNOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration House Joint Resolution 117, had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and the message ordered printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

During the three or four centuries of white men on the American Continent we find a continuous striving of civilization against nature. It is only in recent years that we have learned how greatly by these processes we have harmed Nature, and Nature in turn has harmed us.

We should not too largely blame our ancestors, for they found such teeming riches in woods and soil and water—such abundance above the earth and beneath it—such freedom in the taking that they gave small heed to the results that would follow the filling of their own immediate needs. Most of them, it is true, had come from many peopled lands where necessity had invoked the preserving of the bounties of nature. But they had come here for the obtaining of a greater freedom, and it was natural that freedom of conscience and freedom of government should extend itself in their minds to the unrestricted enjoyment of the free use of land and water.

Furthermore, it is only within our own generation that the development of science, leaping forward, has taught us where and how we violated Nature's immutable laws and where and how we can commence to repair such havoc as man has wrought.

In recent years little groups of earnest men and women have told us of this havoc; of the cutting of our last stands of virgin timber, of the increasing floods, of the washing away of millions of acres of our topsoils, of the lowering of our water tables, of the dangers of one-crop farming, of the depletion of our minerals—in short, the evils that we have brought upon ourselves today and the even greater evils that will attend our children unless we act.

Such is the condition that attends the exploitation of our natural resources if we continue our planless course.

But another element enters in. Men and Nature must work hand in hand. The throwing out of balance of the resources of Nature throws out of balance also the lives of men. We find millions of our citizens stranded in village and on farm—stranded there because Nature cannot support them in the livelihood they had sought to gain through her. We find other millions gravitated to centers of population so vast that the laws of natural economics have broken down.

If the misuse of natural resources alone were concerned, we should consider our problem only in terms of land and water. It is because misuse extends to what men and women are doing with their occupations and to their many mistakes in herding themselves together that I have chosen, in addressing the Congress, to use the broader term "national resources."

For the first time in our national history we have made an inventory of our national assets and the problems relating to them. For the first time we have drawn together the foresight of the various planning agencies of the Federal Government and suggested a method and a policy for the future.

I am sending you herewith the report of the National Resources Board, appointed by me on June 30, 1934, to prepare the comprehensive survey which so many of us have sought so long. I transmit also the report made by the Mississippi Valley Committee of the Public Works Administration, which committee has also acted as the Water Planning Committee in the larger report.

These documents constitute a remarkable foundation for what we hope will be a permanent policy of orderly development in every part of the United States. It is a large subject, but it is a great and inspiring subject. May I commend to each and every one of you who constitute the Congress of the United States a careful reading of these reports.

In this inventory of our national wealth we follow the custom of prudent people toward their own private property. We as a nation take stock of what we as a nation own. We consider the uses to which it can be put. We plan these uses in the light of what we want to be, of what we want to accomplish as a people. We think of our land and water and human resources not as static and sterile possessions but as life-giving assets to be directed by wise provision for future days. We seek to use our natural resources not as a thing apart but as something that is interwoven with industry, labor, finance, taxation, agriculture, homes, recreation, good citizenship. The results of this interweaving will have a greater influence on the future American standard of living than all the rest of our economics put together.

For the coming 18 months I have asked the Congress for $4,000,000,000 for public projects. A substantial portion of this sum will be used for objectives suggested in this report. As years pass the Government should plan to spend each year a reasonable and continuing sum in the development of this program. It is my hope, for example, that after the immediate crisis of unemployment begins to mend, we can afford to appropriate approximately $500,000,000 each year for this purpose. Eventually this appropriation should replace all such appropriations given in the past without planning.

A permanent National Resources Board, toward the establishment of which we should be looking forward, would recommend yearly to the President and the Congress priority of projects in the national plan. This will give to the Congress, as is entirely proper, the final determination in relation to the projects and the appropriations involved.

As I have already stated, it is only because of the current emergency of unemployment and because of the physical impossibility of surveying, weighing, and testing each and every project that a segregation of items is clearly impossible at the moment.

For the same reason the constituting of fixed and permanent administrative machinery would retard the immediate employment objective.

Our goal must be a national one. Achievements in the arts of communication, of transportation, of mechanized production, of agriculture, of mining, and of power, do not minimize the rights of State Governments, but they go far beyond the economics of State boundaries.

Only through the growth of thought and action in terms of national economics can we best serve individual lives in individual localities.

It is, as these reports point out, an error to say that we have "conquered nature." We must, rather, start to shape our lives in more harmonious relationship with nature. This is a milestone in our program toward that end. The future of every American family everywhere will be affected by the action we take.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 24, 1935.

WORK RELIEF APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the resolution, House Joint Resolution 117.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 117, with Mr. O'CONNOR in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to my colleague from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I willingly testify to the fact that that was a very admirable statement just read and should be the means of persuading anyone who has any doubt about this bill to vote for it. [Laughter on the Republican side.] I do not need any such persuasion, and I willingly vote for the bill. However, I deem it my duty to point out one or two objectionable features of it, which I hope will be remedied by amendment.

I refer particularly to section 6, which gives the right to the President to prescribe rules and regulations and make it a penalty for the violation of those rules. There is no standard to guide him. He is a law unto himself. There is no criterion which the President must follow when he makes those rules and regulations, violation of which may be a criminal offense. He may make those rules on "good" grounds or on "coffee grounds", as it were. The field is wide open. He or other Federal agencies, because he can delegate his power, can make these rules and regulations in the morning and repeal them at night, without any knowledge on my part or any knowledge on your part or any knowledge on the part of the citizenry in general. That is placing the citizenry in jeopardy, and I want to protest against it. Giving the Executive and an army of Federal officers and agencies power to make regulations—and to make them even in secret, in camera—and conferring at the same time power to create criminals out of violators of these secret rules is a serious thing and should give one pause. The President, since his inauguration, has already issued almost 1,500 Executive orders, some carrying criminal penalties. The N. R. A. Executive orders already cover over 10,000 pages. Little is known of them. Executive orders are issued right and left. Little is known of them, yet many carry criminal penalties.

I call attention to a very significant fact. In Texas a man was alleged to have violated an Executive order growing out of the petroleum code. It was alleged to be a criminal offense—see United States against Smith, no. 3, October term, United States Supreme Court. He was dragged into the Federal court in Texas. His attorneys filed a demurrer. The district court sustained the demurrer. An appeal was taken to the United States Supreme Court by the Attorney General of the United States, and, lo and behold, what was discovered? It was discovered after all that trouble and difficulty and turmoil that the regulation had been repealed. Neither the defendant, the United States attorney, or officials of the office of the Attorney General knew anything about the repeal of the regulation until the case went to the Supreme Court. See how this man had been placed in jeopardy. Let us hesitate long before we say violation of any Executive order shall be a crime.

That case should be sufficient reason to make you doubt the worth-whileness of section 6. "Stop, look, and listen" before you pass the sixth section of this resolution as it is printed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, this is the most important piece of legislation that has ever come from the Committee on Appropriations. It is not only the most important because of the huge sum involved, but it is also important because I think this is the first time in the history of the United States in which the Congress has so brazenly abdicated its powers.

In spite of the importance of this piece of legislation, the hearings before our committee were nothing more than a farce. A farce! First of all, the Secretary of the Treasury hurried in on his way to a more important meeting and suggested he would be able to borrow in the bond market $4,000,000,000. Then Mr. Bell, Director of the Budget, briefly explained to the committee where the $880,000,000 would come from. Finally, Admiral Peoples gave us a general picture of the kind of public works that possibly might be—not would be, but might be—engaged in. He told the committee nothing that they had not already learned through the President's message. There was nothing specific, nothing definite, and nothing informative. In answer to every question that was asked him as to what the set-up might be, as to what the program was, he frankly answered, "I do not know", "I am not in a position to say", or "the President alone must decide that." He gave no answers serving to unfold, in an informative way, a description of policies, programs, or methods.

So we are, in effect, not only handing the President a vast blank check for $4,800,000,000, not to mention the vast grant of legislative powers which are really not ours to give but which the resolution, would, nevertheless, have him assume because he has demanded them, but we are doing it without any information whatsoever as to what the President is going to do with the money when he gets it. It seems to me the orderly way to have handled this question would have been to have brought in a simple resolution making available immediately $880,000,000 to carry through until July the necessities for relief. The money is running short and there should be additional funds provided for the relief of distress between now and the 1st of July, and that is the purpose of the $880,000,000 in this resolution. A simple resolution at this time, to make that money available immediately, would have been voted by acclamation in this House. There is not a single Republican on the floor of this House or anywhere in the United States, so far as I know, who is opposed in any way to the granting of all necessary and adequate money for the relief of distress in this country. I have voted for each and every relief bill that has been passed during the past several years, bills calling for the expenditure of billions and billions of dollars. I will vote for any honest measure for relief. Who would not? And knowing its cost I would face it, and urge that we meet it to the last cent that is honestly justified, and this whether it was less or more than provided for in this resolution.

If we had appropriated the $880,000,000 we would have taken care of the situation until July. Between now and then, there would have been plenty of time for the President to have developed his full program for the $4,000,000,000 that he proposes to spend after the 1st of July. The Congress will be in session for at least 5 months and there would have been plenty of time to have presented that program to the Appropriations Committee of the House which then could have acted on the matter with some intelligence. Instead of that we had a hearing lasting about 2 hours, the proceedings of which took up about 46 printed pages, whereas the subcommittee considering any ordinary appropriation bill generally sits from 1 to 2 months going in detail into every question that may arise. We give the ordinary appropriation bills involving incomparably smaller sums of money very careful and detailed attention; yet when it comes to a bill appropriating $4,880,000,000 it is hurried through with only 2 hours of hearings, without any real consideration, in a very hasty and unorderly way.

There are no methods for attaining stabilized costs with factors of increasing and greater necessities; but there are methods of meeting greater necessities with smaller costs. And it should be our duty—not only to the distressed in the way of thus enlarging opportunities for the amelioration of their condition but to the taxpayers and the general citizenry of the country who create the funds making these expenditures possible—to help find those methods, explore them in common counsel with the Executive, and to apply them.

To say that there has been any such effort at the expression of our plain and constitutional duty, or any such common counsel, or common cooperation between the legislative and the executive branches of the Government on the purposes of this resolution is to shame the truth. And for us to deny that we should insist on our duty, as the legislative branch, admits a confession of its violation to which I will not be a party.

In the few minutes I have been allotted out of the meager time apportioned to the consideration of the resolution as a whole, I obviously cannot discuss comprehensively the grants of legislative authority to the Executive. That they scandalize every precedent, every constitutional prohibition, and every sense of honest recognition of our trust and obligations cannot, to my mind, be controverted.

In this resolution we are not simply appropriating for the unemployed and the distressed. That would be a fine purpose and a welcome duty. But made part and parcel of this measure, woven into it inextricably on the Executive demand, are policies and programs of Government in embryo, which are only now to be wondered at, guessed at, but granting Executive powers which if used may change entirely social and economic concepts which are now at the heart and root of our philosophy of government. In it we are asked to give powers on the exercise of which no one can now judge their eventual or immediate influences on the social or economic fabric of this country of ours. I shall not detail them here. They have already been pointed out, warningly and with apprehension, by both Republican and Democratic speakers.

I appreciate that we are to be given the technical privilege of offering amendments to this resolution. But I also appreciate that the realization of any such expectation is a sorry futility, so far as the hope of actually securing amendments is concerned, under the gag that has been put upon the majority in this House.

But notwithstanding the reality of the prospects, I shall nevertheless join with any effort, either Republican or Democrat, that will seek to divorce the two major objectives of this bill—provision for the relief of distress and provision for the grant of legislative powers to the Executive, with their only now guessable effects on the life of the people in this country. I shall myself seek to offer amendments to effectuate this purpose. Failing that privilege I shall offer perfecting changes and amendments that I believe would bring this resolution nearer to those aims which are declared on its face—the relief of distress. I shall support any changes or amendments, advanced or sponsored by others, directed to the same end—that this resolution be an honest relief measure, undisguised, and not also an auxiliary vehicle for the grant of legislative powers which are absolutely foreign and alien to the purposes the country at large understand this resolution contemplates.

It is in that spirit that I shall consider and that I shall attempt to influence the substance this measure contains. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, at present I do not care to yield for interruptions.

To begin with, I desire to make a very plain and definite statement. Speaking for myself, and as far as I am able, for my Republican colleagues in the House, we are ready at this time to appropriate immediately any amount of money the President of the United States says is absolutely necessary to meet the immediate emergency of unemployment. We are, however, equally opposed to the various provisions of this bill which are entirely legislative and which further subject the House of Representatives and the entire legislative branch of government to the will of the Executive. It seems to me this is a definite statement and that there is no reason for misunderstanding as to our position.

There are two parts to this bill, one for relief and one for giving additional legislative powers to the Executive. If I understood the majority leader correctly, he said he did not think there was any authority conferred in this bill that had not already been given to the Chief Executive. If there is no new authority given, it certainly is not necessary to make any such provisions in the bill itself. Personally, I believe he has all the authority necessary, granted under legislative acts of the last session, to entirely meet every emergency of present conditions.

Certainly there is no one who desires to claim parentage of the present bill. During the debate yesterday the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] asked who was responsible for this measure. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] volunteered the information that the President of the United States was. In reply to the specific question of Mr. FISH, "Who is the author of this bill?" Mr. SABATH responded, "The President of the United States." Mr. FISH further asked: "Does the gentleman speak with authority?" Mr. SABATH replied, "Yes."

At a press conference yesterday morning, I suppose held at the White House, the President is quoted definitely stating that he had never read this bill, and in reply to a question as to who sponsored or wrote the bill it was intimated that it was written in the House of Representatives. It is very evident that the wires are crossed between the Executive Mansion and the President's spokesmen here on the floor.

I listened very carefully yesterday to the arguments of the majority in support of this bill. Four distinct reasons were advanced. The first was that there was ample precedent from the Republicans. My friends, the way you have maligned every single act of the former Republican administrations, I am surprised that you would crawl behind the skirts of any past act of those administrations to find excuse for what you are doing at the present time. You cited as a specific instance authority given to the Treasury Department in relation to public buildings. Let me say to you, my friends, the only real authority that was given to the Treasury Department was the question of selection, of preference as to which of these buildings would be built first. Each building and each project was appropriated for by this House and by Congress in both its branches, and the only thing that was left for the Treasury Department to decide was the selection of which building should be built first. They gave us their preference, and it was acted upon. There was no legislative authority contained in that act.

The next instance you cited was the mail contracts. We did give the Postmaster General certain authority in regard to certain mail contracts, but it was limited at both ends, and there was no legislative authority that went along with it or any right to change existing laws or contracts. So it has no analogy to the present situation.

Then I was very much amused by the statement of our good friend, the Chairman of this committee, as to his reason for supporting this legislation. He said it was necessary to keep us from the dole system. Let me say to you, my friends, that if there is one thing upon which the Members of this House are almost unanimously agreed it is that we are opposed to the dole system. When we are unanimous on a proposition, what reason exists for referring action on it to some other branch of the Government, a branch which, as far as I know, has gone farther and done more to put us on the dole system than any act of Congress that has ever been passed? [Applause.] As a matter of fact, the whole argument of the majority has been for the purpose of building up a smoke screen behind which you could hide and soothe your own conscience for doing something that you know is not right, for doing something you know you ought not to do, something you know is not American or for the best interests of the American people. [Applause.]

At the beginning of this session the President came before Congress, and, in his usual graceful manner, spoke about cooperation between the executive and legislative branches of the Government, and the demarkation of the duties of each branch of the Government.

Here is the way the President cooperates: He sends up this bill and it is supposed that he gave the order that it should be passed with 3 hours' debate and without changing a single word of the bill. Last week we debated on the number of policemen in the District of Columbia 3 days, but there are only 3 hours for a bill of such far-reaching possibilities. You dare not submit this bill to full and free consideration.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Has the gentleman any evidence that the President gave such order?

Mr. SNELL. I refuse to yield at the present time.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I just wanted to know the gentleman's authority for his statement.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, we have a proposition before us to appropriate $5,000,000,000, which is one-eighth of the entire income of the 125,000,000 people for 1 year, and we are to put it through this House without adequate consideration, without hearings, and without the possibility of expressing our opinion or voting on the various items of this bill. Is that cooperation? I leave it to some of you people to decide that point for yourselves.

Somebody must have had some plans, some definite policies, some figures put down on paper somewhere to have arrived at this $5,000,000,000 sum. I maintain that whatever those figures were, whatever those policies were, and whatever those projects were, we are entitled to have the information before the House of Representatives. I appreciate the fact that the Committee has arisen this afternoon to hear an argument from the President as to why this bill should be passed. This is the first time during my membership in this House that any such thing has ever been done. If the President had all the information that he claims to have now, why did he not present it to the Appropriations Committee and let us have the benefit of the information? [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I do not yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to an incident.

Mr. SNELL. If the President does not have any plan for spending this money, he should not be intrusted with this enormous sum. I appreciate full well that you cannot earmark every single dollar of this bill. I would not go so far as to ask it, but I do think that some general policies could be laid down and some general estimates made for the information of the legislative branch that is responsible for the spending of this money.

Mr. Chairman, if I had my way about the matter, I should like to provide a billion dollars of this fund for private industry. This would go farther in the relief of unemployment than any single thing that has been done up to the present time. [Applause.] I should like to have someone tell me what the hurry is. It has been admitted that they have no definite plan. It has been admitted that they are going to try to get something by the first of March.

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I do not care to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman said that he wanted some information. I will give him that information if he wants it.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] would not yield to me yesterday, and I was courteous enough not to interrupt him again.

Mr. WOODRUM. I apologize.

Mr. SNELL. What we want to know is something along general lines, what is even proposed, and we are entitled to have the information. Then we could give it intelligent consideration.

Who ever heard of advertising to the country to have every municipality, every town, every county, and every State render suggestions to Washington as to how to expend public funds? No one ever heard of such a proposition before, which proves the recklessness of the spending of the present administration.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this principle of general lump-sum appropriation. So far as I know, it has been the policy of this House during the last 20 years I have been here, regardless of which political power has the majority, to oppose the general principle of lump-sum appropriations. Practically every debate that has ever been had in this House has always been along that line, and the men who were best qualified to speak upheld this contention.

I want to call attention, Mr. Chairman, to a statement made by the able, distinguished, and present beloved Speaker of this House when we were discussing the general Budget proposition. That was the time when there was nothing partisan before the House. The distinguished gentleman from Tennessee was giving the House and the country the benefit of his long experience in connection with appropriations, and he was advising us from the deepness and the fullness of his own heart. Some of you, perhaps, have never read or heard of this language.

I quote from the speech he made at that time:

I do not believe in clothing the President with the power to absolutely control the Nation's purse strings to the exclusion of a majority of the direct representatives of the people. It would be giving to him a power which it was never contemplated that he should have, and, to my mind, would be a clear departure from all the principles which underlie a republican form of government.

He goes on further to say:

It is not intended by the enactment of this proposed law that the Appropriations Committee of Congress shall no longer hold careful hearings in order to determine whether or not the estimates submitted shall be allowed. It is intended to make the President responsible for the estimates which are transmitted to Congress. There his responsibility ends.

He further stated:

And in order that it may properly meet this responsibility its committees should continue to give the closest scrutiny to every item of the appropriation which is requested.

There is a better statement than I can possibly make, and cannot be improved upon by any opponent of this present resolution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman the balance of my time.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I cannot make a better argument than he made at that time.

May I refer further to a statement made only a year ago by our present able watchdog of the Treasury, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], when he was discussing the same matter. He stated:

In the first place, in my judgment, for this Government to have two appropriating authorities, one in the legislative branch and the other in the executive branch, is inimical to an economical government.

[Applause.]

The gentleman further stated:

This is what we have had during this fiscal year.

And then he went along to give individual instances where they had appropriated large sums of money that Congress had refused, and he said that it was absolutely wasted.

Another question has been brought up that I want to refer to a minute, and that is the question of pork. If you will give us the right to amend this bill we will fix it so that there will be no pork for you in the bill. What we are afraid of as much as anything else is that it will all be Democratic pork and all of it will be used at election time. We want to fix it so you cannot do as you did last year, that is, send a million dollars up into the State of Maine in the middle of the summer, six weeks before election, for the direct and only purpose of influencing the election.

If you will give us an opportunity to amend this bill we will put it in shape so that any self-respecting man can vote on it; and at the present time, you know yourself it is not in such shape and that it ought not to be passed. [Applause.]

We would try to amend the bill, as follows, if you would give us an opportunity:

First, strike out sections 4, 5, and 6, which contain the most objectionable legislative features of the bill, and further amend it so that (no. 1) no part of the appropriations made by this act shall be expended for any project nor shall any project be undertaken under this act which will unwarrantably place the Government into competition with private business and industry, and so far as feasible this work shall be done by private contracts.

No. 2. That the expenditures of funds for work projects under this act, so far as may be reasonably possible, shall be apportioned among the several States in the proportion that the number of unemployed in each State bears to the total number of unemployed in the whole United States.

No. 3. That on all work projects located wholly within a State, preference shall be given in employment to the unemployed of the State where the work is to be performed, with as equal distribution as possible to all parts of the State, provided that the usual qualifications necessary may be used in selecting this labor.

No. 4. That no person desiring work on these relief projects shall be subjected to any political test or qualification;

No. 5. That so far as possible in administering direct relief it shall be done through the State and local agencies.

No. 6. That all unobligated balances of funds, appropriated under this act, shall, on June 30, 1936, be covered into the Treasury.

This would make it much nearer a relief measure and more acceptable to every person desiring to maintain our present form of government. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, my good friend from New York is just as accurate in some of the statements he made a while ago as he was in his statement that I refused yesterday to yield to him. I am sure I have never refused to yield to the distinguished gentleman or to any other Member of the House since I have been here, and, particularly, to my good friend from New York.

I feel sorry for those gentlemen who are content to come here and criticize and then complain that they have not more time in which to do it. Why, an hour and a half is ample time for the Democrats over here who have confidence in the President of the United States to tell you and the country why they are willing to trust him, and from now until doomsday would not be enough time for you gentlemen who are content to throw monkey wrenches into the recovery machinery and to criticize and find fault. Nothing Franklin D. Roosevelt can do would please you. When he comes here and asks you for the power to put men to work and take them off of relief, you object to it.

What would you do? Oh, this is a different question. I know what you would like to do. You would like to see the recovery plan fail, because then you think perhaps the people of the United States, in their desperation, would turn back again to those old, forlorn, and, I hope, soon-to-be-forgotten days, when you had the administration of affairs of government.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. PERKINS. Does the gentleman think we are more interested in our political lives than we are in the welfare of this country?

Mr. WOODRUM. Well, I would not like to say that individually to my distinguished friend from New Jersey, but I want to say this to the gentleman: Every time we come here with some plan to try to advance this recovery program and you gentlemen, as a unit, rise in your places and find fault and try to obstruct and block and defeat it, then my peculiar and acute sense of smell persuades me to believe that there is something in the Free State of Denmark that ought to be looked after a little bit.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman again yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. Does not the gentleman know that a great many of us on this side have voted for legislation suggested by the President, and does not the gentleman know we have more at stake in our own private fortunes than we have in our political lives?

Mr. WOODRUM. Oh, I am sure the gentleman has much at stake in his private fortune, but we are not thinking about private fortunes, we are not thinking about political fortunes, and the man in the White House is not thinking about political fortunes. He is thinking about recovery for this great country [applause], and no man upon that side of the aisle can level his finger at the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue and say that sordid poltical considerations have characterized the action of the President of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. If we believed that confidence in the future and in the business of this country is more important than experimentation, how could we do otherwise than vote against this legislation?

Mr. WOODRUM. There is no way for the gentleman to vote except against it, because he is in the peculiar position that if this program is successful, as it will be, my good friend will have even fewer Members on his side of the aisle than he has now. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. Yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I am going to use the remaining time, or at least a part of it.

I wonder if the Members on the floor of this House and on this side of the House fully realize what is the matter with the Members on the other side of the aisle. Let me tell you the way I size up the situation.

President Roosevelt occupies a position between two great forces in this country—the ultraconservative, those who represent the vested interests, those who represent the combines, and those who represent the trusts, on one side, and the radicals on the other; and I tell you, my friends, he is standing like a stone wall and being assaulted on one side by the Republicans, who represent the reactionary and vested interests, and being assaulted on the other side by the Bolsheviks, the Communists, and kindred radical organizations, as well as others who advocate that there should be taken from those who have and $5,000 given to each citizen of the United States by Government action. I tell you that the President of the United States, realizing and appreciating the situation, is the only hope for the preservation of representative democracy upon this continent.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. What I want is some real information on this bill; and I should like to ask the gentleman, with reference to non-Federal projects, why it is that my Governor before election, and now after election, can promise my municipalities 50 percent of any work where they may see fit to raise 50 percent? Is there any reason for it?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I cannot go into the administration in any particular State.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will they give us 50 percent?

Mr. BUCHANAN. As I say, I cannot go into that. Now, gentlemen, the distinguished leader of the minority [Mr. SNELL] made a great-to-do about this bill and stated, among other things, that the President had sent orders up here that it be passed in a given time—with 1 hour's general debate. That statement is without one scintilla of truth, no matter who says it or where it comes from. [Applause.]

People are too reckless in their statements, making statements that are not true, statements that ought not to be made without careful investigation and without being absolutely sure that they are right.

The fact is that the President was consulted, and consulted extensively, about the preparation of this bill. He has approved every section as written and as proposed to be amended. He wants it. He has authorized me to say on the floor of the House to those who are cooperating with him that he would like very much to have the bill in the shape it is in; that he thinks it will bring about relief with the appropriations carried therein.

I am going to ask you on this side, and those upon the other side liberally inclined, to join us in the interest of our common country, disregarding politics, disregarding individual wealth, and everything of that kind, and let us put every able-bodied man in the entire country to work. When you do that, private industry will follow in line in mass, and you will have complete recovery in this country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 4 minutes remaining.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE].

Mr. LEE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, it seems to me that the opposition to this bill is entirely partisan. I heard yesterday an attack from the other side of the House by the gentleman from Galena, Mo. His attack seemed to be on the "alphabetical relief."

Last summer I happened to be in his district, and this story came to me while I was there. They said he was out campaigning and making fun of the alphabetical relief. He said, "You cannot name any combination of letters that does not stand for relief—A. A. A., F. E. R. A., N. R. A."

He said, "Can anybody name a combination of the letters of the alphabet that does not stand for some form of relief?" An old Missouri farmer said, "Yep—G. O. P." [Laughter.]

The question seems to revolve on whether or not we have confidence in the man in the White House and his ability to properly use this money for recovery. Has his record in the past been such as to shake the confidence of the people in his ability to use this money for the benefit of the people? Can any man here stand up and say that any act of the President, since his closing of the banks and guaranteeing the deposits of the people on down to the present day, has been such as to shake the confidence of the people in his recovery program? Would the vote in the last election indicate that we have no confidence in his ability to use this money for speedy recovery?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe this closes general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further general debate, the gentleman is recognized.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the rule, it is now in order for all committee amendments to any and every section of the bill to be offered.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then, I send up the first amendment, which is on the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will sections 4, 5, 6, and 7 then be read under the 5-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. At the conclusion of the consideration of the committee amendments the entire joint resolution will be read.

Mr. BULWINKLE. For further amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. On sections 4, 5, 6, and 7. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McFARLANE. After the committee amendments have been considered and the bill read in full, would H. R. 1, as an amendment to this measure, as a relief measure, be germane to this resolution?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will determine that if the question arises.

Mr. McFARLANE. It will arise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 11, strike out the signs and letters "(in-" and strike out all of line 12, and on page 2, strike out all of lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, and all of line 5 down to and including the word "work)" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Federal or non-Federal."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, this merely strikes out the enumeration of any classification of projects which, in my judgment, is only illustrative, because it is not all-inclusive. It has caused some confusion, so it may well be eliminated.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Does the gentleman mean to strike out the word "work"?

Mr. BUCHANAN. As amended, it would read:

"And for such purposes and/or such projects, Federal or non-Federal.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. To whom would these various communities and municipalities have to present their requests, to be heard, to get some of this money?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They would have to file an application with the President.

Mr. SNELL. It would be directed to the President himself?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The President himself, as he is going to be the administrator of this himself and personally make the allotments.

Mr. SNELL. He has got some job.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If a member of the committee desires recognition in opposition to the committee amendment, he would have the preference. [After a pause.] The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment in the interest of the constitutionality of the legislation. There is nothing in the language sought to be stricken out that is exclusive of other projects. The language as put in the bill originally does lay down some guide and some boundaries for the exercise of Executive discretion in the administration of the joint resolution, and I do not see how any one, after the recent reminder by the Supreme Court of the United States, can desire to strike out every limitation in the resolution upon the exercise of Executive discretion. In the "hot oil" case the United States Supreme Court said:

So far as this section is concerned, it gives to the President an unlimited authority to determine the policy and to lay down the prohibition, or not to lay it down, as he may see fit. And disobedience to his order is made a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment.

Further, the Supreme Court said:

The Congress left the matter to the President without standard or rule, to be dealt with as he pleased.

The Court further said with reference to the legislation they were then considering:

If section 9 (c) were held valid, it would be idle to pretend that anything would be left of limitations upon the power of the Congress to delegate its law-making function. The reasoning of the many decisions we have reviewed would be made vacuous and their distinctions nugatory. Instead of performing its law-making function the Congress could at will and as to such subjects as it chooses transfer that function to the President or other officer or to administrative body. The question is not of the intrinsic importance of the particular statute before us, but of the constitutional processes of legislation which are an essential part of our system of government.

Justice Cardozo, who dissented from the majority opinion in that case, said:

I concede that to uphold the delegation there is need to discover in the terms of the act a standard reasonably clear whereby discretion must be governed.

I therefore rise in opposition to the committee amendment, to improve the bill, to strengthen the bill, to improve it from a constitutional standpoint and from the standpoint of the exercise of our responsibilities as the representatives of the American people, who are called upon to vote out $4,000,000,000, which means that on an average every congressional district in the United States will some day pay $10,000,000 of the $4,000,000,000 in future taxation.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. Is it not true that this language is being amended in order to satisfy the complaints of the "pork-barrel group", so called?

Mr. PETTENGILL. If so, that is an additional reason for voting it down. I am opposed to pork-barrel legislation.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. In the gentleman's opinion, is not the matter proposed to be stricken out by the amendment entirely meaningless, insofar as the purposes of the bill are concerned?

Mr. PETTENGILL. As Justice Cardozo said, it lays down some canal within which executive discretion may flow.

Mr. MOTT. But the language is including and not limiting.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I say there is no harm in leaving it in, because it is not exclusive of other projects, but it is inclusive. It is a guidepost. It points a general course.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I yield.

Mr. DIES. If that is permitted to remain in the bill, is there not danger that some administrator will interpret it as an expression on the part of Congress to show a preference for that character of projects, to the exclusion of other worthy projects?

Mr. PETTENGILL. But the language expressly refutes any such interpretation.

Mr. DIES. But I say is there not danger that some administrator will put that interpretation upon it?

Mr. PETTENGILL. I cannot be responsible for what the administrative agency does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] has expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized in support of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the time is limited to 10 minutes; 5 minutes in support of the amendment and 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PETTENGILL) there were—ayes 171, noes 58.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment by Mr. BUCHANAN: On page 5, line 18, after the word "any", insert the word "emergency"; and in line 21, after the word "exist", insert the word "and."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, this amendment simply narrows in scope the meaning of subsection (c) of section 4, whereby the President is authorized to "consolidate, redistribute, abolish, or transfer the functions and/or duties of any governmental agency", by confining it to "emergency" agencies.

There ought not to be any need for discussion of this amendment. It should be adopted.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I should like to inquire if that would include the National Recovery Administration, as one of the emergency agencies?

Mr. BUCHANAN. It might temporarily if it could by any possible construction be regarded as an agency necessary to the expenditure of this appropriation, but it expires on June 16, 1935, by law.

Mr. BULWINKLE. And that would include also the Agricultural Adjustment Administration?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; it would not include that.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Is that not an agency?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration is a sort of double-barrel act. Some parts of it are used for the recovery program.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Then may I ask the gentleman this question, because I take it the gentleman knows: Is this a contemplated move for the continuation of the National Recovery Administration?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly not, and by no ingenious construction can that meaning be placed on this paragraph.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman just stated to me that it could be done.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This section reads "consolidate, redistribute, abolish, or transfer."

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will pardon me, the fear that the gentleman has is taken care of in the next amendment to be offered by the committee, by which I understand the committee proposes to strike paragraph (d) of section 4.

Mr. BULWINKLE. But I have not that amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. This has no connection with paragraph (d).

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Section (d) would continue all emergency agencies.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Section (d) would vest power in the President to continue all "emergency" agencies utilized and designated by him to carry out the purposes of the joint resolution.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The A. A. A., the N. R. A., and all the rest of the agencies created by the Seventy-third Congress?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Only if necessary for the administration of this act and if designated and utilized for such purposes, and only then; but we have not come to section (d) yet. We will get to that in a minute, and I will move to strike it out.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. Would the gentleman's amendment include the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as an emergency agency?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No.

Mr. MOTT. Then the President could not abolish the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No, sir.

Mr. MOTT. One other question: How many Federal jobs might be involved in this power that is given to the President?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Does the gentleman mean in the $4,000,000,000?

Mr. MOTT. In the right of the President to abolish or change the personnel under subsection (c) of section 4?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not know; nobody can tell now. He may save the Government a great deal of administrative expense by abolishing and consolidating agencies. I hope he does.

Mr. MOTT. The question I asked was whether any survey had been made as to the number of Federal employees whose jobs would be jeopardized.

Mr. BUCHANAN. No estimate has been made.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to address myself in all sincerity to the practical aspects of this bill. I stand in the same position as every man in this House who is elected by a constituency. He represents them concerning any legislation that may affect them that is properly brought before this House. You were elected and I was elected because a majority of the people of our respective districts had confidence in our desire and ability to represent them and their rights and interests.

This is a proposal to spend approximately $5,000,000,000, money not created by some mystic power but $5,000,000,000 drawn from the pockets of the taxpayers of this country to be paid by them now or eventually, money produced by labor, by the sweat of the brow. I think we are accountable to our constituents as to how, when, and for what purposes this money is to be spent.

The President today sent a message to this Congress. One section of his message is very interesting and very significant. I read this passage from his message:

> As I have already stated, it is only because of the current emergency of unemployment and because of the physical impossibility of surveying, weighing, and testing each and every project that a segregation of items is clearly impossible at the moment.

He admits that he has no specific projects in mind for which this $5,000,000,000 is to be spent, nothing definite; and yet every man in this House knows that intelligent people have been studying the needs of particular communities on a broad scale touching your district and my district, men who know what ought to be done for the social and economic welfare of those communities, projects which, if carried out, would not waste the public funds. There is a National Highways Association, the president of which has laid before the administration a program of needed primary and secondary highways, a program growing out of a careful survey of the needs of the country, the needs of your district, and the needs of my district. This plan gives the mileage, the location, and the exact cost of each project. It is a national plan. This National Highway Association has studied also the question of grade-crossing elimination; it knows the number of grade crossings, their locations, and the cost of each project. It has enumerated those places where there should be main trunk highways going through or around the cities of this country. They have studied the projects that are practical and have laid out a plan and have studied its cost. They know the States and districts that will be benefited. This project can be put into execution immediately.

The Rivers and Harbors Congress is to meet here February 5. This organization has projects which have been carefully studied. State and local organizations have definite plans, national in scope, relating to housing, the need for school buildings. So, there, too, is a whole comprehensive program ready to move, and these organizations would like to be heard. They have had no opportunity of being heard by the Committee on Appropriations.

What was the extent of the hearings held by our Committee on Appropriations? Briefly, they heard Secretary Morgenthau, an admiral of the Navy, and the head of the Bureau of the Budget; and the hearing lasted 2 hours and a quarter or less. Your constituents and mine have not had a voice in this 5-billion-dollar proposal. It is their money that is to be spent, and they are interested in the recovery and relief of their particular districts. I say the time has come, and it is here now, that we should pause in the present method of doing things. While you may steam-roller this vast expenditure through, you will live to regret the day you gave all this power to one man. History is literally filled with cases where delegated power has been abused and where its abuse has come back to plague the people. The only way we can preserve the rights of the people is to assert our right now to give the people a chance to be heard before the appropriate committee of Congress. It is not necessary to specify every individual project, but at least the general plan should be specified. There is a plan prepared now by national organizations embracing your district and my district that will make it possible to earmark these funds and preserve the right of the people in this proposed expenditure of $5,000,000,000 of their money. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Committee amendment by Mr. BUCHANAN: Page 5, strike out lines 22 to 25, inclusive.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I well remember frequently hearing the late lamented Speaker Champ Clark say that this was the greatest deliberative and legislative body in the world. Were he with us now I wonder whether he still could honestly say that this is a great legislative and deliberative body. I listened carefully to the debate yesterday and read a transcription of it in this morning's RECORD. No word can be found there of sound logic and reason calling for such legislation as we are asked to vote upon here this afternoon. The only argument that appears in the RECORD of the remarks of the advocates of this bill yesterday is that they were elected to support the President of the United States. Therefore, men who take that attitude toward their responsibilities here today are willing to admit they have no power themselves to represent their people under the authority of their election to this body.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has very definitely pointed out that the message of the President of the United States as read to us a few moments ago admits that there is no program available at the present time.

Still, we are asked, and you on the other side seem perfectly willing, to end our power and authority as representatives of the people of our districts and place it in the hands of one man. I for one am not willing to abrogate that power which has been conferred upon me by my constituents. When any man says that he is backing the President of the United States, let us ask him in what particular and in what direction he is backing the President. The only argument that you can make is that there is but one man in the country who knows how to spend $5,000,000,000 in a short period of time. I am pretty nearly willing to admit that fact. If any one man knows how to spend $5,000,000,000, he is brainier than the President of the United States who now sits in the White House.

The gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from Indiana this morning touched on the unconstitutionality of the provisions of this measure. Have we as representatives of the people forgotten that there are three coordinate branches of government? I do not think it will do a bit of harm to keep emphasizing the fact and bringing it home to the people of this country that some of us are willing to abdicate our powers under the Constitution to represent them in the legislative body. Does not this bill absolutely take out of the hands of Congress the power to allocate this sum of money? Never before has such an authority been granted to any Executive.

The percentage of the income of the country has been referred to, and I for one am not willing to say to any man, as great as the President of the United States is, with his tremendous power and ability, that he alone has the right and the power to legislate for my constituents. I join with the gentleman from New York and my colleagues on this side of the House in fighting for the interest, welfare, and relief of the needy of the country. We will go as far as may be necessary to relieve distress and care for the unfortunates, but we will not take away from the legislative branch or vote to take away the power that is intrusted to us by our people. [Applause.]

I wonder if the President of the United States has ever heard of the constitutional powers of Congress, and particularly the control of the House of Representatives over the Nation's purse strings. If he has not, then it is time he read article I of the Constitution, which gives all the legislative authority of the General Government to Congress.

The measure now under consideration purports to make appropriations for relief, but in effect it is a subtle attempt to set the President of the United States up as a de facto dictator—and I use the word advisedly.

The first section of the bill gives the President the power to spend nearly $5,000,000,000 practically as he pleases.

Section 3 gives him the power to appoint an unlimited number of employees upon a strict patronage basis.

Section 4 gives him the power to set up an unlimited number of new alphabetical agencies and to consolidate, redistribute, abolish, or transfer the functions, property, and personnel of any governmental agency.

In addition, he is thereby empowered to extend the life of present governmental agencies to June 30, 1937, even though Congress may have provided an earlier expiration date.

Section 5 authorizes the President to guarantee loans to and payments of needy persons, and to make grants, loans, and contracts. This practically puts the Government into the small-loan business.

The same section gives the President the power of eminent domain over both real and personal property.

Section 6 gives him the power to impose fines and punishment for violation of any rule or regulation which he may establish for carrying out his functions under the bill.

As I have just indicated, one of the learned lawyers on the Democratic side stated on this floor yesterday that in his opinion the bill provides for an unconstitutional delegation of the powers of Congress to the President. I think that there can be no question but what the bill does just that, and I believe that most Members on the Democratic side will privately admit it. If the House of Representatives passes this bill it will be a virtual admission upon its part that it is unable to perform its legislative functions.

This measure is without precedent in the history of this or any other free country. It is not only a violation of all the principles upon which this Government was founded, but it constitutes another step in taking the Government out of the hands of the people and in centering it in the hands of one man.

When this bill becomes a law Hitler and Mussolini will be green with envy of the President of the United States and Stalin will have a fit of jealousy. By degrees the various functions of Congress have been transferred to the President, and now the control over appropriations is added to the list. I know of no other important function of Congress that remains to be given to the President.

Some question has been raised regarding the origin of this measure. No one claims it originated in the Appropriations Committee, where such legislation is supposed to be drafted. No one claims that the President wrote it with his own pen. Thus we are left to speculate upon the subject, and we naturally look to the "brain trust", who for 2 years have been writing legislation for Congress to enact, which, through ambiguous phrases and broad grants of authority, has taken from Congress its constitutional powers.

To my mind it is time that government was taken out of the hands of the "brain trust" and the professors and put back into the hands of the elected representatives of the people, where it rightfully belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, line 1, change "(e)" to "(d)".

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, line 11, strike out the words "he may also" and insert in lieu thereof the word "to"; in line 12 strike out the words "or personal"; in line 15 strike out the colon and the parenthesis and strike out all of lines 16 to 20, inclusive, except the period.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 6, line 23, before the word "violation", insert the word "willful", and after the sum "$5,000" insert a period and strike out all of line 25.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. If I want to offer an amendment to that now, do I offer it as a substitute at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules no amendment to committee amendments are permitted.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 7, transfer the words and figures "before the 10th day of January", in lines 3 and 4, to follow the word "submitted", in line 2.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to make the announcement that if there are no more committee amendments at this time, the Clerk will read the resolution for amendment.

Mr. TABER. The whole resolution?

The CHAIRMAN. The resolution will be read by sections, but no amendment other than committee amendments will be permitted in any section before section 4.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, in view of the fact that sections 1, 2, and 3 are not open to amendment, that the reading of these sections be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read section 4.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. In carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution the President is authorized, to such extent and in such manner as he finds and prescribes as necessary to the efficient and coordinated administration of the powers exercisable under this joint resolution, to—

(a) Establish and prescribe the duties and functions of governmental agencies (including corporations with corporate authority only as approved by the President and within the scope of this joint resolution);

(b) Utilize and prescribe the duties and functions of any governmental agency (including a corporation);

(c) Consolidate, redistribute, abolish, or transfer the functions and/or duties of, and transfer the property and/or personnel of, any emergency governmental agency (including a corporation); and upon the transfer to another agency and/or the abolition of all the functions and duties of any agency, such agency shall cease to exist; and

(d) Delegate the powers conferred on him under this joint resolution to any governmental agency (including a corporation).

Mr. KVALE (interrupting reading). Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KVALE. Since this is an appropriation measure, is it not subject to amendment at the conclusion of the reading of each paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. This is a legislative bill as well as an appropriation bill, so it is read by sections.

The Clerk concluded the reading of section 4.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 5, line 13, after the semicolon, insert the following: "Provided, That no duties or functions shall be prescribed under this act which shall place the Government in business, directly or indirectly, or through any Government-controlled corporation, in competition with private industry."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment that it is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It is not germane to the part of the bill where it is offered in that it seeks to limit the power and defeat the very purpose of the joint resolution, because every business in which the Government engages necessarily is more or less in competition with private business.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment limits the duties and functions which may be prescribed by the President and is clearly germane to this part of the joint resolution. It is drawn so that it specifically applies to the particular section to which the amendment is offered.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. O'CONNOR in the chair). The Chair is ready to rule.

The gentleman from New York offers an amendment to subdivision (a) of section 4.

This subdivision reads as follows:

Establish and prescribe the duties and functions of Government agencies (including corporations with corporate authority only as approved by the President and within the scope of this joint resolution).

The gentleman's amendment is as follows:

Provided, That no duties or functions shall be prescribed under this act which shall place the Government in business, directly or indirectly, or through any Government-controlled corporation, in competition with private industry.

It has been held that to a provision delegating certain powers, a proposal to limit such powers is germane. This amendment clearly limits the powers prescribed in the original section and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is designed to prevent the Executive or those agencies that he may designate from establishing socialism in this country. It is designed to stop such things as the Reedsville operation out in West Virginia, that was entered into by the Executive and the P. W. A., which was clearly in violation of the intent of Congress.

It is designed to stop the waste of the people's money by putting the Government into business to drive private industry out of business, instead of furnishing relief or relief employment.

We had a good illustration of this when we passed the $3,300,000,000 act, for there $1,700,000,000, which was allocated by the P. W. A. to relieve unemployment, so-called, but really for pet projects partly designed to put the Government in business, is still unexpended and has not yet been used for relief, although 20 months have elapsed since the money was made available.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I cannot yield, as I have only 5 minutes.

Unless this Congress puts its foot down now on this kind of operation, this is what this $4,000,000,000 will be used for. It will not be used for relief. It will be used to put the Government into things that we ought not to get into. Let us put our foot down and put this limitation on in such a way that we can stop this kind of way of doing business.

Let us stand up for an opportunity for America to recover. Let us stand up for an opportunity for putting people back to work and not putting them out of work.

I hope this Congress will take to heart the lesson of the abuse of the authority that was granted in June 1933, where they have not spent the money which was appropriated for relief, but have put it into pet pork-barrel projects, and that Congress will not permit the socialization of industry by a bill of this kind, which is designed and put forward in the name of relief.

I know that the heart of this Congress wants to stop this sort of thing, wants to put a brake on it. Let us show our heart and stand up for the right, for the preservation of honest government in the United States and for the preservation of an opportunity for private industry to recover.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, let us consider well before we adopt any amendment that will practically prevent the President from taking three and a half million men off the relief roll and giving them security work. This amendment, if it is complied with, will do that, because nearly every useful work you can find in the United States, or at least most of it, comes into competition at least in some degree with private enterprise, because private enterprise has explored and undertaken to engage in activity of practically every describable character.

So that if strictly construed you would prevent the President from carrying out his program.

Let us see what the President said, and I read from his message of January 3, 1935, to this Congress. In the interest of creation of private employment he says this:

The projects undertaken should be selected and planned so as to compete as little as possible with private enterprises.

That is what the President says. That is the principle that is going to guide the President in selecting these projects. And, my fellow countrymen, whether they compete or do not compete, this Government must get three and a half million men off the dole and onto work. [Applause.]

The President further says in this same message:

This suggests that if it were not for the necessity of giving useful work to the unemployed now on relief, these projects in most instances would not now be undertaken.

That is his position.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. O'MALLEY. The gentlemen on this side do not object to the R. F. C., and that is in competition with private business, but it happens that it is to the benefit of our capitalistic friends. We want to do something for the unemployed, and they find objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate upon this amendment close in 5 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WOODRUM. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that it close in 10 minutes. There are a great many amendments. We want to complete the bill today and we hope the Committee will cooperate with us, to have reasonable debate upon the amendments.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the amendment close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, there were only three hours of debate upon the resolution and the promise was made that there would be liberal debate under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. WOODRUM. If the gentleman had any idea of how many amendments there are, he would realize the necessity for this action. We want to finish the bill today. I withdraw the request.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a substitute for the Taber amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from New York which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. PETTENGILL: After the semicolon on page 5, line 13, insert the following:

"Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed to authorize the creation of Government agencies, including Government-owned corporations, which shall engage in manufacturing in competition with private industry: Provided, also, That nothing herein shall apply to navy yards, shipyards, or arsenals now engaged in manufacturing supplies or munitions for national defense."

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer my amendment as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], because I think it is a better amendment. It excludes Government navy yards, arsenals, and ship yards for national defense, and it is limited to manufacturing. I contend, my friends, and especially my Democratic friends, that this amendment will help the bill and will give added confidence to the country in this program. The President of the United States, in his opening message, said that he was in favor of preserving the profit motive in this country. He said he was opposed to the Government competing with private industry, but private industry does not have the same confidence in all of the representatives of the executive branch that it has in the President, and this will reassure the country that the program is not to be carried out as proposed by such men as Mr. Hopkins, and those in charge of the Reedsville experimental plant. The President has offered this program as a stop-gap until private enterprise can take up the slack; and in God's name let us not discourage private enterprise from taking up the slack; let us encourage it in every way we can. I said that the business men of this country did not have the same confidence in every agent of the administrative branch that they have in the President. We know what happened with the Reedsville project. This House expressed its opposition to that. Did they respect the will of this House? No. When the bill went over to the Senate they put the factory back in again. It then came here and we killed it a second time by a 3-to-1 vote. Did they respect that expression of the will of the legislative branch? No; because in the closing week of the Congress they tried to sneak the same thing through in the Rules Committee, and we had to go up there and kill it the third time.

And let me say that today's papers state that the officials of the Subsistence Homestead Corporation announce a loss at Reedsville of more than half a million dollars—over $3,000 on each house constructed. This loss will be charged up to experimentation and errors of judgment. Think of the food and clothing this $500,000 would have bought. If we had let them build the factory there, they would have lost another half million.

And then Mr. Sinclair, from California, came east last fall with his epic plan of government-owned farms, factories, canning plants, refrigerating plants, warehouses, and so forth, and talked to Mr. Hopkins, and Mr. Hopkins is reported in the press to have said that Sinclair "is one of us."

I want to say that if Mr. Hopkins is in defiance of the platform of the party that is in power, if he is in defiance of the expressed will of the President of the United States, if he is going to have anything to do with spending this $4,000,000,000, and if he has the same views that he expressed to Mr. Sinclair, we need this limitation in the bill. [Applause.] I offer this amendment in the sincere belief that it will help the magnificent program of the President to end the dole in America.

As long as we are gambling these huge sums on recovery, why not loan money to industry so they can reemploy their men in their old jobs—having the Government guarantee 20 percent of the risk in the same way—as in the Housing Act for better construction?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to support this amendment. Personally I prefer the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana, which is confined strictly to manufacturing establishments and avoids the criticism of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]; but without reference to the exact language—that can be perfected if necessary—I think the principle ought to be incorporated in this legislation.

I expect to vote for this joint resolution on its final passage, but there are many errors, both of commission and of omission, in the resolution as it is written. There are 20,000,000 people in this country on relief at the present time. The truth is that more people are out of work today than at any time since this depression started. Why is that? It is partly, if not largely, because business has not the confidence to go ahead, to branch out, or undertake anything new that will require any additional employment. It is because business is afraid. It is afraid that the Government will go into competition with it. It is afraid to build a new factory or to expand any for fear the Government may start up a business across the street and engage in direct competition with it.

One of the errors of omission in the resolution is that it contains no provision such as this amendment prohibiting the use of the money to be appropriated to engage in business in competition with private industry. Such a provision in the resolution would improve it materially.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] has expired.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph.

This bill carries the broadest delegation of power ever proposed in the history of free governments. To protect and to promote the general welfare by providing relief from the hardships attributable to wide-spread unemployment and conditions resulting therefrom, to relieve economic maladjustments, alleviate distress, and improvement of living and working conditions, approximately $5,000,000,000 are appropriated to be expended in the discretion and under the direction of the President. It empowers the President to create and establish governmental agencies, including corporations with corporate authority, and to prescribe the duties and functions thereof. It empowers him to consolidate, redistribute, abolish, or transfer the functions, duties, property, and personnel of any governmental agency to another such agency. It empowers him to continue in existence any existing agency the life of which is limited to existing law, which means the power to reenact legislation which terminates by provisions of law. It empowers him to redelegate the powers conferred on him to any governmental agency, including a corporation now in existence or that may be created by him. It empowers him to guarantee loans or the payment of loans made to needy individuals; to make, grant, or loan; to acquire by purchase or condemnation any real or personal property, and to improve, develop, maintain, grant, sell, or to lease or otherwise dispose of the same. It empowers him to promulgate rules and regulations with respect to all that he may do, and makes the violation thereof a penal offense punishable by fine and 2 years' imprisonment, either or both. In other words, it is the delegation of power to the Executive to do anything that his judgment might dictate will effectuate the purposes of the act. All of which means that the President is here being empowered to demolish and reconstruct the machinery of government and to reform the economic and social relationships that exist between the people. It is an outright delegation of a legislative power which alone is vested in the Congress and which it has not the right to delegate to another.

The argument that opposition to the bill is expressive of a lack of confidence in the President is an unworthy one. It is an effort to make men debase themselves by submitting to fear. The more worthy contention is that support is in obedience to the mandate of the people who possess the right of authority to dictate. I deny, however, that the people have given such a mandate. Government functions in accordance with forms of law, and in this I find my oath to defend and support the Constitution, which I believe this act violates, both in spirit and letter, and therefore I cannot and should not be expected to give it my support in its present form. [Applause.]

I do not question the loyalty and patriotism of those who may differ from me. Each Member has his own conception of duty to perform, his conscience to keep. Each is endeavoring to act in accordance with his own understanding of what is right, which, after all, is his idea of virtue introduced into politics.

The act could have been drawn giving to the Executive all the power necessary to its administration and without violating the Constitution, but under the circumstances this cannot here and now be done. It can, however, be improved and made less offensive to the law by the elimination or the rewriting of the latter part of the bill.

It is not what I fear the President will do in the administration of the act which disturbs me but is that which he is empowered to do. No man could be great enough or good enough—and the President is as good and as great as the greatest and the best of men—to be permanently intrusted with all the powers of Government, and this renewal of extraordinary power granted under unusual and extraordinary conditions goes a long way toward permanency of the grant.

I probably do not understand the philosophy that underlies all that is being done. I can see a clear intention to cure as far as possible the physical and social ills that inflict the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] has expired.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to continue for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. WITHROW. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Reserving the right to object, I am not going to object to the gentleman from Georgia having an extension of 3 minutes, but hereafter I am going to object to any extension. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] wanted time under general debate, and it was impossible for me to give it to him. Therefore I will not object to his request.

Mr. COX. I thank my colleagues, particularly my colleague from my State.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, some of us would like to be heard on this amendment as well as the gentleman from Georgia, and I think it would be no more than fair that we be given such opportunity.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. I think I can see a definite and fixed purpose to strike down inequalities which are the result of impediments having been heaped upon some to give advantages to others; a tendency toward the diffusion instead of the concentration of wealth; a movement toward the subdivision of large masses, the rectification of the institution of private property, the holding of the scales with equal justice as between man and man. All this I, of course, approve; but as to whether it is necessary to temporarily suspend the force of substantive law until this reformation and transition can be made complete, I do not know. It may be that this is true and if so, and if this higher state of morality and justice can be wrought out, it will probably be considered as having been obtained at a bargain price. But is not the risk to liberty too great to justify the experiment? Cannot these same results be obtained or closely approached through the reformation of the rules of action set up to govern human conduct? Can they not be obtained through constitutional processes and without hazard to representative government?

It may be that these are questions which futurity alone must determine. That which disturbs me most is the apparent tendency to grind everything down to a dead level which means paralyzing individual effort and enterprise. This is what the exchanging of liberty for equality means. So, as to the direction one shall travel, all depends upon the way the signboard seems to point. To me it points toward government by men and away from government by law. It is with regret that I interpret the provisions of the act to be inconsistent with the spirit of American liberty and a violation of the Constitution. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and to the substitute amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment and to the substitute amendment because they constitute nothing more nor less than an unwarranted attack upon this bill. You might as well strike out the enacting clause, for the effect of the pending amendments will be to hamstring the bill, emasculate, and destroy utterly its efficacy. That is why I am bitterly opposed to them, and I hope the Committee will vote them down decisively.

Doubtless those in charge of the spending of this money have the right to spend it for slum clearance, rural housing, rural electrification, reforestation, soil erosion, and so forth; and these operations undoubtedly will involve coming into competition directly or indirectly or remotely with private industry and enterprise. It would involve the businesses of roofing, foundation building, bricklaying, contracting, plastering, carpentering, plumbing, and so forth, and might to some extent impinge upon the manufacturers, dealers, and workers in steel and iron and all metals, granite, marble, limestone, and so forth. So, again I say, if you want utterly to destroy the bill, continue to offer such amendments; but I verily hope and believe that we on this side will vote them down.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If I interpret correctly the amendment which was placed in the bill and the statement the gentleman has made with reference to the effect of the bill, there is really nothing in the statement the gentleman has just made.

Mr. CELLER. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. The gentleman states that if the amendment or the substitute is adopted it will destroy the bill.

Mr. CELLER. Absolutely; such action will destroy it. I say so.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Does the gentleman mean to tell the House, then, that this is the time and place to authorize in this bill that all manufacturing shall be started?

Mr. CELLER. I say that if we carry out the provisions of the amendment or the substitute, you will not be able to do anything under this bill of any consequence. You make it a nullity.

Mr. Chairman, I refuse to yield further.

I am in thorough sympathy with those who want to keep private industry more or less intact, to make it prosper and to have the Government recede from encroaching upon private enterprise. But we are in perilous times. Private industry is in the doldrums. People must work, else they perish. If that work cannot be supplied "privately", it must be supplied "publicly." Take, for example, the banks of my own city of New York. They are bursting with funds. The Guaranty Trust Co., the National City Bank, the Chase Bank—they have each over $1,000,000,000 of deposits; but let business men go to those banks and try to effect loans and you will see how they are met with denials right and left. The R. F. C., the Government, must, perforce, step in and help private industry. Some agency must supply the credit. I would rather see the R. F. C. go out of business and private bankers take over the functions of banking in New York City, but they will not do it. I charge that many of the banks in New York City are hurting, not helping, business, and therefore we must step in. Where private banking and industry have been woefully lacking, we must set up these governmental agencies to take care of the work private banking and industry should do. I do not wish to appear unduly harsh upon the banks back home, yet they deserve severe criticism.

Let me cite a specific instance of failure of banks in New York to cooperate. It is the case of a merchant of New York City who applied to the R. F. C. for a loan of $50,000. The R. F. C. said the condition of the man's business factory was such as to entitle him to $100,000. The R. F. C. in Washington issued an order that they would grant $100,000 as a loan on condition that the two banks in question in New York City take 40 percent of the loan, namely $40,000; but they refused to take the 40 percent and wanted the Government to carry the entire loan. The R. F. C. examined and scrutinized the facts in the case most carefully; its proffer of $40,000 of the loan to be taken by the banks was reasonable. There was no risk that could have been deemed unreasonable. This is the best illustration in the world of the necessity for the Government's stepping in when private industry, private banks, and private merchants refuse to do their duty.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at 3 o'clock.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will not the committee chairman include in his request the request that bona fide amendments be offered first, in order that we may have a chance to have them explained?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to bona fide amendments being offered first.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on section 4 and all amendments thereto close at 3 o'clock.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RICH) there were—ayes 167, noes 80.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAAS and Mr. LUDLOW rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana, a member of the committee. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL].

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, on any amendment there is permitted only 5 minutes in support and 5 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, I am wondering whether I shall be able to pour some oil on the troubled waters. Like the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], I intend to vote for the passage of this resolution, but I do not believe that it is so inviolable and so sacrosanct that it cannot be made better by a good amendment. I hope that my colleagues on the Democratic side of the Chamber will accept the substitute amendment offered by my friend, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL]. I believe sincerely and truly that this amendment could be adopted without injury and with vast improvement to the resolution.

Those who are acquainted with me know that this amendment embodies a principle that is very dear to my heart. It is one of my old loves. The principle involved in the amendment, that is to say, the principle that Government should not enter into manufacturing enterprises to the destruction of private industry, is not new to the House of Representatives. The same principle that is embodied in this substitute amendment was approved by the Membership of this body by a 3-to-1 vote when the House in the last session overwhelmingly adopted an amendment I introduced expressing disapproval of the allocation of $550,000 of public-works funds by Secretary Ickes to establish a governmental factory in West Virginia that would have dismantled, demobilized, and destroyed one of the oldest and best manufacturing establishments in my congressional district. This proposition is very close to the State of Indiana, and it is going to be close to a lot of other States unless you adopt the Pettengill amendment.

When the Congress last year appropriated $3,300,000,000 for public works, not one single Member of either branch of the Congress ever entertained a thought that any part of that money would be used to establish the Government in business in opposition to private industry. Yet, notwithstanding that fact, Mr. Ickes was proceeding, until he was stopped by this House, to put the Government into competitive business. The amendment before the House, if adopted, with the substitute amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL], will firmly establish a most wise and salutary policy in this country. It will serve notice on Mr. Ickes that no part of the $4,000,000,000 appropriated by the pending bill for public works shall be used to erect factories to compete with private industry. Unless this amendment is adopted, every congressional district represented on the floor of this House will, I fear, rest under a menace of governmental interference with private industry.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to see this amendment adopted unanimously. When I support this amendment to keep the Government out of business, I am thinking of a lot of splendid workingmen out in the State of Indiana, in the city of Indianapolis, who would be thrown out of work and whose families would either starve or go on relief rolls if the Government should resurrect the Reedsville post-office furniture-factory proposal. I do not want that project revived because of the great injury it would do to the laboring men of my home city, and I hope I am unselfish enough to want to protect the laboring men of every other district and city in the United States against the menace that will hang over them like a sword of Damocles if the Government embarks on the policy of establishing Government factories that will close the doors of privately owned plants. What privately owned establishment is there anywhere that can compete with the tremendous resources of the United States Treasury? When a Government factory fails, the loss is simply written off against the taxpayers, but private factories have no good Uncle Sam to write off their losses. From the standpoint of humanitarianism, of what advantage is it if we are to provide a livelihood for some miners in West Virginia if by so doing we destroy a manufacturing plant in Indianapolis and take away the livelihood of its employees? The whole policy of Government incursion into business is wrong, fundamentally wrong, and we ought to provide by the adoption of the amendment now before the House that no part of the great $4,000,000,000 relief fund we are now appropriating shall be used to put the Government into business in competition with private industry.

In my opinion, nothing this Congress could do would so encourage and stimulate legitimate business, so enthuse it with the spirit of confidence and the determination to go ahead, as the adoption of this amendment would do; and if we are ever to have permanent and solid recovery, business must be encouraged and strengthened, so that it may take over into regular jobs the millions now on relief rolls. I believe the adoption of this amendment would be the greatest favor that could be rendered to President Roosevelt. It would fortify him to resist a lot of wild incursions of Government into business that will undoubtedly be proposed as a means of dissipating the $4,000,000,000 fund, but more important than that, it would impress upon the honest and patriotic business interests of the country a conviction that the better day is really near at hand.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the pending amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLIVER to the substitute offered by Mr. PETTENGILL: At the end of Mr. PETTENGILL's amendment, after the word "defense", strike out the period, insert a comma, and add "or other Government agencies now established or authorized to be established by existing law."

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana should be adopted, and I hope it will not, it would seriously embarrass the Government in many activities now established and operating under existing law, and so I have offered an amendment to modify its effect, if adopted.

Mr. PETTENGILL. May I ask the gentleman a question? Is the gentleman offering the amendment to help my amendment or to defeat it?

Mr. OLIVER. I offer my amendment to prevent the gentleman's amendment doing harm to existing agencies of the Government.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Then the gentleman is sympathetic with the amendment I offered?

Mr. OLIVER. No; I am opposed to it.

Mr. PETTENGILL. I mean as changed by the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. OLIVER. No.

Mr. PETTENGILL. As changed?

Mr. OLIVER. No. This amendment I offer will prevent the gentleman's amendment from seriously interfering with existing agencies of the Government.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Will the gentleman support my amendment if it is amended as the gentleman suggests?

Mr. OLIVER. No. The gentleman in his amendment makes certain exceptions, namely—

Provided, nothing herein shall apply to navy yards, shipyards, or arsenals now engaged in manufacturing supplies or munitions for national defense.

And certainly no one here wants to interfere with such activities. My amendment adds the further proviso—

Or other Government agencies now established or authorized to be established by existing law.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman have reference to the other governmental agencies now established by existing law engaged in business in competition with private industry?

Mr. OLIVER. I have reference to all agencies that are or may be established under authority of Congress.

Mr. MAY. Then the gentleman's idea is to continue these industries in business in competition with private industry?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The amendments which have been offered only attempt to limit the functions that may be prescribed under the bill?

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman may think so; but if he will read the amendment, he will find it is much broader than that. The amendment would seriously hamper, if not destroy, many Government agencies now established and operating under existing law, and prohibit the President from using such agencies to carry out the purposes of the bill now being considered. It would seriously interfere with the agency known as the Tennessee Valley Authority. It would seriously interfere with the aircraft plant or factory located in Pennsylvania. I could mention many others, but those mentioned will suffice to show how unwise it would be to adapt the pending amendments.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. I yield.

Mrs. JENCKES of Indiana. Has the gentleman in his district any canning factories or mattress factories that are operated under the relief agencies that are today in competition with private industry? Do not these factories take away from our duly constituted agencies the right to manufacture or make beds for the poor?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes; the Government has been engaged in canning in my district for the relief of distress, and I am not opposed to such activity as carried on in my district.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The pending amendment, together with the gentleman's amendment, would prohibit the President from establishing a subsistence homestead near a large tract of timber, where no sawmill is available, and would prohibit the authorities from putting up a little sawmill and sawing lumber to build houses on subsistence homesteads in which to place those needing aid. In other words, all amendments, the gentleman's amendment and all others, ought to go out of the bill.

Mr. OLIVER. I offered the amendment purely for the purpose of protecting the Government, should the House, by any chance, vote favorably on the Pettengill amendment. I am not in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] and feel that it should be defeated.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes.

Mr. MAY. In the case stated by the chairman of the committee, does not the gentleman suppose there are lots of private sawmills that could be got into such a large body of timber to cut lumber for the Government?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, the Pettengill amendment, in my judgment, should be considered with the greatest care by this House. I do not know that even the wording of this amendment is entirely suitable. I do not know but what it could be improved upon, but certainly, in my judgment, it improves the bill as originally written.

Let me recall to the attention of the House, if I may, that only about a year ago we had before this House a great project for the manufacture of furniture at Reedsville, and in no uncertain terms this House voted down that project. Now there is not one, but by virtue of the F. E. R. A. funds, where we gave a blank check, there are a dozen furniture factories in the United States in defiance of the principle adopted by the Congress.

I have in my files letters which indicate that a careful survey has shown that over 2,500 garment-manufacturing plants have been established under the authority of the

F. E. R. A. and certainly in violation of what this House contemplated at the time we voted the appropriation.

Mr. PETTENGILL. If the gentleman will permit, he said, "under the authority", when he meant "against the authority."

Mr. LLOYD. Against the will of this House.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Over 1,500 shoe factories, of which 5 are in the city of my friend from Washington, who now rises——

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is it not true that if they had not manufactured them in this manner, the unemployed would have fewer clothes, fewer shoes, and would have been colder and barefooted?

Mr. LLOYD. Let me suggest to the gentleman that every time a Government agency that cuts a piece of cloth to manufacture a garment, every time you cut a piece of leather to make a pair of shoes through a Government agency, you are putting a 5-dollar-per-day man on the relief rolls to fill his place with a $50 per month man in your competing relief set-up. [Applause.]

Mr. OLIVER and Mr. RICH rose.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment offered by me for the reason that I feel I have shown to the House what the disastrous effect would be on Government agencies if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana was adopted. I am opposed to the amendments offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] and favor the passage of the resolution as amended by the Committee on Appropriations without further change.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Oliver amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PETTENGILL) there were—ayes 83, noes 145.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. PETTENGILL and Mr. BUCHANAN.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were 91 ayes and 172 noes.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BACON: On line 15, page 5, after the semicolon, add the following: "Provided, That no governmental agency or corporation shall be empowered with duties and functions, nor shall it exercise or utilize any duty or function, the effect of which would engage Government competition with private industry, except in the development and sale of hydroelectric power; and provided also that nothing herein shall apply to navy yards, shipyards, or arsenals now engaged in manufacturing supplies or munitions for national defense."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I make the point of order that that is practically the same amendment that we have just voted on.

Mr. BACON. And I call attention to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that this is offered to a different paragraph.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But the same section.

Mr. BACON. And it also is a different amendment, in that it specifically excepts the manufacturing, development, and sale of hydroelectric power.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Taber amendment proposed to amend subdivision (a), which relates to agencies that may be established. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] pertains to subdivision (d), which refers to existing agencies, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment has the same practical effect as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana. It is beginning to be apparent that the spokesmen for the administration on the floor of this House have every intention of putting the Government into business in competition with its own citizens, or at least of making it easy to do so.

I prefer to rely on the statement made by the President in his annual message to Congress. I prefer to rely on the testimony offered before our committee—both of these statements to the effect that the administration does not contemplate putting the Government into competition with its own citizens in carrying out the provisions of this resolution. If I may rely on the President and his spokesmen before our committee, I see no reason why we should not write into the law what they have promised us and the people of the United States. [Applause.]

State socialism of industry should not be fostered under the guise of relieving the unemployed. Private initiative should be stimulated and not further restrained through fear of Government competition or threats of such a policy. Private ownership, if faced with such competition and threats, will inevitably tend to liquidate with losses to innocent private investors; will greatly increase the unemployment for the normally employed; will wipe out all profits from which come Federal taxes; and will finally result in fear and unrest in the field of business and industry that will substantially delay the return of confidence, without which real and permanent recovery cannot be made.

I have specifically exempted the development and sale of hydroelectric power to quiet the nerves and apprehensions of my friend from Alabama so that he will not think that in any way I am attacking his pet, the T. V. A. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, unless we deliberately want to encourage the Government to compete with its own citizens, I hope the amendment will be adopted. I also recall to my friends that the President himself has stated that unless private industry takes up the slack of unemployment there is no eventual solution of the unemployment situation. Private industry can never take up the slack of unemployment if it is being continually threatened and harassed with competition or the fear of competition from its own Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The same arguments made on the floor today have been made by the gentlemen on the other side very frequently in the past. They are fearful that the Government will destroy private industry. I recollect that the same arguments were made in 1912 and 1914, when we tried to increase the facilities of our arsenals and navy yards so that the Government could produce powder and other necessary supplies for the Army and Navy. At that time these same gentlemen were fearful that we would destroy private industry. Only a few days ago we read of the investigation being conducted on the part of the Naval and Military Affairs Committees and a special munitions investigating committee, showing that the Government has been robbed of millions and millions by the Du Ponts and other powder and munitions manufacturers.

I fear that again today these gentlemen on the other side have in mind these industries that have been so patriotic in the past that have mulcted the Government out of millions of dollars. Gentlemen across the aisle fear that we are going to paralyze business. From 1918 to 1932 the Government, under Republican administration, did not interfere with any of the private industries. Notwithstanding that our country had the greatest crops and that business was not interfered with, your big business brought about ruin and destruction to our Nation. Were it not for the destruction brought about by big business that you are so greatly interested in, this legislation now before us would not be necessary. You know that these conditions were brought about by private industry; that makes this legislation necessary. I feel it a solemn duty to cooperate with the President in the hope of again putting the country on a prosperous business basis through private employment and putting men to work in every section of the Nation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I call the attention of my friend and my Republican colleagues to the fact that on March 4, 1933, private business was at a very low ebb, and under the present administration, which private business feared, private business has made great progress toward its return to normalcy.

Mr. SABATH. I notice some gentlemen on the Republican side laughing. If they will but consult their own Republican newspapers, they will see that these papers admit that the financial reports of all of the industries show a profit, while during the years 1930 and 1931 and 1932 they showed great losses. We are making progress, we are improving conditions, and were it not for dilatory tactics on the part of the Republicans we would have advanced farther, and many more hundreds of thousands of people would have been employed by this time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. In a moment. I believe it is our duty to stand by the President who is sincere, and put the millions that the Republican administration put out of work back to work again so that they can provide for their near and dear ones. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman speaks of the fact that industry is improving. I ask him what has happened to the granite industry, the marble, the limestone industry which have been cut out under the building specifications of the P. W. A.?

Mr. SABATH. Of course, we are not using perhaps as much Indiana limestone since the great statesman from Indiana, Jim Watson, has ceased to control the construction divisions of our Government and since we have stopped the building of marble pillars and are using plain material on all our projects. There having been a noticeable reduction in the number of suicides in the past 22 months, we do not use marble or granite, as we did, for the unfortunates who, in despair, filled our cemeteries, due to the greatest scourge of destruction brought upon this country by those interests always in control under a Republican regime.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SABATH. But we are using other material that is not so expensive.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. While millions have been put out of work.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMISTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EDMISTON: Page 5, line 13, after the colon, insert: "Provided, That all officers and employees whose salary is in excess of $4,000 per annum, who shall be appointed by the President under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to confirmation by the Senate of the United States."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the motion that it is not germane. There is a section of the bill to which it is germane, but it is not germane to this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. EDMISTON] offers an amendment to section 4 of the resolution, line 13, page 5, which provides:

Provided, That all officers and employees whose salary is in excess of $4,000 per annum, who shall be appointed by the President under the provisions of this act, shall be subject to confirmation by the Senate of the United States.

Section 4 does not pertain to the appointment of any officer. That subject is contained in section 3, which has been passed. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. BUCKBEE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUCKBEE: On page 5, line 15, after the semicolon, insert the following language: "in prescribing the functions of the governmental agencies utilized by the President he shall prescribe that $2,000,000,000 of the funds appropriated in this resolution shall be used in making loans to industry."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the same ground that I did the previous amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. O'CONNOR). The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCKBEE] is not germane to section 4. It might well have been germane to section 1. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SAUTHOFF: Page 5, line 21, before the semicolon insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no change in the classification or compensation of any officer or employee shall be made in carrying out the provisions of this subsection, but changes in the title, designation, and duties of any such officer or employee deemed necessary in carrying out such provisions may be made."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment might have been in order to a former section of the bill, where the President is authorized to fix the different salaries, but it certainly is not in order under this section.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. There is nothing in this amendment with reference to salaries. It is merely with reference to the civil service.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment refers to the classification of employees, which is contained in section 3. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin might have been germane to section 3, but it is not germane to section 4, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. NICHOLS. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS: At the end of line 13, page 5, add the following: "Provided, however, That any money authorized by the President to be spent for the prevention of soil erosion shall be spent under the direction of the Soil Erosion Service."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not in order on this section at all. There is no money appropriated by this section. It is not germane, either.

Mr. NICHOLS. It is really a limitation, Mr. Chairman. It is a limitation of authority. I would ask the gentleman from Texas if he would reserve his point of order?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will reserve the point of order for the time being.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say at the outset that I did not introduce this amendment for the purpose of embarrassing the administration or embarrassing the gentlemen on the committee, but I seriously believe that this is a question which the Members of this House should consider.

From reading the bill now under consideration, I am constrained to be of the opinion that the President, in the spending of this money, will spend a great deal of it in the prevention of soil erosion. I seriously trust that he will. At the present time we have about four different divisions of emergency set-ups which have to do with the spending of money for soil erosion. In my opinion, one of the most important things that the people of the United States have confronting them today is the fact that we are standing idly by and permitting our soil to erode and wash away.

A reflection to not too ancient history will show us that in many nations, particularly in Asia, civilization has been destroyed because nations had permitted the fertility of the soil to be washed away. If we are to have a comprehensive and coordinated program of soil erosion, it is necessary that it not be scattered under three or four agencies, one working against the other, and it seems to me it should be put under one agency of government, which was created for that purpose, and in which there are experts. Those experts have ability and knowledge to properly protect our soils from erosion.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Under the gentleman's amendment, it would prevent the Civilian Conservation Corps from doing soil-erosion work, would it not?

Mr. NICHOLS. No, sir. Under my amendment I would prevent the men in the Federal Emergency Relief Administration from having these little soil-erosion projects that do not amount to anything. I would stop the extension departments of the agriculture and mechanic arts colleges from going out and terracing this land that should not be terraced, and by so doing encouraging soil erosion rather than preventing it. I would stop the Forest Service from going out onto cultivated lands and putting on soil-erosion projects. I would simply put it under the department of Government, which, by its facilities and special training, is capable of stopping soil erosion. As long as it is under a half dozen different departments none of them will do it.

I was deeply shocked the other day to read in the press a statement by Secretary Ickes that the soil of Oklahoma was among the worst eroded of that of any State in the Union. The Secretary made this statement in connection with the approval of a soil-erosion project in my district.

But I do not doubt that what he says is so. Despite the fact that Oklahoma is one of the youngest States in the Nation, the ruthless manner in which her soil has been exploited is a shame and a disgrace. The farmers of today are already being punished for the sins of their fathers against the soil, and the farmers of tomorrow will face still greater suffering unless steps are taken to reverse the ruinous practices.

Dr. N. E. Winters, director of the soil erosion service in Oklahoma, declares that 85 percent of the 16,000,000 cultivable acres in Oklahoma are already suffering seriously from erosion damage and that 2,000,000 acres have been abandoned for that reason. Figures indicate that 440,000,000 tons of soil are annually washed from the cultivated fields of Oklahoma. It would require a fleet of 4,200 motor trucks of 2-ton capacity, loading and unloading every 10 minutes, working day and night throughout the entire year, to haul away this tremendous volume of soil.

I know that farmers in my district, who in the past have been indifferent to this tremendous loss, are now becoming alarmed. They are eager, even impatient, to cooperate with the Soil Erosion Service in an effort to stop the losses and rebuild the vitality of the soil.

In addition, I think that this program fits in perfectly with the President's idea for a balanced effort to build up the Nation's resources. While Civilian Conservation camps have been popular in my State in the few wooded areas where they were possible, similar camps to work toward saving the soil are much more eagerly sought at present. Saving the soil under the methods of the Soil Erosion Service will assist in the program to control floods by preventing the rapid flow of waters after rains, and will also prevent the damage or even ruin of proposed hydroelectric plants upon our principal waterways.

Soil-erosion camps established in scattered portions of the State will give all the farmers a chance to view the methods used, both in construction and in new planting and cultivation practices, to conserve the resources of the farms, and will cause these farmers, even outside the areas directly under the camps, to change their farming practices.

The Soil Erosion Service as constituted at present is doing a tremendous job in good shape. I favor giving this Service an increasingly large proportion of any emergency funds which are appropriated. I believe that this work will not only furnish employment where it is badly needed but will also result in building up the resources of the Nation and bringing about a permanent improvement of the economic status of the great agricultural regions.

These are some of the reasons for introducing my amendment. I wanted to call attention to the valuable service which is being rendered at present by the Soil Erosion Service and to insure the centralization of any other such programs in this department, where they would be handled by a well-informed and seasoned personnel, already functioning and in touch with the farmer and his needs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. O'CONNOR). The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] is not germane to section 4, which merely prescribes the duties and functions of agencies. It might have been germane to section 1. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LORD: On page 5, line 13, after the semicolon, insert: "Provided, That in prescribing functions and duties there shall be prescribed the following: $1,000,000,000 shall be expended for highways."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] is clearly a limitation on the use of the money provided for in section 1. The amendment might have been germane to section 1, but it is not germane to section 4. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. In carrying out the provisions of this joint resolution the President is authorized (within the limits of the appropriation made in sec. 1)—

(a) to guarantee loans to, or payments of, needy individuals;

(b) to make grants and/or loans and/or contracts; and

(c) to acquire, by purchase or by the power of eminent domain, any real property or any interest therein, and improve, develop, maintain, grant, sell, lease (with or without the privilege of purchasing), or otherwise dispose of any such property or interest therein.

Mr. BUCKBEE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BUCKBEE: On page 6, line 9, after the semicolon, insert the following language: "In prescribing the functions of the governmental agencies utilized by the President he shall prescribe that $2,000,000,000 of the funds appropriated by this resolution shall be used in making loans to industry."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is not germane to section 5. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BULWINKLE: Page 6, strike out lines 11 to 20, both inclusive, and in lieu thereof insert the following: "(c) to acquire by purchase any personal property or any interest therein, and/or acquire, by purchase or by the power of eminent domain, any real property or any interest therein, and improve, develop, maintain, grant, sell, lease (with or without the privilege of purchasing), or otherwise dispose of any such real or personal property or interest therein."

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment as a perfecting amendment to the section. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, leaves out the power of the President to purchase personal property, and I do not think that should be done. I understand it is considered that he has the power under existing law to purchase personal property. If this be so, then I wish to ask the chairman if the President has not also the power to acquire, by the right of eminent domain, real estate?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No.

Mr. BULWINKLE. In which statute is he given the power to purchase personal property?

Mr. WOODRUM. That power is carried in section 1 of this bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I want again to call the attention of the House to the way this bill was drafted.

We have heard the chairman of the committee state the President already had power to purchase personal property. Notwithstanding that, the bill came up on the floor of the House itself providing that personal property should be the subject of eminent domain. It was not until after I called the attention of the Democrats in the caucus and on the floor of the House to the matter that we had any amendments. If the committee amendment is satisfactory I withdraw my amendment, and in conclusion I wish to say that section 1 does not give the right to purchase personal property.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: On page 6, line 9, after the word "contracts" insert: "But all such grants and/or loans to finance construction projects and/or contracts let for construction projects shall contain such provisions as are necessary to insure that all employees employed on such projects shall be paid not less than the rate of wage prevailing in the locality in which project is prosecuted."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, my amendment does not apply, let me say first of all, to the C. C. C. camps or to any work which the Government is doing itself. It applies to contracts, loans, and grants. It means, for instance, that if they are building a bridge across the Mississippi River out at Davenport, Rock Island, or some other place on a 70-30 basis, that the workers employed on the bridge are to be paid the prevailing rate of wages of that community and not simply $50 a month.

I may say to the Members on my side of the House: When you go back to your districts I am sure the men in your districts who work, the skilled workers and the day laborers, are going to ask you, "Did you vote to stop me from getting a decent living wage at my work?" Admiral Peoples, at the hearing before the committee, said they were going to pay $50 a month for such work. Now, $50 a month for a man and wife and from three to five children is not a very decent wage for them to live on.

Mr. COX. It is better than nothing, is it not?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes; it is better than nothing, of course. But we take care of horses and dogs and other domestic animals, and we feed them and keep them warm. We are dealing here, however, with human beings, and not dogs, horses, or animals; and I for one believe that human beings are entitled to more than starvation wages.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am sure the gentleman does not want to misrepresent Admiral Peoples. It was his testimony that the average wage would be about $50.

Mr. CONNERY. Well, the gentleman can call it by any name he wants, but an average wage of $50 still is not a decent living wage.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. To have an average wage of $50 a month there must be some who will be paid above the average and, by the same token, some who will be paid less than the average.

Mr. CONNERY. That is it. There will be some who will be paid as little as $20 or perhaps even $10 a month.

The sole argument against my amendment that was used was that men will not go to work in private industry if you pay them more than $50 a month. Any skilled workman working on a bridge or working anywhere else and getting $1.20 an hour is worth that and more, and I am not going to help the United States Steel Corporation or any of the other big corporations of this country to reduce their wages, sanctioned by the United States Government setting the example. That is what we did in the Economy Act with the Government workers. The day we passed that bill the United States Steel Corporation put through a 15-percent cut on their workers.

It seems to me the whole story in connection with this amendment is: Are you for a decent living wage for working men and women in the United States or are you for a starvation wage of $50 a month?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Our distinguished friend from Massachusetts is one of the most lovable men in this House. Even when we do not agree with him, and cannot support his amendment, all of us have for him great respect and deep affection. He renders here valuable service to his district and to the Nation.

He wanted to know what we would tell our skilled workmen when we go back home if we refuse to pass his amendment. I know what I will tell them in my district. I will tell them that this is strictly an emergency measure. I will tell them that it is not a wage-scale measure. I will tell them that it is not a bill to provide a decent living wage for American workmen in private industry. This bill has not anything to do with private industry. I will tell them that it is absolutely impossible for this Government to hire 12,000,000 unemployed heads of families itself and pay them $8, $10, or $12 per day, as neither this Government nor any other government on earth could raise enough money to do that. But we are in hopes that this Government can take the 3,500,000 men now on relief, now drawing doles, now with their hands held out for charity, now receiving $15, or $20, or $25 per month gratuity, and give them an honest job, let them do honest work, and let them earn what the Government pays, and is able to pay, even if it does not amount to more than $50 per month.

Mr. Chairman, when I go home I will tell my skilled workmen and my unskilled workmen and all of my other constituents that it would be an utter impossibility for this Government to attempt to employ all of the unemployed, and to pay them the kind of wages our colleague from Massachusetts has in mind. If we were to pass his amendment, it would not be possible, under this bill, to employ more than one-third of the number of men we expect to employ, and it would leave the other two-thirds without employment and without any chance to obtain the essentials of life for their wives and little children.

The dole must stop. It destroys self-respect. We must get our men back to work. Earning one's own living, whether large or small, restores initiative, self-reliance, self-respect, and manhood.

I know that I will be misquoted in what I am saying, and that I will draw the fire upon me from ardent supporters of the Connery amendment, simply because I oppose it. But, in opposing the Connery amendment, I have the President with me. He is not in favor of it. He does not want it placed on this bill. It would be hurtful to his plans and purposes. It would hamper him and obstruct him in his efforts to get away from the demoralizing dole and would interfere with his plan to provide honest work for self-respecting Americans who do not want charity.

Those who will chide and upbraid me will be chiding and upbraiding the President, because I am making for him the kind of speech he would make here himself, if he could be heard on this Connery amendment. Are you going to put it in this bill, when the President does not want it? Are you going to vote for it when it will obstruct the President's plans and purposes? Are you going to override the President and force him to abandon his plan to place men in work and make them feel that they are earning the bread and meat which their wives and little children eat?

There are thousands of men in Massachusetts, there are thousands of heads of families in New York and in every State in this Nation who have not made $50 a month in 3 years. All of them want work. It would be a godsend to them. There are thousands of heads of families who would be glad to get from the Government as honest pay for honest work, $50 of real, hard American money each month with which to buy groceries for their wives and little children, and to know at the same time that they have earned the money.

What money has this Government to give men jobs with? Not a dollar. It cannot pull itself up by its own bootstraps. The money it is spending is tax money which the Government takes from the people. It is money that ultimately has to be paid back in taxes that are wrung from the pockets of our constituents back home. I am glad to be able to assure the American citizens back in my district who have been without jobs for so long that this great Government is starting a movement whereby they may get a job again. Whether it be at $50, $60, $150, or whatever it may be, when they earn the money by their own work, it restores their manhood, it restores their initiative, it restores their self-respect, and it restores their self-reliance. It takes them out of the mire of despond and makes big, strong American citizens of them. That is what the President has in mind and that is the purpose of this bill. That is why our great Speaker is for it, that is why you find our Democratic leadership for it, and that is why you find the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN], who introduced this bill, for it.

They say the bill did not have proper parenthood. They say it was put on your doorstep without an author. It has the name of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] on it. It comes here properly introduced. It comes here under the proper rules of the House, and it is going to be passed under the proper rules of the House.

This amendment should be voted down. I think it is my duty to vote against it. I am going to vote for the bill just as the President wants it and without changing it at all. I am not going to vote to emasculate the bill, but to pass it in the form the President wants it passed. He is the one who has asked for it. He is the leader the people have chosen. He is the leader in whom the people have confidence. He is the leader the people of this Nation are following. I am with him, and I believe you are, too. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time in defense of this amendment. The gentleman from Texas tells us this legislation is for the purpose of creating some upstanding American citizens. This is the first time I have ever heard of an average wage of $50 a month creating upstanding American citizens. [Applause.]

It is naturally assumed that in the expenditure of this huge amount of money there will be thousands of mechanics who will receive more than $50 a month; therefore it will be necessary for thousands of others to receive less than $50 a month. I fear if we pass this legislation without restriction as to the prevailing rate that we will not only create peonage in this country, but that we will also destroy the wage structure of American industry. [Applause.]

If the President of the United States had the administration of this law, and if he could personally go out into every community and ferret out the conditions and set the wage of that community himself, I would agree, but there is no other man I know of in whom I am willing to intrust that great responsibility. I have reference to our experience with the Federal Relief Administration.

On November 19, Mr. Hopkins sent out an order abrogating the 30 cents an hour minimum, leaving it up to the local administrators in the county to set the wage they thought was adequate. In my district, and in nearly every county in the district, where men were drawing 30 cents an hour on this P. W. A. and F. E. R. A. work, a number of the county administrators instantly reduced that wage to 15 cents an hour. That is what they termed the prevailing, or the average rate, of that county.

I am not willing to leave this up to any local administrator. We ought to have in the context of this bill the provision which will insure to the American workmen at least a prevailing rate in all communities and I may say it is low enough in a great many communities at the present time. I am proud at this time to rise in favor of this very important amendment to the pending bill.

It is, indeed, dangerous for us to expend $4,000,000,000 and leave the wage question and the hourly rate question entirely unprotected. No one knows the hours of labor that will be set on any project, no one can tell what some local administrator or some of the subordinates of the President will say are reasonable hours to be worked on a job, or what they may say will be a reasonable wage.

Then, along with this, is the penalty clause which takes away our right and privilege to protect ourselves in our wages and hours and working conditions.

I say to you, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the Davis-Bacon bill had the prevailing-rate clause and the 30-hour week clause and the N. R. A. has the prevailing-rate clause and the 30-hour week clause, we should not be afraid to put these provisions in this legislation.

This legislation is not for the purpose stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I feel it my duty to make this statement to my colleagues. The President considers the right to fix the security payments as absolutely essential to the success of this program. The President is very insistent upon this point. We discussed it with him. We discussed this at length and the contention is that it will do no good in ending the dole or ending our work program as long as the Government gives as much as they could get in private enterprise, because they will enroll themselves upon the Government and continue to work for the Government and never seek employment in private enterprise.

Here is what the President said in his message to this House:

> Compensation on emergency public projects should be in the form of security payments which should be larger than the amount now received as a relief dole, but at the same time not so large as to encourage the rejection of opportunities for private employment or the leaving of private employment to engage in Government work.

The President, Mr. Chairman, is striving to bring to a conclusion this great problem of unemployment, and until it is brought to a conclusion our country will never recover.

Let us see what this amendment will require. Take your P. W. A. wage scale that is now prevailing:

Skilled laborers, $1 an hour in the South, $1.10 in the middle zone, and $1.20 in the east and north zones.

Common labor, 40 cents in the South, which does not include the farms; 45 cents in the middle zone; and 50 cents in the east and north zones.

I know something about wages in agricultural communities. I know the prevailing wage down there is from $25 to $30 a month right now.

Yet you say your amendment will pay the prevailing wage. If you do, I am advised that you should appropriate $6,000,000,000 instead of $4,000,000,000 to meet this program.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman speaks about the farmer. Who is going to have any money to buy the products of the farm on an average wage of $50 a month?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If you make the average wage $50 a month in this country, you are going to have a prosperous country. Take the average wage of the bricklayer who works 1 or 2 days a week—the prevailing wage in industry often works but a quarter of the time. This provides a permanent wage, a monthly wage. If he works 10 or 15 days a month, he will get the average wage.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Would you pay employees—every person under 60 years of age $10 a day or the prevailing wage and then give all those over 60 years of age $200 a month? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, no.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has been exhausted on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY]. A few moments ago we heard the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], in speaking against the Connery amendment, make the statement on the floor of this House that this was not a measure intended to give the American working class a decent living. It is charity. I am sure the gentleman from Texas will not leave those remarks in his speech when he comes to revise it; he will not permit that statement to go in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. No; I have only 5 minutes.

The President in his message to Congress at the beginning of the present session definitely stated that he wanted to bring about conditions in which the American working class could make an honest living by the passage of this bill, and yet the gentleman from Texas says that that is not intended to give them a decent living.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. On March 7, I think it was, last year, the President asked all employers of the United States to increase wages.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Certainly. Are you not willing if the Government enters into the construction of buildings or the construction of dams, to pay a decent living wage to workers employed on Government projects? Why should not the Government do it? Again, this bill gives the President the power to establish Government industries, factories, and so forth, which will go into competition with private enterprise, which will seriously affect private industry and labor if a lower standard of wage is paid in Government shops and factories.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] provides that the Government shall pay the prevailing rate of wage paid in the community where the industry is started.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I do not want any misapprehension. My amendment does not say that where the Government itself starts any work it has to pay the prevailing rate of wage. It provides that wherever any contract, loan, or grant is made the prevailing rate of wage shall obtain.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Nevertheless, it is true that the Government can go into industrial activity; and, if it does, it ought to pay the same wage that private industry pays. Then, again, I believe the first section of the bill gives the President the power to adjust working and wage conditions. In other words, if there is a controversy between employer and employee, and they cannot agree on a settlement, under this bill the President can establish rules or regulations fixing the working hours, fixing the wage conditions, and if the workingman or the employer does not respect that regulation they can be fined $5,000. Of course, they could be sent to jail, also, for 2 years, until the amendment was offered a short while ago which eliminated the 2-year prison penalty; you were afraid to leave that in the bill.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. What I am trying to do in this amendment undoubtedly is in the law now—in the N. R. A. law passed by the House and Senate and signed by the President.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. According to the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] it is not a bill to help the working classes in America. As an official of one great labor organization told me yesterday, it is a bill to make slaves out of the American workingmen. You Democrats claim to be the friends of the working classes and state that this bill is for the express purpose of helping the poor and the distressed in our country. If it is true, let us give Government employees working on the Federal public-work projects a decent wage, so they can provide a living for themselves and families.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close at 4 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close at 4 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close at 4 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GIFFORD rose.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Chairman, the question at issue on the Connery amendment is whether this bill is a relief measure or a recovery measure. If it is a relief measure, the payment of an average of $50 a month to our unemployed workers may be justified; but if it is a recovery measure, then we are not justified in authorizing an average pay of only $50 per month for American labor. What we need in this country is purchasing power. We need something to start the wheels of industry, and we are not going to start them if the 3,500,000 unemployed are to receive only $50 a month. In my district they raise chickens. It is a chicken country [laughter], but it is a different kind of chicken than that which the gentlemen who are laughing apparently have in mind.

If a man raising chickens wants production of eggs, or if he wants to sell chickens in the market, he is not going to put those chickens on half rations, which is, in effect, the erroneous policy we are adopting toward our unemployed when we provide only $50 per month for men with families.

We are proposing here to give 3,500,000 of our unemployed half rations, and we make no provision whatever for the additional eight or more million unemployed. Is this all we can do for our unfortunate unemployed?

Mr. CONNERY. And there are any number of people working for their living in my district who like to eat chicken, and they cannot eat the chickens of California unless they get a decent living wage.

Mr. HOEPPEL. The gentleman from Massachusetts speaks the truth. Nothing but the barest necessities will be possible to a family with an income of only $50 per month. Prices of commodities are increasing. Eggs are 47 cents per dozen here in Washington and perhaps higher elsewhere. Bacon is 40 or 50 cents per pound, which indicates the purchasing power of the average family which receives only $50 per month, as is here proposed. In this bill we are merely prolonging the agony of our unfortunate unemployed. It is very probable I will vote for this bill, however, because I have come to the conclusion that it is better to vote for any measure which embodies even the mere hope of relief than to permit our unemployed to continue to suffer as they are—in the midst of plenty. We are asked to vote for the largest single appropriation measure since World War days, and with practically no information as to the details of administration, but if it were necessary to vote to bankrupt the country to alleviate the distress so wide-spread among our people today, many of us would be inclined to follow that course as the lesser of two evils.

No one has yet indicated who is the author of this bill. We do know it was sent down by the President, who is in favor of it. This bill may have been written by Wall Street agents, as that group continues to clip tax-exempt interest-bearing coupons through the provisions of this bill, while there is nothing in this bill to protect American labor in the maintenance of a just and fair wage scale. We will not get out of this depression through this procedure. We are merely compromising with poverty and at the same time enriching the money lender. We should appropriate a sufficient amount in this bill to give a fair, square wage to every individual employed, the wages paid should be in accordance with the prevailing wage scale in the section or area in which the labor is performed, and in no event should the compensation be less than $100 per month. Even this figure is too low, but it may be justified for the present.

Mr. KNUTSON. And where do we eat after we go bankrupt?

Mr. HOEPPEL. Perhaps we may then go across the seas and ask our foreign debtors who owe us $11,000,000,000 to pay us part of what is due, considering that they are using their surplus today to build additional armaments while at the same time they are pleading with us to enter the World Court.

The procedure which we are following in the new deal to appropriate money through the issuance of tax-exempt securities will ultimately result in repudiation, inflation, confiscation, or perhaps communism. We can avoid this menace if we would enact into law the Townsend old-age revolving pension plan, which would restore buying power to the Nation and as a result solve our unemployment problem. If the procedure outlined by Dr. Townsend to raise the necessary funds to pay $200 per month to every worthy citizen over 60 years of age comes before the House, I shall most emphatically vote for it, for by doing so I shall be performing a humanitarian service to our aged citizens, an economic service to the unemployed and to those burdened with debt, and I shall be demonstrating my sincerity in regard to my campaign promises by expressing the wishes of my constituents.

If the motion is made to recommit this bill, and such motion contains a provision to maintain American standards of labor, I shall gladly vote for such motion, as I consider the interest of labor paramount to any other interest in the development of wealth, prosperity, and domestic security.

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this resolution and in support of the Connery amendment, and to impress the Members of the House with the necessity of putting into operation the President's water-conservation and water-use program.

Mr. Chairman, this resolution is to finance the President's entire recovery program for the next 2 years, and certainly recovery is uppermost in the minds of every Member of Congress. This resolution seeks to appropriate $4,000,000,000 and to allocate for recovery another $880,000,000 of present unused funds.

To bring about recovery the first step is to provide relief from the hardships of the long-time and wide-spread unemployment and the conditions resulting therefrom, to relieve economic maladjustment, and to alleviate human distress in general.

Under this resolution the President may abolish, redistribute, transfer, or consolidate, in whole or in part, any of the functions or duties of the governmental agencies created under the special laws of the Seventy-third Congress. He may also transfer the property and personnel of any of these agencies to any new consolidated agencies. This gives the President authority to save all the provisions of the emergency laws of the Seventy-third Congress which have proved beneficial and workable, and it permits him to discard the unworkable provisions. He set a commission to work last summer gathering and assembling facts for this very purpose. It is only reasonable to assume from that fact and from his message of January 4 that this is what he proposes to do under this resolution.

Section 206 of title II of the N. I. R. A. provides, among other things, first, that no convict labor shall be employed on any Government projects; second, that 30 hours shall constitute a week's labor on any such project, except persons in executive, administrative, and advisory positions; third, reasonable wages; fourth, veterans' preference, and so forth. This section 206 is now the law, and the purpose of the Connery amendment to this resolution is to insure its retention. It is working well, and I hope it will be retained. A safeguard for its retention is the adoption of the Connery amendment.

We know that the all-powerful, invisible government which has dominated this Nation for so long before March 4, 1932, is and always has been an untiring enemy of laborers, toilers, and producers. We know that this invisible government never sleeps; so in defense of the laborers, toilers, and producers of this Nation let us take time by the forelock and insure the retention of section 206.

Of the Members who have taken the floor in opposition to this recovery resolution, not a single one has argued against the appropriation; hence its necessity is admitted. The opposition to this legislation has been directed entirely against the idea of letting the President allocate the moneys and designate the work. Of the Members opposing the resolution, a large percentage represent financial districts. Their arguments are directed to the elimination of national projects. Their idea is to spend the money according to population, regardless of the need or the permanent usefulness of any project. This would allocate to the State of New York, regardless of need or usefulness, one-tenth of the gross sum authorized by this bill and would allot to Montana one two-hundred-and-fiftieth of the gross sum, and would not take into consideration, in either State, either the local or general conditions or the need or the permanent benefit to be derived.

A program of this kind would absolutely destroy the President's water-conservation and water-use plan now set up for the West. If the money to be allocated under this bill for public works were distributed according to population, the Rocky Mountain States, after deducting their road grant money, would not have enough left to complete the self-liquidating projects now under construction. In my State it would ultimately kill the water-conservation and water-use program which is now under way.

One of the arguments advanced against the resolution is the spending of any of the money on irrigation and reclamation, urging that new lands should not be brought into production nor old lands into greater production as long as we can normally produce a surplus of wheat, corn, and hogs. To me that is no argument at all.

When we think of wheat and speak of wheat, we think and speak of flour wheat. Now, let me tell you that flour wheat is not raised under irrigation. Irrigation robs wheat of protein; and unless wheat is high in protein content, it is not flour wheat. Now, let me inquire what corn area depends on irrigation? None, Mr. Chairman; none.

Now, let us see what the situation really is: America has a distinct shortage of all agricultural products grown under irrigation in the Rocky Mountain area. We have always been importers of alfalfa seed and on many occasions we have imported alfalfa hay; this year we have done so. We produce only a little over 27 percent of the sugar we consume. Alfalfa and sugar beets are the two principal crops grown under irrigation in this area. With a shortage of 73 percent on sugar production and notwithstanding our importations of alfalfa seed and hay, the opposition to this resolution would say, "Stop the President on his water-control and water-use program and halt his irrigation and reclamation plans."

Why, Mr. Chairman, why? I can tell you why. It is the invisible government again. It is thinking in terms of the privileged few instead of the producing and toiling masses. Wall Street has a billion dollars invested in the Cuban sugar industry, and it hopes to keep American production down in order to protect its Cuban investment. Now, if the President's plan on water conservation and irrigation and reclamation can be cut off, the privileged few would have just that much more of the appropriation earmarked for their purposes. They hope to destroy his program on this matter by allocating the public-works funds according to population—this would automatically earmark for New York $488,000,000 of this relief and public-works fund, which is one-tenth of the whole sum, and such procedure would leave the Rocky Mountain States hanging high and dry so far as any new public works or water conservation or water use would be concerned.

Mr. Chairman, water conservation and irrigation is the one thing that will hit right at the balancing of the agricultural production of this Nation. If we increase our production of agricultural commodities requiring irrigation, all of which is short in this country, it will make a place for these farmers who are being crowded out and put on the rocks by overproduction of other products.

The greatest economic problem today is to balance agricultural production, all along the line, with consumption. A material shortage of one product and a material surplus of another is our great handicap. The experience of the last 5 years has demonstrated that fact. Yet when the President starts a program to remedy this evil by a long-range water-conservation and water-use set-up which will strike right at the cause of the evil, we find the financial centers bitterly opposing it. They think only in terms of their own selfish interests which they have for so long been permitted to promote at the expense of the great masses of toilers and producers of the country.

When we consider the President's message on the state of the Union in conjunction with this relief and public-works resolution, we at once realize the importance and necessity of the legislation. In it the President is given authority to deal with those on relief by work rather than by dole. Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the Members who come from the industrial and financial cities of the Nation, that there are many, many farmers of this country on relief. They are not on relief by reason of any act of theirs. They abhor relief, and particularly do they abhor dole relief. The relief they desire, the relief they demand, is a balancing of agricultural production with consumption and a decent price for their products. If they fail of production by reason of drought, they desire and demand an opportunity to work at a decent wage so that they may properly care for and protect their families. At this time, and in order to prevent a recurrence of the present drought condition, let me impress upon you, Mr. Chairman, how beneficial as a long-range drought-relief program it would be to put these men to work upon water-conservation and water-use projects, as planned by the President.

When this resolution is considered together with the President's message, it is plain to me that he is headed to remedy the present deplorable situation. First, he is getting away from the dole; second, he is putting men to work; third, in each instance he is directing that work for the benefit of the particular area, for instance, in the Rocky Mountain slopes his projects are water conservation and water use to the end that this terrible drought condition shall not reoccur; fourth, he is attempting to balance agricultural production, all along the line, with consumption.

There are in every State many projects that are economically sound, highly and permanently useful, which would provide a high ratio of applied labor. These projects are of varied kinds and each is as appurtenant to the particular locality as water conservation and water use are to the Rocky Mountain area.

The opposition to this resolution does not dispute that fact, but the entire trend of their argument is to designate the projects and allocate the money by this resolution rather than to let the President do it. This brings us back to the fundamentals of the argument of the opposition, namely, allocate the money to the several States according to population, and this, according to their argument, to be done regardless of the use to which it is to be applied. To me such procedure would be a half-brother to the dole.

If the President has to do with the allocation of this relief and public-works appropriation, we know that the water-conservation and water-use program and the development of cheaper electric energy to be developed from the natural resources of this country will go forward. In his speech at the Fort Peck Dam last summer he struck the keynote of the need of all of the Mississippi watershed west of that river, when he said that not a drop of water falling on the Mississippi side of the Rocky Mountains should find its way to the Gulf of Mexico unless it was controlled against its harmful course and conserved to a beneficial use.

Mr. Chairman, the passage of this resolution and giving to the President the authority to allocate this relief and public-works money is the safest step we can take to the consummation of that idea. I feel safe with the allocation in his hands; but when it comes to letting the Congress do that, I am apprehensive that it will become "pork barrel" legislation, in which instance the stronger will subdue the weaker. In such case the sparsely settled States will get only the stale brine, and the invisible government will get all the pork.

The allocation of this relief fund according to population and of spending it in the States according to the population of each State, as proposed by the opponents of this bill, would have the effect of practical nullification of the Civilian Conservation Corps Act.

Under the C. C. C. Act each State is allowed its quota of enrollment in the camps, and then the camps are established at places throughout the country on projects permanently useful, such as aid to reforestation, roads, and water conservation. In this class of work, how could the little State of Rhode Island, with its intense population, and its surface practically all paved, without need of water conservation and without any forests, take care of its enrollment? If we were to attempt to allocate funds for this humanitarian work according to population and limit the work to the places according to population, we would soon end this class of relief and work. We now have 335,000 voluntarily enrolled young men in these camps and a waiting list equaling at least one-half that number. These enrolled young men were all out of employment, and by virtue of the C. C. C. Act, which must be supported by the appropriation to be made by this resolution, they will continue their opportunity to perform useful toil for a limited compensation which they are mighty glad to get.

I have visited several of these camps in my State, and I have never found a single discontented enrolled young man—not a single one. Now, by the defeat of this resolution we would turn these young men out to become members of the vast army of unemployed.

These young men are today the most valuable asset in our entire population, and no one can measure the good that this Government has derived from the C. C. C. Act. The President has told us that it is his plan to increase this humanitarian work, but it cannot be increased unless this resolution is passed; and if this resolution is passed with hobbles as its opponents desire—namely, to allot the money and work according to population—then the C. C. C. Act has been destroyed.

Mr. Chairman, as for me and for the people whom I represent, I favor the President's program to eliminate the dole and substitute work projects therefor. I have faith that such projects will be economically sound and permanently useful. In the construction of such projects I hope the labor will be protected under section 206 of the N. I. R. A. I favor the permanent long-range drought-relief program which is found in the President's water-control and water-use set-up. I favor a balancing of agricultural production with consumption; and having faith in the President's desire to bring about these results, I am supporting the resolution. [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. I want once more to insist on getting a little information. I received a letter from a constituent this morning saying that the Governor of my State will probably have the expending of millions of dollars. It is from an official of a municipality, stating that—

In our town meeting warrant is an article calling for a water system at an expenditure of $200,000—$100,000 to be paid by the Federal Government.

He stated that his information is that our Governor has promised $100,000 for either this project or a consolidated school.

Is there not now a law wherein grants are limited to 30 percent? Is that law set aside by this act? I notice that the money left over of the $3,300,000,000 is transferred for the purposes of this act.

Furthermore, I want to know whether the wage scales, if they build a water system, or if they build a consolidated school in that town, will be lower than the local people are paid for that kind of work? Is that law still on the statute books or is that law set aside for the purposes of this act? We cannot seem to get any information as to this legislation from the committee whatever. They prefer to utter such statements as that "the Republican Party will do everything it can to defeat Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1936." We on the minority side might say that you will even plunge the country into bankruptcy and put aside every power of Congress and give it to the President in order to reelect him in 1936. Our Governors will now probably emulate the Governor of the State of Maine. It is said that he did not defend the new deal; he milked it. It is history. [Laughter and applause.] We are confronted with the fact that Congressmen will amount to but very little in procuring work for their districts. The Democratic Governors will usurp entirely our prerogatives.

Look outside at the weather conditions. Knowing that for months at a time this weather endures in some sections, I then think of the futility of this public-works bill. This plan of relief has been discredited by other nations. I wish that our former President Coolidge were with us yet, because people would listen to him. I think he would say, "You cannot create prosperity by creating indebtedness." That is what the people really want to hear you say today. The United States Daily claims that the outstanding failure of the new deal is the P. W. A., although honestly administered. However, I rose hoping to procure a little information. This great Appropriations Committee cannot answer any questions at all about the probable methods of spending this $4,000,000,000. I hope they will take a lot of comfort going back into their committee room and demanding from every official who will now come before them, "How many lead pencils will you need to use next year?" What a committee! Abdicating all questioning as to an expenditure of $4,000,000,000, and then subjecting all other officials to the very minutiae of their expenditures! I hope someone will suggest the information about this 50-50 business that my Governor is anticipating. What a potential political bonanza this is! [Laughter and applause.] I should be glad to vote for one or even two billions for relief, the appropriations unexpended or allotted to be covered into the Treasury July 1, 1936.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY) there were—ayes 118, noes 129.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. CONNERY and Mr. BUCHANAN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 131, noes 159.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, are any amendments pending now that the Connery amendment has been voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] intends to offer an amendment to strike out the whole section.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. Kahn: Page 6, line 20, strike out the period and insert the following: "Provided, That the money appropriated in this act shall only be spent within the limits of the United States and only for articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States notwithstanding that such articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States may cost more."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to this section but should have been made to section 2.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman reserve his point of order for 3 minutes?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to allow the gentlewoman from California to proceed for 3 minutes.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if the members of the majority party are sincere in following their leader, who has said that one of the ways to recovery is through industry and that private industry must take up the slack in employment, they will vote for this amendment. If we limit the articles to be used in this relief program to those grown or manufactured in the United States, private industry will be given an enormous impetus. [Applause.]

We know now that reciprocal tariffs are under negotiation with various countries in Europe to admit their manufactures, to admit their products at a lower duty. Even if we have to pay more for goods of American manufacture, it certainly is worth it to our American labor. Therefore, I can see no objection to an amendment of this kind, the purpose of which is to aid and sustain not only American industry, but American labor. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman from California yield?

Mrs. KAHN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentlewoman from California aware of the fact that her amendment is contrary to the Democratic policy of free trade?

Mrs. KAHN. I certainly am. [Laughter.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I now make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment offered by the gentlewoman from California might properly be offered to section 2 which relates to the territory in which the appropriation provided by the joint resolution may be used, but it is not germane to the section under consideration.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma: Page 6, line 15, after the colon, insert the following: "Provided, That no bonds, securities, or income therefrom issued to carry out the provisions of this act shall be exempt from taxation."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment on the ground that this joint resolution nowhere authorizes bond issues or otherwise states how the money shall be raised. It is merely an appropriation bill. The amendment is not germane to the joint resolution or to any matter in the joint resolution because the joint resolution contains no provision relating to the issuance of bonds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The gentleman from Oklahoma offers the amendment which has just been read. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is not germane to the joint resolution or to any matter in the joint resolution because the joint resolution contains no provision relating to the issuance of bonds.

The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: Page 6, line 9, after the word "contract", strike out the semicolon and insert: "which shall be uniform in character and which shall be distributed among the various States in proportion as the number of unemployed bears to the whole number of unemployed."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it attempts under this section to control the distribution of money, a matter dealt with in a former section of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment to the language on page 6, line 9, reading as follows:

"To make grants and/or loans and/or contracts."

The amendment offered provides:

"Which shall be uniform in character and which shall be distributed among the various States in proportion as the number of unemployed bears to the whole number of unemployed."

The Chair thinks this is clearly a proper limitation on the provisions of the section and overrules the point of order.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, may I proceed for 5 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 2 minutes, that being all the time remaining under the order of the House limiting debate on this section.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I offer seeks to insert the following language in paragraph (b) of section 5, at the end of line 9, so that the language will read as follows:

To make grants and/or loans and/or contracts which shall be uniform in character and which shall be uniformly distributed among the various States in proportion as its unemployed bears to the total number of unemployed.

Mr. Chairman, the State of Wyoming has 225,000 people, which is 60,000 less than the population of my congressional district. I represent three times as many people as there are in the entire State of Nevada, one-half as many as there are in the States of Rhode Island, Utah, Montana, New Mexico, New Hampshire, and North Dakota. Most of those States contain less than 10 percent of the population of Illinois.

I have no desire to raise a sectional issue, but the fact is that if you wish to cure unemployment and afford relief you must do it where distressed people are located. If we have 300,000 folk out of jobs in Illinois and there are but 30,000 out of work in Montana, then to fully and equitably subserve the purposes of this measure the Federal Government should spend 10 times as much in Illinois as in these other States.

Such, however, has not been the case in the past, and unless this amendment is adopted there will be no assurance that this disparity in the amounts expended in the various States will not obtain in the future. The bill recites in its first section that the purpose of this immense fund is to alleviate distress and hardship and afford relief and employment. Very well. There can then be no objection to an equitable distribution of this money. It might be good politics but poor judgment to spend ninety millions in Wyoming for some reclamation project with its 225,000 population and only fifty millions in Illinois with its seven and one-half millions of people; and if there be sincerety in the insistence of the proponents of this bill that the money is to be used for the relief of unemployment, then such sincerity dictates the adoption of this amendment.

Under the P. W. A. the limit of a grant for any non-Federal project was 30 percent. A State or municipality or school district could obtain a loan for some public project to which was added an outright grant of 30 percent. The amount and the limit was definitely fixed. There is nothing in this bill to indicate that outright grants of 50 percent or 75 percent might be made in favored States and perhaps only 20 percent or 30 percent in States that are not favored. There is nothing in the bill to indicate that there must be uniformity in grants and loans and contracts. There is nothing to prevent Florida or Oklahoma or Texas from receiving a 50-percent grant on some public project, while Ohio, Pennsylvania, Illinois, or Iowa receives but 20 percent. You may very well say that this will not be done. What assurance have we to that effect? It has been done before, as in the case of relief, where Mississippi received 99 percent of all its relief expenditures from Uncle Sam's Treasury and Illinois received but 57 percent. We are one of the four largest taxpaying States in the Union and it is high time that we were receiving an equitable share of Federal funds.

I recall the story of the Good Samaritan in the Scriptures where it is recorded that when the Good Samaritan went down the road and heard the moans and cries of the man who had been stripped and wounded by thieves, "He came where he was." The Good Samaritan came to where the wounded man lay. It was a direct approach without heralds, brass bands, or headlines. That must be the philosophy in administering this $4,000,000,000 fund. It must be expended where the unemployed are. And where are they? Not in the vast unpopulated areas of the less densely populated States like Wyoming, Utah, Nevada, and others, but in populous centers like Peoria, Chicago, Rockford, and Springfield. To defeat this amendment is but added evidence that the fund may not be so used and added reason why a vote against this measure will be fully justified.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DIRKSEN), there were—ayes 83, nays 165.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: Page 6, line 4, strike out all of section 5.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CELLER: Page 6, line 12, after the word "domain", insert "in accordance with the laws of the State where the property is situated"; and in line 20, after the period insert the following, "he or his duly authorized agents shall make adequate determination of facts establishing definitely that the property sought to be acquired is necessary to carry out the purposes of the act."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CHURCH moves that the Committee do now rise and report the resolution back to the House with the recommendation that the resolving clause be stricken out.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer this preferential motion in the hope, doubtless futile, that we as duly elected representatives of the people of the United States will recognize that by a passage of this resolution, entitled "House Joint Resolution 117", will be dissolving ourselves of our legislative responsibilities and abdicating as a representative body. I offer this motion with the recommendation that this particular resolution be defeated and that the committee in charge be directed to report to the House a measure likewise to provide "relief from the hardships attributable to wide-spread unemployment", but which also will be in keeping with the American system of government.

There is no Member of this House more anxious than I to provide "relief from the hardships attributable to wide-spread unemployment." I would vote for any sane measure for relief for our people. I cannot in all conscience, however, vote for any bill which not only is a direct abdication by Congress of its own responsibilities and rightful duties, but also allows a blanket appropriation of $4,880,000,000, together with dangerous legislative and judicial control over the spending of same.

My criticism is not of the executive department of the United States, nor of any Cabinet member, nor of any person or corporation as a governmental agency to whom this resolution would delegate the powers of Congress to legislate.

My criticism is of the Congress itself that abdicates its duties and shirks its personal responsibilities, and particularly when it does this in the face of the Supreme Court decisions, as in the recent oil case.

Mr. Chairman, this measure will go down in the annals of history as a blank-check resolution, whereby Congress definitely abdicates as a legislative body, representative of the people.

This abdication by Congress, this refusal by Congress to establish a definite and definable program for which each Member would be responsible to his constituents, and on the nature and continuance of which all industry could consistently count, is the main cause today of the fear and uncertainty retarding recovery in this country.

Because Congress is abdicating and fails to put the laws on the statute books, thereby creating uncertainty of legislation and uncertainty of program, fear from this uncertainty continues and business remains stagnate, with resulting unemployment.

I would ask every Member of Congress to read and reread this resolution. I should like every person in the United States to read it in its entirety. A mere description of its aim and scope is absolutely no indication of the amazing and strangulating provisions which it contains. I remind you that a vote for this resolution is a vote not for specific recovery measures, but is merely equivalent to signing a blank check, constituting the complete relinquishment of the legislative duties of this body.

Permit me to call your special attention to section 4 of this joint resolution. The legislative power which it takes from the Representatives of the people in the Congress of the United States and confers on the Executive is summarized effectively by the first few words of each paragraph of that section. It clothes the Executive with the power to "establish", "utilize and prescribe", "consolidate, redistribute, abolish, or transfer", and to "delegate."

Moreover, in section 5 (c) he is authorized "to acquire, by purchase or by the power of eminent domain, any real property or any interest therein", and to do with it as he would—"improve, develop, maintain, grant, sell, lease * * * or otherwise dispose of."

Gentlemen, the language is general and the power conferred by it on the Executive is practically without limitation. You would permit him to act in such manner as he sees fit. In section 6 you authorize the Executive to "prescribe such rules and regulations" as he may consider necessary, and in that same section you make violation of any such rule or regulation punishable by as much as $5,000.

But by this resolution you do more than that. You would permit any person, partnership, or corporation to prescribe rules and regulations, to act as a legislature. Is it not so that in section 4 (d) you authorize the Executive to delegate the powers conferred on him by this resolution? Is it not so that these broad, general powers can pass down from the President, through a governmental agency, to any person, partnership, or corporation? The resolution grants the authority to delegate. I cannot too strongly emphasize the implications, the imponderable realities which underlie, when I speak of the prospects of a delegated agency, partnership, corporation, or any person, acting as a legislature in prescribing rules and regulations. In other words, any one so delegated can make the law and our people are subject to $5,000 fine for violation.

By this resolution Congress would transfer its legislative duties, as well as its rightful responsibilities, to the Executive, which office in turn is authorized to delegate that power to any person, partnership, or corporation he sees fit. Virtually the only limitation upon the authority is the $4,880,000,000 here appropriated.

It is pure folly to assume that the Executive can personally supervise and carry out this resolution, where he would serve in a legislative capacity as well as administrative. It is a human impossibility for any one man, particularly when he is involved in the busyness of other duties, to give personal supervision to all the realities contingent upon the spending of four billion eight hundred and eighty million. I cannot but feel that those who speak of such being done, knowing in their own minds the utter impossibility, are guilty of betraying the people.

The President can, and of necessity he will, delegate the power given him by this resolution. Not the Congress of the United States, not the President of the United States, but some unknown person or partnership or corporation is destined by this resolution to become the legislature, in practice to be vested with legislative authority. I wonder if the people we represent in our respective districts know that section 6 of this resolution subjects them to a fine of as much as $5,000 if there is a violation of the rules and regulations as may be promulgated in connection with it.

His Representative in the Congress of the United States did not make the law which may cause him to have to pay a destructive fine. By this resolution his Representative, refusing to discharge his rightful duty, would permit someone else to make that law. No one knows what the nature of it will be. We were sent here to express the will of our people in different sections of the country, but we would give this power to someone else and permit that now unknown someone else to make the laws which subject the people we represent to a $5,000 fine. I am not speaking of a fiction, for I would have you bear in mind that the authority transferred to the Executive by this resolution can be "delegated." Section 4 (d) expressly provides it.

This resolution which we are discussing here today is anything but a clear, definite expression of policy. It is purely and simply an abdication of Congress in a transfer of legislative power. A blanket appropriation of the people's money with authority to do anything desired with it, virtually without limits and certainly without a statement of policy and definable program.

There is little doubt in my mind as to the constitutionality of this resolution. I believe from the discussion I have heard here this afternoon that I have legitimate cause to wonder if the respective Members of Congress have had opportunity to familiarize themselves with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the so-called "hot-oil" case, which was handed down on January 7 of this year, declaring section 9 (c) of the oil code unconstitutional.

Section 9 (c) of the oil code, giving the President unlimited authority to determine the policy and making disobedience to his order subject to fine and imprisonment, is analogous to House Joint Resolution 117, under discussion here. In that section of the oil code the President was committed to the function of a legislature as well as executive. In this resolution he is likewise committed to the function of a legislature as well as executive. The Supreme Court declared the oil-code section unconstitutional and it will, should a case come under its review, declare this resolution unconstitutional.

Article 1, section 1, of the Constitution of the United States provides that "all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives" and in section 8 of that article the Constitution provides that Congress is "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution" its general powers. That is the function, it is the duty, it is the responsibility of the Congress. By no right can we, nor should we, delegate that power to the Executive, vesting him with the authority to delegate it to whomsoever he should designate.

As the Supreme Court said in its decision on January 7:

> The question whether such delegation of legislative power is permitted by the Constitution is not answered by the argument that it should be assumed that the President has acted, and will act, for what he believes to be the public good. The point is not one of motives but of constitutional authority, for which the best of motives is not a substitute.

That is the position I wish to take here. The Constitution has the necessary resources of flexibility and practicality as to enable this Congress to perform its duty as a legislative body—to define the policy, to establish the standards, and to set up a definite program for providing relief for our people. It is our responsible duty and there is no substitute for it. As the Supreme Court declared in this recent decision on the oil code:

The Congress manifestly is not permitted to abdicate, or to transfer to others, the essential legislative functions with which it is thus vested.

It is recognized that in the practical administration of a law the Executive or some governmental agency must have authority to prescribe the subordinate rules or regulations. Otherwise the law would be a futility. But the Congress of the United States must define the policy and set the standards under which the rules, as a matter of detail, will be promulgated. Congress makes the law by formulating a policy, stipulating the principles, setting the limitations, and definitely promulgating the program. The rules and regulations in the administration of the law are matters of detail, issued in accordance with the policy, upon a basis of the principles, within the set limitations and pursuant to the defined program.

But in this resolution there are no principles; there are virtually no limitations; there seems to be just a broad, general, indefinite statement of purpose. The rules and regulations, which can be prescribed by any person, partnership, or corporation the President so delegates, are not matters of detail. They would be the law itself, for violation of which I again remind you the people are made subject to $5,000 fine. This resolution is a dangerous, unconstitutional transfer of legislative power.

I beg the Membership of this House to hold fast to their constitutional legislative duties. I beg it not to run out on its oath.

We should have the courage as men and as Representatives to assume the responsibilities of legislating for this country, for the people whom we represent. If you vote to sign this blank check and abandon your responsibilities you should resign and let someone take your place, who, after he takes an oath to perform his legislative duties under the Constitution, will have the courage to live up to his responsibilities.

Mr. Chairman, I respectfully ask that this particular bill be defeated and that the committee report back to the House a measure which will provide the necessary relief for our people, in proper amount to alleviate hardships, but which at the same time definitely sets up the program and makes provision for the manner in which and the principles upon which it will be carried out.

Mr. Chairman, I respectfully remind the House that our people want business to revive, that they may again assume a normal, wholesome life in pursuing their respective trade or profession. Business cannot revive, and, in the last analysis, business revival is the kind of relief our people want, unless it can free itself from the existing uncertainty. This resolution creates uncertainty, for no one can know what the law of tomorrow will be. We as Representatives have the duty and the responsibility. To vote for this resolution now before us is to shirk that duty and responsibility. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the preferential motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, who has just spoken, has offered an amendment which, if adopted, means the killing of this bill.

It is amusing to listen to the arguments of some of my friends on the Republican side in their protestations of love for the suffering mankind of America, and in their desire to relieve the economically distressed, whose conditions is due to no fault of their own, but to the temporary breakdown of an economic system over which they had no control.

When they talk of their desire to help those who are economically distressed, and at the same time oppose this bill, my mind goes back to 3 years ago, when the present Vice President of the United States, then Speaker of the House of Representatives, introduced a bill for the purpose of relieving the suffering of millions of our people.

It was called the "Garner pork-barrel bill" by the Republicans when we undertook to provide for a work-relief program, and for direct relief for our suffering people in the drought-stricken areas. At that time the bill received the united opposition of the Republican Party in the House. It received the opposition of the then President of the United States, who was a Republican. It received the opposition of the Republican-controlled Senate; and as a result of such opposition, legislation to provide for direct relief by the Federal Government and for a work-relief program was denied.

The past Congress appropriated hundreds of millions of dollars for direct relief by the Federal Government, necessary as a result of the inability of local government and private charities to cope with the situation. This has been done under the leadership of President Roosevelt, a program which was denied the people of this country under the leadership of President Hoover.

They talk about private business. I believe in the protection of private business, but private business has broken down as a result of the disturbance of our economic system. The law of supply and demand is not operating normally, or functioning in a way that will afford employment to the millions of Americans. We are confronted with an emergency situation where there are millions of Americans distressed, and there is but one agency left—the Federal Government—to which we can turn.

This agency was denied them 3 years ago. It has been given to them during the past 2 years.

Last fall I campaigned and said to the people of my district and my State, as many others did, that I voted for appropriations to relieve human suffering, and as long as the circumstances required it I would continue to vote for appropriations by the Federal Government to relieve the suffering people of America—North, East, South, and West; white, black, or yellow. They are all human beings.

We need a flexible bill. This is a bill aimed for relief purposes, and it should be broad. It should be flexible. It should not be bound by being earmarked the same as we would ordinary appropriations. The machinery of this bill is a proper way to accomplish the maximum result that we desire. It should be flexible, and during this emergency the powers, very properly, are temporarily vested in the one man whose constituency is the people of the entire country, in this case our distinguished and our courageous President, Franklin D. Roosevelt. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] to strike out the enacting clause.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to section 5.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THOMASON: Page 6, after the semicolon, in line 9, add: "and that all employees employed on any contracts under this act shall be citizens of the United States."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLCOTT: Page 6, line 11, after the word "purchase", strike out the words "or by the power of eminent domain."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. The President is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this joint resolution, and any willful violation of any such rule or regulation shall be punishable by fine of not to exceed $5,000.

Mr. BULWINKLE and Mr. WOOD rose.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have a preferential amendment at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, which is stated to be a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOOD: Page 6, commencing with the word "any" in line 23, strike out down through line 25, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Such rules and regulations shall provide that, (1) so far as practicable, no individual whose labor or services are paid for, directly or indirectly, out of funds appropriated by this resolution shall be permitted to work more than 30 hours in any one week; (2) in the employment of labor or the procuring of services paid for out of the funds appropriated by this resolution, preference shall be given, where they are qualified, to ex-service men with dependents."

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, is that a preferential amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is a preferential amendment in that it seeks to perfect the section as against the gentleman's amendment to strike out the entire section.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it deals with subjects that should be dealt with in connection with another section of the bill and is absolutely foreign to this section of the bill and therefore not germane.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be heard on the point of order.

It seems to me this is a limitation in that it states that the President is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this joint resolution. This is clearly a limitation upon any rules or regulations which the President may prescribe and must be germane to section 6, even though it could be offered at some other point in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. O'CONNOR). The Chair is ready to rule.

Section 6 pertains to rules and regulations to be prescribed by the President. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri provides as follows:

Such rules and regulations shall provide that (1) so far as practicable, no individual whose labor or services are paid for, directly or indirectly, out of funds appropriated by this resolution shall be permitted to work more than 30 hours in any one week,

And so forth.

This amendment might have been offered properly to section 1, but is not germane to section 6.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BURDICK: Amendment to section 6. After the last word of the section insert: "Provided, however, That the said power to prescribe rules and regulations shall not be delegated by the President."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is inconsistent with the provision already adopted in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot pass on inconsistencies. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Chairman, I am in a position where I do not like to have to vote against the bill as a whole, for if there is any place on God's earth where we need relief it is in the drought section of the country. But, Mr. Chairman, I agree with gentlemen on this side of the House. This bill is delegating too much power in the hands of one man, and I think it is sufficient when we give him the right to make rules and regulations without giving him the power to delegate that power to some other person or corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following preferential amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

Mr. KVALE. Reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman increase that? I have an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TABER. I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on section 6 and all amendments thereto close in 25 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 6, line 25, after the period, add the following: "Each such rule or regulation shall be printed in full in at least one newspaper of daily circulation published in each city of the United States of a population of more than $50,000, and shall be filed with the clerk of each United States district court, and no such rule or regulation shall take effect until 30 days after such publication and filing.

The United States district courts shall have jurisdiction in all cases of prosecutions under such rules and regulations in the same manner and subject to the same procedure as govern prosecutions under the criminal statutes of the United States, and the same right of appeal shall be granted from a conviction for violation of any such rule or regulation as is granted under existing law from a conviction for a violation of any other criminal statute of the United States.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered in all seriousness as a perfecting amendment. Under sections 6 there is nothing said about where a citizen may have his day in court or to what court he may appeal. No right of appeal is given whatsoever. My amendment follows very closely the amendment offered to the Securities Act, which was adopted by the last Congress. It seems to me that we must always give American citizens a day in court with the right of appeal, especially when the President is authorized by this section to arbitrarily prescribe all rules and regulations with the full force of criminal statutes. We must put our citizens on notice as to what rules and regulations are decreed. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] has given the legal aspects of this amendment a great deal of attention.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, it is to be hoped that when a motion is presented to strike this section out that it will be agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] yielded to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York cannot yield his own time.

Mr. HOLLISTER. But cannot the gentleman yield to me to answer a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman from New York yielded to me.

Mr. BACON. I still have the floor.

Mr. HOLLISTER. It is to be hoped, as I say, when motion to strike out section 6, which will be shortly presented, is offered, that the committee will strike out this abominable section. If not, it is certainly to be hoped that every member of the committee will be willing to put a provision in the bill that anyone who may be subject to the penalties of a rule or regulation which the President, in his discretion may promulgate, may at least have some way of finding out what the rules and regulations are. I think everyone should agree to an amendment that these rules and regulations shall be printed and filed in the District Court of the United States where prosecutions may be instituted under them. That is a protection which every citizen of this country should have. No man should be held accountable for the violation of rules and regulations of which he has not been apprised. He should have his day in court, which is guaranteed to him by Anglo-Saxon jurisprudence, and should have a right to be prosecuted only under orderly procedure. I cannot believe a single member of the committee would be unwilling to see an amendment of this kind attached to this bill.

Mr. BACON. The gentleman from Ohio is entirely correct. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I point out that over 10,000 pages of rules and regulations have been issued under the N. R. A., and that there is no place anywhere in the United States where they can be found. This fact was recently emphasized and adversely commented on by Mr. Justice Brandeis. The citizens of the United States have no knowledge of them, and if we are going to give the President the right to issue any rule or regulation with the effect of a criminal statute that he may see fit, there should be some place where they are published, so that citizens may have notice of them.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. To inform the gentleman that the Committee on the Judiciary is now considering a codification, a classification and publication of all Executive orders issued by all executive departments.

Mr. BACON. I am very glad to hear that; and that is all the more reason for having these rules and regulations published in an orderly fashion, all the more reason for putting the citizens on notice before they incur a penalty unwittingly, and all the more reason for giving them a day in court, with a right of appeal, to protect their rights under the Constitution.

Mr. CELLER. I might also suggest that the right of appeal is not cut off today because the violation of such a regulation would be as a violation of a misdemeanor, and you always have your appeal to the circuit court of appeals and the Supreme Court.

Mr. BACON. This same question arose when the Securities Act was before this House and a similar amendment was adopted giving this same right of appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from New York. I have great respect for the gentleman from New York and great sympathy for what he has suggested. We suffer too much from lack of knowledge of these Executive orders which have been issued. I say to the gentleman from New York it is not quite accurate to indicate that there are 10,000 orders of the N. R. A. There are 10,000 pages of orders; something less than 10,000 orders. For example, there are three volumes of Executive orders from the Veterans' Bureau. There are two husky volumes of Executive orders from the Post Office Department, and there are the Executive orders from the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, from the F. E. R. A., the R. F. C., and many others. The President has issued 1,423 Executive orders since his inauguration. It is difficult to find them. Sometimes these orders are issued in mimeograph and sometimes merely in the form of a telegram. Oftentimes they involve a criminal penalty.

I am all for striking out of any bill the right to prescribe a criminal penalty involving imprisonment for violation of any Executive order. It is time we stopped it, despite the fact that the Supreme Court has indicated that such action is legal and constitutional. The senior Senator from Idaho in the Senate yesterday said that the time had come when we must stop giving the right to executive officials to say that you or anybody in your constituency is guilty of a crime because he or she violated some Executive order.

I am happy to know that the punitive provision of imprisonment is to be taken out of section 6. That is splendid, and should satisfy the gentleman from New York. It satisfies me.

It is well to point out that the amendment would stall the relief machinery some 30 days, since no rule or regulation would become effective save after a lapse of 30 days. Ofttimes quicker action might be imperative. Delay of 30 days might be fatal.

Further, some, I should say many, sections contain no newspapers of the character mentioned in the amendment, hence those many sections would be deprived of publication in the manner prescribed.

I will say to the gentleman he goes too far and complicates the situation dreadfully if he would have us vote for his amendment. Our Judiciary Committee is now working on a bill to codify and publish in appropriate volumes all Executive orders ever issued up to date, and we will prescribe certain rules and regulations whereby the Attorney General and the Secretary of State, with the aid of the Librarian of Congress, shall publish and promulgate all Executive orders from all departments, from the White House down. A bill is pending in the Judiciary Committee; in fact, before the subcommittee of which I am chairman. We had a hearing upon it yesterday morning. This bill provides for fullest notice and publicity for all regulations as a condition precedent for their validity.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. BACON. What possible harm can it do to give the Government the right to prosecute for any violation of these rules and regulations in the United States courts, and what possible harm can it do to give the citizen the right to appeal to a higher United States court.

Mr. CELLER. But you have that right already. It would be needless, superfluous legislation. Why cumber up the statutes with useless provisions of this sort? If there is a violation of any of these regulations, it goes now into the United States district court, and there is an appeal to the circuit court of appeals and under certain conditions an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BACON. There is nothing said in this resolution as to what court shall have jurisdiction over these rules and regulations.

Mr. CELLER. But there are other statutes which prescribe what shall be done.

Mr. BACON. Let me ask one other question: What possible harm can there be to require that these rules and regulations shall be published in the newspapers so that citizens may have knowledge of them?

Mr. CELLER. No harm at all, save its needlessness. I agree with the gentleman there should be publicity. But we are working on the matter earnestly in our Judiciary Committee to cover this situation and all other similar situations.

Mr. BACON. Is the gentleman in favor of secret government?

Mr. CELLER. No; I am not. I am in favor of publication of these rules and regulations; but I say to the gentleman, wait, and we will cover the situation. It is well to note that the Department of Justice is cooperating with us on the matter of adequate promulgation and codification of all past, present, and future rules and regulations. Let us have uniformity. We get no uniformity in the publication if each bill we pass prescribes diverse and different methods of publicity each time.

Mr. MILLARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MILLARD. If a similar rule was put into the Securities Act, why not put it in this act?

Mr. CELLER. I say it is needless, in view of what we are going to do.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it not true that now there are over 10,000 orders, Executive and otherwise, having the force of law?

Mr. CELLER. There are more than that.

Mr. PERKINS. Is there anybody in the entire country who knows how many there are?

Mr. CELLER. I do not believe the gentleman was listening a moment ago when I made my statement. I pointed out that we are remedying that situation now.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. The committee has eliminated the imprisonment provision in this section. Can the gentleman tell me how a judgment or fine is going to be enforced?

Mr. CELLER. I am afraid the gentleman will have to ask some member of the committee that question. Perhaps those who appeared before the Appropriations Committee at the hearings covered that point. Ordinarily the violation is submitted to the court, the United States district court, and the violator is ordered by decree to pay the penalty.

Mr. PERKINS. It can be enforced by holding the man for contempt of court.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again read for the information of the committee.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, if I understand, it is simply to have what is proposed to be a penal law published so that people can know what it is. I ask that the amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON]?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McSWAIN and Mr. BACON) there were—ayes 130, noes 121.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed Mr. BACON and Mr. BUCHANAN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 151, noes 141.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. TABER: On page 6, line 23, after the word "resolution", strike out the comma, insert a period, and strike out the balance of the section and insert in lieu thereof "but there shall be no fine or imprisonment imposed for the violation thereof."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, this is the section by which they hope to force labor to work and to fine it if it does not work the number of hours that are required by the regulations. A vote against the amendment is a vote in favor of the enslavement and regimentation of labor. It is the crux of the bill. It is the object of the bill; and if we vote this amendment in, we can clean up that end of the situation.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BULWINKLE. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] were adopted, where would the Bacon amendment be? Is it still in?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. O'CONNOR). In the opinion of the Chair, the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] would eliminate the amendment just passed, which was offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON], as well as any other amendments following the word "resolution."

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Would not the adoption of this amendment render nugatory the Bacon amendment, inasmuch as no penalties are left in the section?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair interprets it, the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] would leave in the first three lines down to the word "resolution", in line 23, and insert the language "but there shall be no fine or imprisonment imposed for the violation thereof", which, by necessity, would eliminate the Bacon amendment.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McLEOD: Page 6, line 23, after the word "willful" insert "and malicious."

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer this as a perfecting amendment. First I want to show the difference between the words "willful" and "malicious."

As given by the dictionaries, "willful" is defined to mean "willingly disposed, or ready; also, desirous."

"Malicious" is the most fitting word or phraseology consistent with the severe penal section of this bill. "Malicious" means "indulging or exercising malice, ill will, or enmity."

The uniform United States Criminal Code of this country establishes a definite set of penalties for violations of felonies and misdemeanors—and my amendment merely makes the penalty contained in this bill consistent with our code. It makes the penal section of the bill conform to the common law and to statutory law. Even though the imprisonment feature of this section has been removed, I still say a violation of the section constitutes a felony, because the conspiracy statute of the United States Code reads, in short:

A conspiracy to violate the laws of the United States is a felony by reason of this section.

Violation of this provision of the joint resolution will be construed to be a felony; and if it be a felony, the least we can do in justice and equity is to include the word "malicious" so that innocent persons cannot be convicted of the violation of some unknown provision of regulation set up by a bureau head of whom we know nothing. Let us improve the relief features of this measure which are so sorely needed by the country today, at least as much as we are able or at least as much as we are permitted under such dominant dictation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McLEOD) there were—ayes 72, noes 159.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DITTER: On page 6, line 24, strike out after the word "exceed" "$5,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$50 after trial and conviction in a court of competent jurisdiction."

Mr. DITTER. Mr. Chairman, the adoption of this amendment will, I believe, further perfect the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON]. I believe we should not permit, through Executive rules and regulations, the conviction of any man; it should be only after proper trial. I believe this saving clause should be included. If it is surplusage it certainly in no way will be harmful to the section as it presently exists, so I ask your support for the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. How does the gentleman suppose that anyone could be tried and convicted and fined $5,000 unless he were tried, convicted, and fined in an orderly way? That is presumed. The courts would require that, without any of these amendments.

Mr. DITTER. In answer to the gentleman from Texas may I say that after we have gone to the lengths we have in the delegation of power to the Executive anything might happen under this sweeping resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that since I have been in Congress we have passed scores of criminal laws, but never did we provide for advertising them in the newspapers, nor did we ever provide that months of time should be wasted in useless and unnecessary delays before we gave relief.

Mr. DITTER. In answer to the gentleman from Texas I will concede that we have never passed any legislation of the character proposed in the pending joint resolution so far as providing for rules and regulations to be issued by the Executive.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, that has been done in scores of measures ever since I have been here.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DITTER. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman has reference to statutes passed by Congress. This bill has no reference to statutes passed by Congress but deals with regulations made by bureaus of which the individual violator in many instances has no possible means even of having information that there was such a regulation.

Mr. BLANTON. How about the provisions of the pure-food law and the Lever Agricultural Act passed during the war that both the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from New York supported?

Mr. DITTER. They were statutory.

Mr. BACON. I was in the Army of the United States during the war, and not in Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. I am talking about the gentleman from New York, Mr. TABER.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, for some time we have been authorizing heads of Government agencies to make rules and regulations and have made the violation of such rules and regulations punishable. One such case has reached the Supreme Court under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and the Secretary of Agriculture was upheld. That act authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to make rules and regulations, and a penalty was prescribed for the violation of such rules and regulations. The same thing is done in this joint resolution. The same thing was done in the National Recovery Act, which carried a penalty provision of $500 fine or 6 months in jail, or both. The same penalty was included in the Public Works Act. A somewhat similar provision was included in the Communications Act. In that act the penalty provision went so far as to prescribe $500 fine for each and every day of offense or violation of a regulation.

The Security and Exchange Act provided for a punishment of 2 years in the penitentiary or a fine of $10,000. We have been giving to these agencies power similar to that asked in this bill to be exercised by the President.

I will tell you why the President wants this power. I took it up with him, and I suggested that the penalty of 2 years was too severe. He readily agreed, but stated the reason for asking this was because in the administration of the Federal emergency relief there had been considerable abuse, and in an attempt to correct the situation they had no power to make violations an offense.

Do you want to vote for fraud upon the Government, or do you want to throw every safeguard and protection around the President in the administration of his affairs? He is not going to be cruel and unconscionable. Can you not trust him? The people of the United States have trusted him. Cannot this Congress trust the President?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that in every revenue act passed by Congress substantially the same authority that is given the President of the United States here is given to the collector of internal revenue?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Not only that, but every man prosecuted under any rule or regulation prescribed by the President or anyone else is prosecuted in the regular courts. They have the right of appeal to the district court of appeals and also the right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. There has never been any penalty imposed in any relief bill before.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONNERY: On page 6, line 23, after the comma, strike out the balance of line 23 and all of line 24 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, That the President or any governmental agency (including any corporation or any individual) to which or to whom may be delegated any powers under this joint resolution, shall not issue any rules and regulations which change existing law."

The CHAIRMAN. All time on this section has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BULWINKLE: On page 6, strike out lines 23, 24, 25, and in lieu thereof insert the following: "Joint resolution."

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as there is no time left in which to explain this amendment, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. A report of the obligations incurred under this appropriation shall be submitted before the 10th day of January to each of the next three regular sessions of Congress.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. UMSTEAD: Page 7, line 1, after the word "the", insert the words "expenditures and".

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, as section 7 now appears in the bill it requires the Executive to render a report of the obligations incurred to each Congress. I know of no reason why the Chief Executive should not report to the Congress the expenditures made under this act, and I do not understand how any supporter of the President or any supporter of the administration or any Member of this Congress could reasonably object to the insertion of the words offered in this amendment.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UMSTEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I should like to suggest to the gentleman that I have prepared and have on the desk an amendment that I should like to offer as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. UMSTEAD. The gentleman from Kentucky understands that I have no control over the offering of substitute amendments.

Mr. MAY. Perhaps the gentleman will accept my amendment. My amendment is as follows: Following the word "incurred" add the words "contracts and grants of money made." This requires him to disclose not only the obligations but compels him to tell us what contracts he has made and what he has done with the money expended, so that we may know what has been done with the money.

Mr. UMSTEAD. I think what the gentleman is talking about is a different matter.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. BULWINKLE: Page 7, strike out lines 1 to 4, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "SEC. 7. A report of the operations under this joint resolution shall be submitted to Congress before the 10th day of January in each of the next three regular sessions of Congress, which report shall include a statement of the expenditures made and obligations incurred, by classes and amounts."

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, this just broadens the scope of the amendment offered by my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD].

Mr. UMSTEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. UMSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I gladly accept the substitute amendment and ask unanimous consent to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD] is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. May I say further that there shall be included in the report a statement of expenditures and obligations incurred, and also there shall be a report of the classes and amounts. I think that the Congress should have the full information in these reports as to what is being done under this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I have nothing more to say, and I hope the Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I made this motion simply to afford me an opportunity to direct the attention of the Members, and especially the Members representing the great Mississippi River Basin, to the message of the President read to the House this morning, transmitting the reports of the National Resources Board and the Mississippi Valley Committee.

In my opinion this report of the Mississippi Valley Committee is epochal. The committee in its foreword to this great report says that planning for the control and use of water is planning for most of the basic functions of the national life.

Accompanying this report are recommendations of series of definite projects, the execution of which projects would be worth more to this country than all of the classifications of mere purposes which were properly cut out of the bill on motion of the Chairman of the Appropriations Committee this morning.

"Make no little plans. They have no magic to stir men's souls."

This quotation appropriately captions the report of the Mississippi Valley Committee. I hope it will be the rule of guidance in the expenditure of the great fund for public works provided in this bill.

The Mississippi Valley is the granary of the United States. It is the great drainage area of the United States. The Mississippi Basin embraces approximately one-half of the continental United States. It includes within its boundaries all or parts of 31 States. It extends from western Pennsylvania to eastern Idaho and from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico.

The committee was appointed by the Public Works Administration to investigate and report upon the water resources and systems of the Mississippi Basin, together with all the related problems of flood control, navigation, irrigation, soil erosion, forestation, and so forth; and to recommend a definite scheme of improvements.

The committee is composed of nine engineers and experts familiar with the subject matters to be considered. I will insert the roster of the committee at this point.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY COMMITTEE

Harlan H. Barrows, chairman department of geography, University of Chicago;
Herbert S. Crocker, consulting engineer, Denver, Colo.;
Glen E. Edgerton, lieutenant colonel, Corps of Engineers;
Henry S. Graves, dean School of Forestry, Yale University;
Edward M. Markham, major general, Chief of Engineers;
Charles H. Paul, consulting engineer, Dayton, Ohio;
Harlow S. Person, consulting economist, New York City;
Sherman M. Woodward, professor of hydraulics, State University of Iowa; and Morris L. Cooke, consulting engineer, Philadelphia, chairman.

As relieving the great work of this committee of any suggestion of sectionalism, I may, as a western Member, point out that only two of the nine members of the committee are from west of the Mississippi River and that the chairman of the committee is an eminent engineer from the city of Philadelphia. If any features of this report strongly support the claims which the West must make for a proper allotment from this great fund, and I think they do, it cannot be charged to any preponderance of western membership on the Mississippi Valley Committee. Quite the contrary.

But this report reflects much more than the study and labor of nine men. Other committees representing the various tributaries of the Mississippi presented before the Mississippi River Committee the results of their studies and labors, embodying exhaustive surveys of their respective sections, in the preparation of which they had the assistance of the most experienced men in every locality.

The report, therefore, of the Mississippi Valley Committee embodies the concrete results, the completed picture, of the labors of many hundreds of men, who were specially fitted to contribute their bit to the great structure which this report is. That structure is a chart and plan for the execution of the greatest, most beneficial, and most necessary activity in which the Government of the United States can engage, the conservation and the use of water.

So the committee in its foreword to the report, very properly says—and I quote the opening sentence:

Planning for the use and control of water is planning for most of the basic functions of the life of the Nation.

We need slum clearance, we need rural rehabilitation, we need good roads, we need forestation, and the prevention of soil erosion; we need all these things, but as the foundation for all of them, as the sine qua non of all of them, as the fundamental thing without which they are but as "painted ships upon a painted ocean", is the conservation and the proper use and control of the lifeblood of the earth, the waters of the earth.

I cannot undertake to deal with the whole scope of this report. To whatever official or agency may have the preparation of the public-works program and the allocation of the funds, I respectfully commend the report in its entirety, and I shall limit myself to that portion of it relating to the section which, in part, I represent, the Great Plains area.

I am heartily in favor of the great projects, stressing power, now under way, such as the Tennessee Valley Authority, Boulder Dam, the Grand Coulee, Fort Peck, and others. But I want to direct attention to that great alluvial section of the West, which is the breadbasket of the Nation, but the topography of which does not furnish natural sites for power development, or, where it does, only on a most limited and minor scale.

It is my view—and I have so expressed myself to those in authority—that in carrying out a national public-works program, the natural resources of each section, whatever they may be, should receive equal aid, and the same treatment as every other section. A great section of the country should not be penalized because it may be deficient in natural resources with which another section of the country is blessed. In other words, one locality should not be given hundreds of millions of dollars because nature endowed it with a power site, and another section be left to languish because of the lack of such endowment. If it has valuable resources capable of being aided and developed, and the development of which is of primary importance to the locality as well as materially contributing to the national economy and well-being, it should receive due recognition.

This brings me to that section of the report which deals with water in the Great Plains area. In that area water not only is life but irrigation water. To turn thumbs down on the conservation and the use of water by irrigation in the plains area is passing sentence of death on that area. I wish particularly to impress that thought on those Members living in other sections of the country which may safely depend upon an adequate water supply as it falls from the skies, and where water is often a drug on the market. They have their problems, for which this great report offers its proper solution.

The problem of the Plains area has always been with us, but it remained for the historic drought of 1934, which is not yet ended, and which was preceded for several years by increasing drought conditions, to bring clearly into the open the necessity of a water-conservation program if the West is to live and grow. The benefits of such a program in that section would exceed the sum of all other possible benefits which may be conferred by the Federal Government. Not only has the necessity for such a program been brought home to the West as never before but for the first time the vital need of such a program has been forced into the national picture.

This drought, like this depression, is without precedent. It embraces 24 of the 48 States, and those 24 States embrace two-thirds of the geographical area of the United States. Water comes in cycles. It is either a feast or a famine. There is either too much or too little. The skies open and the rains descend, washing away and destroying the top soil and wrecking everything along the streams, or the skies dry up and the country burns up. If we hope to save the country and its resources, we must store up and control these waters in time of excess for use in time of need. It can be done.

The President, in his great speech dedicating Fort Peck Dam on the upper Missouri last summer, struck the keynote of the great need of the West and hinted at the supply of that need, when he said the Fort Peck Dam was but the beginning of the realization of the dream and that it would not be fully realized until dams had been built on those western rivers which would store up every gallon of water now running idly and destructively to the sea.

That statement electrified the West. It raised a hope and met with a response such as could have been elicited by no other statement within the power of the President to make.

This was shortly followed by an equally heartening statement from the Secretary of the Interior as Public Works Administrator, that the administration would bring forth a genuine public-works program, greater in magnitude than any yet proposed, and mentioning water conservation as one of the objectives of that program.

I feel confident, I could not allow myself to feel otherwise, that when the program of projects authorized by this bill is completed, it will carry provisions for the further substantial realization of the dream of the West, vocalized with such vision by the President at Fort Peck Dam.

Now, to get down to cases. The improvement of the Arkansas River and its tributaries has a definite place in the report of the Mississippi Valley Committee. The Arkansas is one of the longest rivers in the United States. At times it is the greatest flood tributary of the Mississippi. It has been characterized by the Army engineers as a major factor, if not the major factor, to be controlled in the solution of the flood problem presented by the Mississippi River, which is a national problem. For example, in the great Mississippi flood of 1927, when that major stream of the United States was carrying its maximum capacity, the Arkansas River discharged directly across its channel the enormous volume of 200,000 cubic feet of water per second of time, building a dam of water across the Mississippi flood some 8 or 10 feet in height and backing up that depth of water for many miles; and when the dam broke, the historic devastation of the lower Mississippi Valley began. The plain lesson of that and prior experiences of the Mississippi Valley is the building of dams on its tributaries to store and hold back their contributions and make a beneficial use of them in the flood-producing areas on these upper streams.

Recognizing the Arkansas River as a permanent and growing menace to the Mississippi Valley, the Army engineers, by authority of Congress, some years ago made an exhaustive survey of the Arkansas River Basin, occupying some 4 years of time, at a cost of four or five million dollars. In this survey the Army Engineers embraced every feature of river improvement, navigation, flood control, irrigation, reclamation, soil erosion, forestation, and so forth. Many dam sites were indicated.

Early in 1933, and before the magnitude of the present drought was even surmised, a commission was organized by the seven States, portions of which are affected by the Arkansas River and which are now embraced in what is known as the "Arkansas River Basin." These States are Colorado, New Mexico, Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri, and Arkansas. This commission, composed of and assisted by able engineers, lawyers, economists, farmers, and water users, presented its claims and their program to the Mississippi Valley Committee.

This committee, in its report submitted to the Public Works Administrator on October 1, 1934, carries a section beginning at page 181 devoted to the southwest basins, consisting of the Red, Arkansas, White, and Ouachita Rivers. It recommended a definite program of projects on each of these streams. It divided these projects into class A and class B. Class A is made up of " projects which appear to be economically justified by the benefits to be derived from their construction." Class B is made up of " projects which lack immediate justification for construction, but which are of sufficient importance for inclusion in a comprehensive program and the need for which will apparently develop in the future." As giving weight to these recommendations, many projects submitted, known as " class C ", were rejected.

The cost of the projects recommended for the Arkansas River and its tributaries, the list of which I will attach to my remarks, approximates $70,000,000. I respectfully submit that in view of the vast territory involved and its primary need for this development, this would be a very reasonable sum to expend on the Arkansas River Basin.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DISNEY] has introduced a bill, H. R. 3622, for the establishment of an Arkansas Basin authority, carrying an appropriation of $75,000,000. Should such a measure be enacted, the authority will be charged with the execution of the necessary improvements which are the objectives of both the Arkansas Basin committee and the Mississippi Valley committee. If this admirable bill is not enacted, then the specific recommendations of the Arkansas Valley committee for the improvement of the Arkansas River and its tributaries should find a place in the allocations under this public-works bill. Our hopes are legitimately based on the findings and recommendations of the Mississippi Valley committee. It cannot be assumed that that important committee, created and empowered by the Public Works Administration, and the great work it has brought forth, are merely idle gestures. Complete assurance to the contrary should be found in the message of the President this morning. Referring to the transmitted reports, the President said:

> These documents constitute a remarkable foundation for what we hope will be a permanent policy of orderly development in every part of the United States. It is a large subject but it is a great and inspiring subject. May I commend to each and every one of you who constitute the Congress of the United States a careful reading of these reports.

And again:

> For the coming 18 months I have asked the Congress for $4,000,000,000 for public projects. A substantial portion of this sum will be used for objectives suggested in this report. As years pass the Government should plan to spend each year a reasonable and continuing sum in the development of this program. It is my hope, for example, that after the immediate crisis of unemployment begins to mend, we can afford to appropriate approximately $500,000,000 each year for this purpose.

The Fort Peck vision begins to take form. The pioneering work has been done. Many of the indicated projects could be begun without delay. They are in localities of excessive drought and excessive unemployment. The farmers as well as the workers are on Federal relief. Their needs of Federal aid will be as great in 1935 as in 1934. They must produce and market another crop before they can hope to become self-supporting. Let us begin. Let us build some permanent and useful monuments, worthy of the power, the prestige, and the wealth of this great Nation. Let us execute a plan, ready to hand, having the magic to stir men's souls.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDREWS of New York: Page 7, line 1, after the word "incurred", insert the words "to be audited by the Comptroller General of the United States."

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order as the section has been previously amended.

The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. This joint resolution may be cited as the "Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935."

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McFARLANE:

Page 7, line 6, after the quotation marks at the end of section 8, insert the following new sections:

"That the President shall put into effect the following amendment in making appropriations for relief purposes:

"SEC. 9. That title V of the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof three new sections, to read as follows:

"'PAYMENT OF CERTIFICATES BEFORE MATURITY

"'SEC. 509. (a)'"——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment. It is apparent from what has been read that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair believes that sufficient of the amendment has been read for the point of order to be made.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this joint resolution is stated as follows:

Making appropriations for relief purposes.

This amendment will authorize the President, out of the funds herein appropriated, to pay the balance due the men who kept that flag flying when the days were darkest in this country.

These men today are in need. They are suffering for want of the necessities of life, and there is not any group of men in the United States that needs this relief more than do the World War veterans, and this provides an expansion of currency to pay a recognized debt long past due. It would not cost the Government anything to pay this debt to the soldier under this amendment and would save the Government more than $1,500,000,000. It would equally and fairly redistribute buying power now so badly needed Nation-wide. The whole alphabet program is being administered to special groups and classes of people, such as the bankers, farmers, and unemployed. Why not pay this recognized debt now to the Nation's defenders who are so badly in need?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. McFARLANE. I think, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman and his committee had not come in and asked for this gag rule under which this bill is being considered we could have considered this the most important bill since this administration took charge in the orderly and parliamentary way and we could have made this amendment germane to the first section of the bill, and there could not have been any such question raised and this House would have voted overwhelmingly for this amendment, and the gentleman knows it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. McFARLANE. I think the amendment is in order, Mr. Chairman, for the further reason that it provides ways and means of caring for more than 3,500,000 ex-service men who, together with their families, constitute about 15,000,000 people now in dire need of help. This amendment provides the necessary mechanics for the payment of this Government debt and fully sets out the provisions and limitations under which it shall be paid. It is a relief measure that can be effected without increasing the tax burdens, and it can be paid without a bond issue, as will be required for section 1 of this resolution. It will not increase our national debt and will not unbalance the Budget. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his point of order and allow this amendment to be voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas is not germane to section 8, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I have a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MAAS moves that the Committee rise and report the resolution back to the House with the recommendation that the resolving clause be stricken out.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that has already been voted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment has been adopted since the striking out of the enacting clause was voted upon. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, this measure, labeled a relief measure, is not a relief measure at all. What relief is involved in it is merely a thin sugar-coating. It is a measure that strikes at the very foundation of the form of our Government. It seeks to change the American Government from a three-branch government to a two-branch government. If that can be done so easily it will not be very long before it will be reduced to one branch. This bill gives powers to another branch of the Government which in many cases the Congress has not itself. It provides not only for a delegation but for redelegation of powers which, under the Constitution, should be exercised only by the people's representatives in Congress. These are not our personal rights we are asked to surrender, but are sacred rights of those whom we represent, and for whom we merely exercise such powers. We have no right to give these powers away. Why are we asked to appropriate for a 2-year period? We will be in session next year. There is no necessity for this long-time appropriation. If the emergency is so serious that such an extraordinary grant of power is necessary, it is sufficiently urgent to keep Congress in session during this period.

Why, the powers under this bill will permit the socialization of business and of labor. It will permit the Government to go into every branch of industry, and in the employment of men. All of the new deal policies of labor protection can be swept away because there is no collective bargaining for those who are employed by the Government. Under powers granted by this bill civil service can be abolished, even the Civil Service Bureau. It can throw the whole Government employment open to further raids by the spoils system. We are the chosen representatives of the people. If we are not capable of doing the job we ought to be at home. We should openly submit a constitutional amendment to abolish Congress and not attempt that result by indirection.

Neither business nor labor wants this measure.

Unemployment today is due to a lack of confidence by business in the future. Give business a definite program, give business the assurance of what the regulations are going to be for the next 2 years, and you will see business revive and absorb unemployment. If you pass this bill, no business man will know from day to day what the regulations governing his business are. He will not know from day to day what the situation will be for the next day. More confusion will result, with consequent more unemployment.

I yield to no man in this or any other administration in my willingness to provide relief. I do not object to the amount of this bill. In fact, I do not believe the eight-hundred-odd millions of dollars will be adequate for relief needs. Federal relief is to stop, according to the President's program, on July 1 of this year. The $800,000,000 in the bill is for relief until then. The $4,000,000,000 is for a works program. I do not object to that amount if we know what it is to be spent for. Nothing has been presented to us to show what the actual needs will be. Nothing is before us to show upon what this $4,000,000,000 estimate is based. I will vote for four billion or eight billion if necessary, but I want to know what it is to be used for and how it is to be used and who is to direct its spending.

The people are entitled to this information. After all, it is their Government and their money. The last election may have been a mandate to support the President in a recovery program, but it was not a mandate for the Congress to abdicate and turn the whole Government over to any one individual, whether he be the President or some agent of the President.

I do not believe in logrolling appropriations. I do not oppose this bill because it does not specify each detailed project, but because it does not even present a broad program upon which we can judge the needs of the appropriation.

It presents no program at all. Why cannot a program, even a very general program be drafted, and submitted to Congress for consideration? Congress is going to be in session for some months. If need be it can stay in session continuously. It is unprecedented to ask for this kind of an appropriation over a 2-year period. Why all the rush act right now and at the beginning of the session? If there is a program as the foundation for this gigantic request, why not submit it to Congress where it belongs? If there is such a program, is the administration afraid to submit it to the representatives of the people? Is there something to conceal in this proposed program? Or has the administration no program for the expenditure of this money? Is it just guess work, this request for $4,000,000,000, to be used on top of $5,700,000,000 still available from previous expenditures but not yet spent?

If there is no plan to spend this money yet formed, why appropriate it now? Why not formulate some sort of plans, and ask for the money when your plans are worked out? You may find that this request is way short of that needed.

Either the administration has a plan and refuses to let the people through their Representatives in Congress know what it is, or you have no plan and are just guessing at the whole thing.

In either event this is not a very intelligent way for us to legislate.

If the American people are not intelligent enough for self-government, let us openly tell them that and honestly change our form of government. But let us not just try to kid them along. It is cruel to step by step deprive them of their rights to self-government, to force them to sell their birthright for a mess of pottage. It is dishonest to take advantage of their sore distress to coerce them into selling their liberty for a promise of temporary security. History demonstrates that the temporary surrender of sovereign rights of the people during an emergency are never returned peacefully, even when the emergency passes.

This bill is an outright surrender of the people's sovereignty. Is the memory of what happened throughout Europe so recently already forgotten?

The abolition of the Reichstag, as an example, in Germany was started by just such a bill in that body. After the passage of that measure surrendering much of the power of their legislative body, new measures were rapidly forced through until finally the members were high-pressured into voting themselves out of existence until 1937. Do any of you really expect to see a return of parliamentary government in Germany in 1937?

Of course you don't. We are going the same way here. Congress was asked in the last two sessions to delegate exceptional powers, temporarily, to the Executive. Those powers are to expire this coming summer. As their expiration approaches the bureaucracy thus created seeks to perpetuate itself. Fearful of an outright request for their continuance they devise a measure, under the sentimental plea of relief, to permit their extension two more years. Do you think they will stop then? Do you think they will ever voluntarily surrender their power back to the people?

This measure is proof that they will not. This thing must be stopped. Congress cannot continue to assume the responsibility for legislative government unless it retains the authority to govern.

We are told that all of this extraordinary power that we are asked to transfer to the Executive will be wisely administered by him. We are assured that he will not abuse these great grants of power. But what assurance have we of this? True, he may be a benevolent dictator, but we have no knowledge that Franklin Roosevelt will be administering these powers throughout the 2 years ahead of us. No man living can know that. Not one of us can guarantee that he will be spared even until tomorrow morning. Should tragedy visit the White House, what about those who might follow?

This is dangerous business, this delegating legislative functions to the executive department of the Government. No one man could personally wield such great powers. This bill permits, and circumstances compel him to delegate much of it. What about Congress turning over its great powers to be administered by men who are not elected by the people, who have no constituency to whom they are responsible?

We are going to turn over the power to people who are appointed without even the necessity of being submitted to the United States Senate for examination as to their qualifications.

Certainly the framers of our Government never intended any such thing.

This is government by bureaucracy in its worst form, as these administrators will have the power to make regulations with effect of law, to which the citizens will be subjected. The exercise of these great powers by the Executive are not necessary to and have no relation to administering relief. There is some other explanation for their demand at this time. Relief is the excuse, but transferring power is the purpose. This is not government. This is dictatorship.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion. We have virtually completed here in this body the consideration of this great part of a great President's recovery program. It is not amazing, Mr. Chairman, that we wind up its consideration just as we began, by having every possible obstacle thrown in the way of its consideration and passage by gentlemen from that side of the aisle. We have heard nothing from beginning to end but denunciation and criticism. In one thoughtless moment the House adopted an amendment which I believe it will shortly rescind, which would to a great extent throttle this great program.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I have not the time. That amendment would require every rule and every regulation promulgated by the President in this relief program to be posted and published for 30 days and sent to the office of the clerk of every United States district court, before it could become operative. Such a thing is so utterly ridiculous and thoughtless that I am sure the House will rescind the action of the committee.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I have not the time to yield. I appeal to my colleagues on this side of the aisle. The consideration of this measure has taken on largely a political aspect. It ought not to have done so. If this motion should prevail there would be no relief bill, there would be neither work nor relief, but if the bill should pass as your leadership asks, and as the White House asks that it should, then we shall have accomplished a great step in the legislative accomplishments of this Congress. I feel when you come to a roll call in the House that you will support this legislation and pass the bill as the administration asks for it, and without the Bacon amendment.

What does it do? It goes out to the country that we intend to take the three and a half million people, able-bodied American citizens, who are now getting not wages of mechanics in their various communities, not the wages of carpenters and plumbers, but men who are on the relief rolls getting an average of less than $20 a month—take them off the humiliating relief roll and put them on an honorable roll—of men who work for their living, and pay them on an average of $50 a month. I submit to you that that is American, that that is progressive, and in accordance with what the people of America want done. I have in my community, and you have in yours, splendid, fine, able-bodied men who will gladly welcome an opportunity to get off that humiliating relief roll and onto the pay roll of this Government at some sort of a living wage.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUM. I have not the time.

Mr. BLANTON. For just one question.

Mr. WOODRUM. I have already refused to yield to other gentlemen, and I cannot yield. I appeal to you gentlemen over here on the Democratic side, because I cannot look across the dividing aisle and ask for any help there, nor can I expect it. Members on that side of the aisle have voted solidly today. Did you notice it? They say there is no politics in this measure; yet every time there was a vote they stood up solidly and unitedly, and voted against the relief measure and against the program of Franklin D. Roosevelt. I appeal to you gentlemen, when the time comes to vote, to solidly go down the line with your leader in the White House whom we are supposed to follow and whom I believe every man here wants to follow. [Applause on Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Committee will automatically rise.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. O'CONNOR, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration House Joint Resolution 117, and, pursuant to House Resolution 65, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded upon any amendment?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on what is known as the "Bacon amendment" to section 6 on page 6 of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Bacon amendment.

The Clerk again reported the Bacon amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON].

The question was taken——

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 278, not voting 25, as follows:

General pairs:

Mr. McDuffie with Mr. White.
Mr. Gambrill with Mr. Hennings.
Mr. Montague with Mr. Cannon of Wisconsin.
Mr. Burch with Mr. Dunn of Mississippi.
Mr. DeRouen with Mr. Brown of Michigan.

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Mr. Speaker, I inadvertently answered when my name was called. I change my vote from "no" to "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. TABER. I am.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TABER moves that House Joint Resolution 117 be recommitted to the Appropriations Committee with directions to report the same back immediately with the following amendments:

First. Strike out sections 4, 5, and 6.

Second. Provided, No. 1, that no part of the appropriations made by this act shall be expended for any project nor shall any project be undertaken under this act which will unwarrantably place the Government into competition with private business and industry, and as far as feasible this work shall be done by private contracts;

No. 2. That the expenditures of funds for work projects under this act, so far as may be reasonably possible, shall be apportioned among the several States in the proportion that the number of unemployed in each State bears to the total number of unemployed in the whole United States;

No. 3. That on all work projects located wholly within a State, preference shall be given in employment to the unemployed of the State where the work is to be performed, with as equal distribution as possible to all parts of the State, provided that the usual qualifications necessary may be used in selecting this labor;

No. 4. That no person desiring work on these relief projects shall be subjected to any political test or qualification;

No. 5. That as far as possible in administering direct relief it shall be done through the State and local agencies; and

No. 6. That all unobligated balances of funds, appropriated under this act, shall, on June 30, 1936, be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 100, nays 303, not voting 28, as follows:

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 117

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, this measure has come down to us from the other end of the Avenue with a mandate from the Executive to the legislative branch of this Government that it shall be enacted into law without an opportunity for hearings on the measure before the committee or for adequate debate or time for consideration. It comes to us under the name of a relief measure—a subtle camouflage of its real intent and purpose, for it not only undertakes to impose on the taxpayers of this country a burden ever increasing in magnitude, to be borne by them and by generations yet unborn, but undertakes to and will, if enacted, further humiliate Congress by requiring it to abrogate its constitutional rights and prerogatives to say what relief shall be granted, to whom it shall be given, and how it shall be distributed.

Not only that, Mr. Speaker, the wolf that hides in sheep's clothing is found in the usurpation of power, proposed to be made by the executive branch of this Government, such as will strip Congress of all its rights and powers in such case made and provided for under the Constitution, and leaves us as individuals and as a body open to and, in my opinion, a proper subject of ridicule and contempt if we subserviently submit thereto.

The ends sought, were they what the title of the bill would have you believe them to be, do not justify the means that are employed in an attempt to obtain them. There is no occasion for, nor justification for, an attempt to fool Congress or the people. There is no necessity for such haste and no exigency in the situation other than the political necessity involved in the strategy to attempt to drive this bill through Congress before the Members of the body are aroused to an appreciation of what it in fact attempts to do.

There is no defense for this attempt to camouflage the real issues involved by labeling this atrocious attack upon fundamental principles of government as a relief measure, when in fact it strikes a deadly blow at the very root of our American system of government, and by its specific terms and very language undertakes to, and does thereby, deprive the people of the United States of essential liberties guaranteed to them by the Constitution.

No political expediency can justify the support of this measure or the stultification of one's self when so vital a principle is involved or at stake.

As a representative of the people, chosen to represent them, I demand to know and to be informed as to what use is proposed to be made of this tremendously staggering sum, and by whom it is to be expended. Everybody knows the President cannot personally administer or supervise its spending. I will not vote to abrogate to anyone the power to expend such a large sum of money until I know how and when and where and by whom it is to be expended, or to whom the handling of the sum so large as to be in figures incomprehensible is to be delegated.

It is time that Congress asserted its right to have something to say about where the money is to go. When I am asked, "For what was that enormous sum of almost $5,000,000,000 for which you voted to be spent?" I propose to be able to answer, or I shall not vote for the measure. Therefore, because I cannot know, since they refuse to tell me what the plan is—and I am advised and am sure there is no plan—and until I, as a representative of the people, am told how the money is to be used, and why it is $4,880,000,000 that is needed, instead of a lesser or a greater sum, I shall not vote for the bill. I propose to know whether the money is to be expended for works or for relief; and if so, how much for either or for both. I do not propose to give to the President or anybody else the right to continue the program of wasteful extravagance or to put the Government into business in competition with that of individuals.

If the Members of Congress are to know nothing but what is important enough to be put into a public message, and indifferent enough to be made known to all the world; if the Executive is to keep all other information to himself and the House is to plunge on in the dark, it becomes—a government of chance and not of design.

The suggested continuation of the policy of the administration to spend itself into prosperity by the reckless scattering of the money of the taxpayers in the support and for the advancement of all kinds of economic experiments and theories is one thing, bad as it is.

I stand ready to vote for such appropriation for the relief of destitution and unemployment and suffering as I may be shown is necessary, but I do not propose blindly to vote for any measure for relief, so called, which in my judgment will not only increase the necessity for further relief, multiply the number of unemployed, and add a still further burden of suffering to the already stooping shoulders of the taxpayer of this country.

Of the various forms of relief, governmental relief is the most dangerous and debilitating. It becomes at once a right, and those to whom it is given devote themselves to extending the right. * * * People are devoting time and ingenuity to ways of getting without effort the things they obviously ought to have, and are correspondingly withdrawing their efforts to devise ways of getting them by working for them. The benefits of an unearned increment rapidly become vested and sacred rights; our present desperate case is leading us to that possibility on a Nation-wide scale, and so long as political pressure is permitted to succeed as a substitute for individual effort and ingenuity the injury to self-reliance will continue.

* * * * *

Obviously we must prevent destitution. I do not question that it has been necessary for the Federal Government to supplement local resources to meet this burden, but I point out that the spirit in which this governmental intervention is received is one evidence among many others, that we are coming more and more to regard the State as the carrier of all individual, group, and class burdens. * * * I am concerned because as individuals we are apparently becoming less self-reliant—willing to surrender the adventure of striving; willing to become content with a sort of secure equality in a State which does all our planning and thinking and providing for us.

So said the Honorable Newton D. Baker in a recent address on The International Mobilization for Human Needs. It is time for us to stop, and look, and listen.

Moreover, the contemplation of what this measure purports and the policies it advocates has driven some of us to read once more those textbooks on history, long untouched, and to observe again how Rome, for example, even in its balmy and most flourishing state, suddenly lost its liberty. We are constrained to observe that the nail holes in the parts of the ladder which rises from the past to the present are identical and absolutely fit. The story of Rome and of ourselves as of these days runs parallel. It was then, as now, a delegation of power which was involved. Resisting to the last, the Roman Senate finally subserviently surrendered to the Decemvirs its lawmaking power, together with the extraordinary right to issue rules and regulations under and by virtue of which the laws enacted by the Decemvirs might and should be enforced. The Decemvirs became, in fact, the sole administrators of the Republic. Rome awoke at last to find herself enslaved by as cruel a tyrant as that of Tarquin. Not until Tarquin trampled on the liberty of the state did it realize how great the power that had been usurped. Not until the Decemvirs had exercised every act of oppression did the people of Rome awake to a realizing sense of the magnitude of the extraordinary power and authority that had been granted and of the priceless nature of the liberties that they had lost.

Congress in enacting this law subserviently surrenders and abrogates its constitutional prerogatives and unites in the Executive both legislative and executive powers, "under which delegation of power and prerogatives", as history incontrovertibly proves and as Montesquieu has said, "there can be no liberty." The danger of today, as has been so well said, is not the loss of liberty by use of force. It lies, rather, in the supine surrender of the rights of free men to a seductive subversive program, of paternalism which is gradually changing the form of our Government from a representative democracy to a bureaucratic state, mildly despotic in action, dangerously experimental in conception; a program in which human rights and property rights cease to rest on the firm foundation of established law, and come to depend upon the whims of a temporary majority.

No free government can remain verile if it ignores or attempts to forget the traditions of its history. It is not ignorance to heed the lessons history is ever willing to teach us, but it is just that to ignore them. As Woodrow Wilson so well said:

> Every nation must constantly keep in touch with its past; it cannot run toward its ends around sharp corners.

Moreover, to those who hurl the words "reactionary" and "obstructionist" as an epithet, I say to you that no student who makes even a cursory study of history can wisely censure those who protest against state paternalism. The present administration attempts both to ignore the traditions of our Government's history, and to become essentially paternalistic.

The Nation, which the Civil War was fought to preserve, will have ceased to be when the legislative powers are surrendered to executives who are but too willing to accept them; when the judiciary strives to find reasons for upholding laws enacted at the behest of noisy minorities; when the plain language of Federal and State Constitutions is given new and strange meanings in order to meet assumed emergencies; when debasement of the currency is adopted as a sound financial policy; when the sovereignty of the individual States is disregarded and local self-government becomes an obsolete phrase; when individual initiative is discouraged; the lessons of experience cast aside and personal liberty, in great measure, becomes a thing of the past; when men are denied to buy and sell the products of their labor in the open market place; to fix the price of goods in which they deal by bargain with their fellows; when the farmer is forbidden to sow and reap on the land he owns according to his own best judgment; when every detail of business life of the citizen is ordered by officials not of his own choosing; when written agreements and contracts cease to have a binding force even upon government itself. All these things are involved in, will be the ultimate end and result of, and are a part of the policy and program which this measure undertakes to make possible.

Under the terms of sections 1 and 2 of this act Congress, in effect, abrogates and surrenders its prerogatives and, shirking its responsibility to the people, delegates to the President the power and authority to say how $5,000,000,000, or thereabouts, may be spent by him, or by those to whom he may in turn delegate the power and authority so to do.

Section 3 permits the appointment of any number of employees and provides for the utter and complete disregarding of all civil-service regulations.

Section 4 makes possible the creation and continuation of an unconscionable number of old and new Federal bureaus and agencies, the abolishment and consolidation of the same, the arbitrary change of personnel, the transfer of the property and functions of any and all of the agencies so created under this delegation of power so supinely granted. It permits the extension of the life of those agencies which have demonstrated their inefficiency and are so absolutely un-American in conception.

Then, under the provisions of the fifth section, the President of the United States is given the power to set himself up in the small-loan business, with authority to make loans and grants and contracts with the right of eminent domain, under which not only real but personal property may be taken to accomplish the end sought.

For violation of any of the rules and regulations which may be promulgated by him or by those to whom he may delegate the authority so to do the sixth section provides the power of imposing fines and imprisonment in disregard of established methods of court procedure and of the rights of the people guaranteed to them under the Constitution.

How can any of us overlook or not be impressed by the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in respect to the so-called "hot oil" cases. What does the Court mean when it says:

> So far as this section is concerned, it gives to the President an unlimited authority to determine the policy and to lay down the prohibition, or not to lay it down, as he may see fit. And disobedience to his order is made a crime punishable by fine and imprisonment. * * *
>
> The Congress left the matter to the President without standard or rule, to be dealt with as he pleased. * * *
> If section 9 (c) were held valid, it would be idle to pretend that anything would be left of limitations upon the power of the Congress to delegate its lawmaking function. The reasoning of the many decisions we have reviewed would be made vacuous and their distinctions nugatory. Instead of performing its lawmaking function, the Congress could at will and as to such subjects as it chooses transfer that function to the President or other officer or to administrative body. The question is not of the intrinsic importance of the particular statute before us, but of the constitutional processes of legislation which are an essential part of our system of government.

A careful reading of the decision from which these excerpts are made compels me to arrive at only one conclusion and strengthens my determination to vote against this measure.

I will go as far as any man in this body, whatever his party affiliation may be, in an endeavor to approach and to consider recommended changes in governmental policy with an open mind and without petty partisan prejudices. But when a basic and underlying principle of government is so atrociously attacked as it is in this measure, involving as it does the fundamental issue of contemplated destruction of individual freedom, the usurpation of nondelegable powers and authority of Congress by the executive branch, the eventual demolition of the Republic itself—then there is no such word as "compromise" in my vocabulary, and I propose unreservedly and unremittingly to oppose the enactment of this legislation.

What Daniel Webster said over a hundred years ago comes down to us today as a challenge wisely prophetic and as forcefully applicable to our day and time and the matters and things which confront us as for the day and age in which it was delivered. Hear him when he says:

> Other misfortunes may be borne or their effects overcome. If disastrous war should sweep our commerce from the ocean, another generation may renew it; if it exhaust our Treasury, future industry may replenish it; if it desolate and lay waste our fields, still, under a new cultivation, they will grow green again and ripen to future harvests. It were but a trifle even if the walls of yonder Capitol were to crumble, if its lofty pillars should fall, and its gorgeous decorations be all covered by the dust of the valley. All these might be rebuilt. But who shall reconstruct the fabric of demolished government? Who shall rear again the well-proportioned columns of constitutional liberty? Who shall frame together the skillful architecture which unites national sovereignty with State rights, individual security, and public prosperity? No; if these columns fall, they will be raised not again. Like the Colosseum and the Parthenon, they will be destined to a mournful, a melancholy, immortality. Bitterer tears, however, will flow over them than were ever shed over the monuments of Roman or Grecian art; for they will be the remnants of a more glorious edifice than Greece or Rome ever saw, the edifice of constitutional American liberty.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, in his Budget message to the Congress on January 7, 1935, the President, among other things, said: "I recommend that $4,000,000,000 be appropriated by the Congress in one sum, subject to allocation by the Executive, principally for giving work to those unemployed on the relief rolls."

On January 21, 1935, House Joint Resolution 117 was introduced by Congressman BUCHANAN, of Texas, Chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations. The joint resolution was referred to as one making appropriations for relief purposes, and contained in it the provision that if and when enacted, it may be cited as the "Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935." This House joint resolution is the measure which during the last few days has claimed the attention of the country by reason of the fact that it undertakes to appropriate $4,000,000,000 in one sum for emergency relief purposes.

The measure has been and is important, not only because of the magnitude of the appropriation that it carries but also because it has again projected into the scene the much mooted question of the delegation of legislative power—in other words, the collective powers of Congress—to the Chief Executive. The resolution in its original form provides that the sum of $4,000,000,000 shall become immediately available and shall remain available until June 30, 1937. In addition to the direct appropriation of the principal sum, the resolution makes available from unobligated balances of previous appropriations and funds, a total of $880,000,000. Therefore, for all practical purposes this measure when presented to the House, was a measure authorizing the expenditure of $4,880,000,000. The preamble of the resolution stated that the purpose of the appropriation was to protect and promote the general welfare—(1) to provide relief from the hardships attributable to wide-spread unemployment and conditions resulting therefrom; (2) to relieve economic maladjustments; (3) to alleviate distress; and/or (4) to improve living and working conditions. The statement of policy went on further to say that the money appropriated was to be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President in such manner and for such purposes, and/or such projects, including but not limited to slum clearance, rural housing, rural electrification, reforestation, soil erosion, land reclamation, improvement of existing road systems and construction of national highways; grade-crossing elimination; Civilian Conservation Corps work; and other useful Federal or non-Federal work. Further than indicated by these notations, no specific program of projects to which funds may be allotted is established, at least by the action of the Congress, and no definite amounts out of the $4,880,000,000 are set aside for any specific purpose.

A subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee of the House, in charge of deficiency appropriations, conducted a hearing on this measure on Monday, January 21, and three witnesses appeared before this subcommittee. They were the Secretary of the Treasury, the Acting Director of the Bureau of the Budget, and the Director of the Procurement Division in the Treasury Department. The entire hearing has been reproduced in approximately 45 pages of printing on ordinary book-size paper.

Under date of Wednesday, January 23, the resolution was reported to the House by the Committee on Appropriations, and in its report the committee said:

> The purpose of the joint resolution is to give effect to the recommendations of the President of the United States with respect to providing work relief for the unemployed as a substitute for the dole plan.

Prior to the time that the measure could then be taken up for consideration on the floor of the House a rule had to be obtained which would establish the parliamentary limitations under which the consideration of the measure would proceed. Let it be said here that a rule is a resolution proposed by the House Committee on Rules which fixes and limits the time during which general debate on the measure will proceed, which provides for the division of time on the two sides of the House, and which either makes all amendments from the floor out of order or specifically provides that certain amendments or all amendments will be in order, as the case may be. Such a rule is the tool—and the House Committee on Rules is the creator of the tool—which fashions the groove through which legislation must pass.

The proposed rule which the Committee on Rules submitted to the House on the 22d of January provided that general debate on the resolution should continue not to exceed 3 hours, should be equally divided between the majority and the minority, and that no amendments should be in order except such amendments as were offered by direction of the Committee on Appropriations. That proposed rule forthwith brought a storm of protest, not only from Republicans but likewise from a number of Democrats.

The protest came from Members who independently felt or who had committed themselves in campaign pledges to the proposition that any emergency-works appropriation should be broken down and earmarked by legislative action, so that they would procure assurance that at least certain amounts would be allocated to their respective districts, and then, too, there was the idea heretofore mentioned, which has been greatly accentuated by the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the so-called "hot oil" cases, to wit, that Congress had already gone far beyond the safety zone in delegating its legislative power and was now in danger of going still farther. Before there was further consideration of the proposed rule on the floor of the House the Democrats met in caucus and the general action of the caucus was to bind at least a majority of the Democrats—a sufficient majority to constitute a majority of the House—to the general proposition set out in the rule, but some 30 or 40 Democrats gave notice that they would not be bound by the caucus, and another 8 or 10 not in attendance at the caucus explained that they could not subscribe to the conditions of the proposed rule.

On the day following, which was Wednesday, January 23, the rule was taken up on the floor and, at the outset, the Chairman of the Rules Committee proposed an amendment to the original rule which provided that while no amendments to sections 1, 2, and 3 of the House joint resolution should be in order, except such amendments as were offered by the direction of the Committee on Appropriations, that sections 4, 5, and 6 would be subject to amendment from the floor. Of course, as the Chairman of the Rules Committee conceded, the meat of the resolution was in sections 1, 2, and 3, and as the minority leader pointed out, amendments were to be permitted with respect to the trimmings rather than affecting the heart of the matter. In other words, such amendments as were to be permitted were amendments with respect to certain administrative details and were not amendments with respect to the amount carried in the appropriation, or which further defined how the money should be expended. That was still reserved to Executive decision and discretion.

The rule, then, with this single amendment was, following approximately an hour's discussion, adopted by a vote of 250 to 146. Thereupon followed the general debate upon House Joint Resolution 117. That proceeded for the balance of the afternoon January 23 and on through the afternoon of January 24, until shortly following 6 o'clock, when the final vote on the resolution was taken. Certain committee amendments to sections 1, 2, and 3 of the resolution were offered and accepted. They, however, altered the resolution only in slight matters of form, rather than going substantially into its substance. The debate was spirited and sincere, and amendments were offered which, in the opinions of their sponsors, were necessary to properly safeguard the appropriation or to preserve the independence of congressional action. Those amendments, however, raised their heads merely to be bowled over.

During the course of the debate a supplemental message was received from the White House which acted as a tonic to the solidity of the Democratic ranks, with the net result that just before 7 o'clock, the House having been in session 8 continuous hours, the vote on the resolution was recorded as 328 for and 78 against. During the course of the debate in the afternoon I received a telegram from the Governor of Nebraska, in which he asked me to undertake to see to it that a definite sum of money was set aside for highway projects. He pointed out that State highway departments know definitely what projects can be accomplished in the immediate future and have the organizations necessary to facilitate their construction. The eventual action on the measure then before the House was at that time so obvious that I could only reply to the Governor by telegram that in view of the parliamentary rule under which the measure was being considered, coupled with the attitude of the majority toward any amendments which might be proposed within the restricted latitude for amendments, any practical prospect that the House would amend the bill to set aside any definite amount for any purpose was precluded.

By this action yesterday the House has contributed to the eventual certainty that this gigantic sum for relief purposes will be provided. By this same action, however, the House has not made clear just how and in what respects the program is to be effectuated. The President has said that he desired the appropriation to be in one sum, wholly without earmarking, for the reason that that would facilitate orderly breaking down of the appropriation, and for that reason would enable him to put something in excess of 3,000,000 men to work within a 30-day period. It is only fair to the Membership of the House to say that, while opposition to the resolution at times and in places was rather violent, there was not any serious opinion that disputed the advisability of making the appropriation, even in that huge amount, for emergency relief purposes. The reasons that Members found it difficult to go along at many points were traceable mainly, if not solely, to the proposed method of handling the unprecedented relief fund.

For my own part I supported the proposed amendments, which would have curbed extreme delegation of legislative power and which would have written some program for the making of these expenditures; but when those efforts failed and we had the alternative simply of voting for or against the resolution, I voted for it. I voted for it because there was no other bill to vote for. I voted for it because I realized that there are 3,500,000 men and women who need jobs. I voted for it because I believe we must give unemployed men back their self-respect. I do not, however, like the idea of Congress so completely abdicating its responsibility and surrendering that responsibility to the Executive arm of the Government.

It is not altogether without reason to say that the rumblings already heard in the House against this surrender of legislative power are exceedingly mild, when compared to what is likely to issue from the Senate; and even before the House had completed its action yesterday, certain Senators had touched off very violent blasts. Insofar as the House was permitted to speak, it has spoken. What will the Senate say?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, section 1 of article I of the Constitution of the United States provides—

> All legislative powers shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and a House of Representatives.

Wisely the framers of the Republic directed that only those who should be elected by the people to the Congress should make the laws by which the people should be bound. They also wisely provided by the Constitution that all measures providing for the appropriation of money or the raising of revenue should originate in the House of Representatives. This branch of Congress is the nearest to the people and most directly responsible to them. However, a new mode of procedure has been adopted by which Congress has knowingly delegated its constitutional powers to the executive branch of the Government. The recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the "hot oil" case was a rebuke to Congress in its attempt to delegate its legislative power to the executive branch of the Nation.

The President and the executive departments of this Government have, since March 4, 1933, issued six times as many orders, rules, regulations, and decrees by which an American citizen or resident could be fined and sent to jail, or both, as for the period from 1862 to 1900, or 39 years. The President alone has issued 674 orders covering 1,400 pages, and under the N. R. A. the rules and regulations issued are so numerous that they would fill 50 volumes of 200 pages each, or approximately 10,000 pages if compiled. I call attention to these rules and regulations for the reason that it indicates to the country the degree to which the Congress, under the present Democratic administration, has delegated its constitutional authority to make the laws to the executive branch of the Government, so that today we practically have no more than two departments under the Constitution, instead of three, because the executive branch has substantially become the legislative branch. As evidence that this method is not only unsatisfactory but also dangerous to our people, I give you the following example:

A man in New York State was convicted of violating an Executive order. An indictment was brought against him. The case went to the United States Court of Appeals and was affirmed. It went to the United States Supreme Court, and lo and behold, somebody discovered that the Executive order had been repealed.

I took an oath on the 3d day of January to support and defend the Constitution. We now have before us for consideration House Joint Resolution 117 appropriating nearly $5,000,000,000 in a lump sum and providing that the expenditure of this vast sum be delegated to the President to be used as he sees fit. We are asked to sign a blank check without knowing for what program or the exact purpose, when or where this huge sum is to be used. This amount, together with the $5,700,000,000 appropriated by the Seventy-third Congress and still on hand unexpended and under the complete authority and control of the President, although it may be allocated, makes the colossal and uncomprehensible sum under the control of one branch of the Government of $10,580,000,000.

No one doubts the good intent of the President. I respect him, but I find myself unable to support this bill. I have read it and studied it carefully. I join with every other Member of this House in my willingness and readiness to vote the necessary funds to provide for the needy and distressed. The amount set forth in this bill for that purpose is $880,000,000, but a deliberate gag rule voted by the House prevents a separate vote on this item. There would not be a dissenting vote against it on either side of the aisle.

The bill is entitled "Making an appropriation for relief purposes." It might have been properly entitled "Making an appropriation to destroy representative government in America." I know what we all know in this body, that it is humanly impossible for the President to personally attend to the details of the spending of such a vast sum as this bill provides. He must delegate that authority to others who are not elected by the people and who are not responsible to the people.

It is a tragic confession to find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this Congress, on page 199, the statement of our colleague from Texas "that public money is not spent without wasting a great part of it." If this is true, and I believe it is true to a certain degree, because of glaring examples that have already come to the public notice, then we may assume that more than $2,000,000,000 provided in this bill will be wasted.

It is a significant coincidence that on the very day we are called upon to vote on this bill we find in the public press a statement that on a project undertaken at Reedsville, W. Va., the Government out of $1,500,000 has wasted $500,000. This project was overwhelmingly defeated by a Democratic House, in which the Republicans joined with the Democrats to defeat it in the Seventy-third Congress. In spite of this fact and in defiance of the wishes and the judgment of the represenatives of the people, this project was undertaken out of moneys which had been voted in a lump sum exactly as it is proposed to appropriate money under this bill. This bears out not only the judgment of the English Government but also the statement made on the floor of the House on the 8th day of January that a great part of public money is wasted in its expenditure.

The greatest problem of this country today is to find work for the unemployed. This was true at the beginning of the Seventy-third Congress. Money was appropriated under bills similar to the one now before the House amounting to several billions of dollars and which I supported to relieve unemployment and distress. It is discouraging to make the observation that after the expending of billions of dollars so appropriated for relief for the unemployed, the number out of employment today is greater than it was then.

How then can any Member conscientiously vote to appropriate nearly $5,000,000,000 more to solve that problem when the effort thus far made and the vast expenditures made have not resulted in any material improvement.

England has recently abandoned the very method contained in this bill for public works as unsound and wasteful. The power and authority granted to the President under this bill is unheard of and I think stands without precedent in the history of the American people. Even a Democratic Senator of national fame has referred to it as "ridiculous", and as an example of how ridiculous this measure is it even empowers the President to purchase press clippings.

Under one clause in the bill the President could abolish present governmental departments, set up new ones, coordinate and redistribute others; in short, remake the entire governmental structure.

The present plan of issuing bonds of the Government and still more bonds without providing revenue with which to meet them and the interest on this colossal debt is an unsound policy. The American people will soon learn that these huge sums can be repaid from only one source and that is out of their own pocketbooks by the sweat of their brow and the toil of their hands. Not only will such a program strain the Nation's credit but it also continues to interfere with the business and industry of the country by its continued threat of competition and in the main instead of hastening recovery retards that most desired objective.

Let us encourage business and industry by withdrawing the hand of the Government from many of its activities that come into competition with the private efforts of our citizens, and we will lend a helping hand to better the condition of our people.

A vote for this bill means the placing of a tax burden of $112,000,000 on every congressional district in the United States. No assurance is given whatever that the people will be equally and equitably aided under the provisions of this bill. Even a proposed amendment that it should be allocated among the 48 States in proportion as the unemployment in each State bears to the whole number of unemployed was barely given any consideration on the floor of the House and badly defeated.

There is more at issue in this bill than the question of turning over to the President this enormous sum of money. The question is, Shall the Congress of the United States do its duty as prescribed by the Constitution and do the legislating for the people or shall it fail in its duty and delegate its power and authority to another branch of the Government? Let us as representatives of the people discharge our duty in accordance with the oath we took and which the country has called upon us to perform.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, this Government is divided into three distinct branches—executive, judicial, and legislative. It is my contention that the failure of any of these great distinctive branches of Government to properly function will, in time, land the administration in power squarely in the ditch.

I voted against the "hog-tied gag rule" presented to the House by the Rules Committee under which House Joint Resolution 117 was to be considered in making an appropriation of around $5,000,000,000 for relief purposes, for the reason that the Appropriations Committee failed to hold hearings and because it did not place in the resolution proper legislation.

Under this resolution as presented by the Rules Committee Members of the House were not able to amend the bill and write such legislation as should properly be in the relief bill.

It is clearly the function of the President of the United States to recommend to the Congress his legislative program, but it is up to the legislative branch to formulate and pass legislation. The last election demonstrated the fact that the citizens of this great Republic have great faith in the President and his ability to properly guide the ship of the Nation. However, the people of this country are expecting the Congress to perform its proper functions, that is, earmark appropriations and properly write legislation, not leaving these functions to the various departments of Government and administrators under rules and regulations written by them.

The relief bill simply appropriates around $5,000,000,000, leaving same up to the President to allocate to various administrators and relief agencies. I do not object to this, for any sane man certainly can understand that it would be a physical impossibility for any President, even our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, to select projects and expend this money in administering relief. This same power was given the President in the Seventy-third Congress. Will any Member of this House deny the fact that Mr. Hopkins and his advisers, many of them, perhaps, Republicans, are responsible for the manner in which relief was administered during the past year? I would hate to think that the President was a party to the wasteful methods employed under Hopkins. I should dislike very much to believe that the President had anything to do with the high-handed discrimination carried on by Hopkins and those under him in giving relief to those not entitled to relief, while the cries of the thousands of destitute people were turned down, including ex-service men. Why, the President in his message to Congress stated: "We are going to cut out this type of relief as administered by Mr. Hopkins. We are going to stop paying able-bodied men for cutting grass and picking up paper." He could have said also: "We are going to stop allowing one man in each State, appointed by Hopkins, to look out for his friends at the expense of those who are entitled to relief; the wasting of millions in digging swimming holes and other unworthwhile projects."

Certainly the President is not directly responsible for the type of relief that we have been receiving at the hands of Hopkins. Congress is to blame for not legislating instead of delegating its powers and functions; and Members know that we have been receiving the cursing, and properly so.

Will any Member of the House deny the fact that Gen. Hugh Johnson was the dictator of the N. R. A. and not the President? I am sure no one will deny that General Johnson placed on the pay rolls of the N. R. A. men connected with large industries and otherwise permitted the representatives of large industries to write the codes as well as permitted them to administer same. Those of you representing the people back home know also that these codes have been so written and so administered that these large industries have been able to create hog-tied monopolies which have put thousands of small industries and concerns out of business, thereby placing thousands of wage earners on the relief rolls. Certainly, this was not in accordance with the President's program, neither was it the purpose of the Congress in passing the N. R. A. Under subsection E, section 4, of the relief bill the President has the right to delegate the powers conferred upon him by the Congress to any governmental agency, including a corporation. This is what the President did under the powers given him in the Seventy-third Congress, and that is what he is going to do under this bill, and properly so, in that he cannot possibly superintend the administration of every department of Government.

Administrators are appointed without the advice or the confirmation on the part of the Senate. If this were done, probably the Senate could prevent some of these theorists and "brain trusters" getting these appointments. At least, the Congress could legislate earmarked appropriations and designate projects and a program. Certainly, the President can call on any administrator to resign and request a change in any program. But how long are we going to be able to tax the people to carry on this unwise and unsound procedure?

The operation of the N. R. A. is supposed to end June 30; however, it is my belief that the President can continue same under the provisions of the relief bill. This legislation should be rewritten by the Congress, and if so we could have a chance to protect the forgotten man who has not been considered under its operation.

It is my contention that, in the administration of a number of major pieces of legislation passed during the last session of Congress, under rules and regulations written by these departments and administrators in charge, millions of taxpayers' hard-earned money were wasted and, in a great many instances, the real purpose and intent of these bills, as well as the policy of the President, were not carried out. I am 100 percent for the President and his policy, but I am not for some of the heads of the departments and those who are in charge of the administration of these bills, intrusted with the expending of the money appropriated by the Congress and who are permitted to practically rewrite legislation passed by the Congress by writing rules and regulations governing same.

I predict that if the Congress continues its present policy of acting as a rubber stamp, the decisions of the Supreme Court, in passing on the constitutionality of these bills and legislation written outside of the Congress in the way of rules and regulations, will before long make Congress the laughing-stock of the Nation.

While the people are for the President and his policy, they are not for legislation passed by the Congress, administered under rules and regulations written largely by the administrators, not in line with the real purpose and intent of the legislation and the policy of the President. I venture further to predict that, with this procedure, it will not be long before the people will lose their confidence in the President and their respect for the Congress.

The President's address, delivered to the Congress a few days ago, covered quite a lot of territory, was constructive, and presented a beautiful picture. If his suggestions are properly written into legislation, somewhat in detail, these pieces of legislation if administered properly should not only give a square deal to every citizen but should also be instrumental in bringing about employment, normal prosperity, and happiness. The President, under his policy as outlined in this address, proposes to give to each and every citizen an opportunity to succeed on his or her own initiative, the right to work, and for a fair wage, the right to cultivate the soil and secure a fair price for farm products, the right for manufacturers and all lines of business to make a fair profit.

It is not the purpose of the President, neither should it be of the Congress, to so write legislation as to permit those in charge of same to rewrite largely these major pieces of legislation, under rules and regulations, and, perhaps, by and under the dictation of organized and selfish interests, which instead of giving a square deal to labor, farmers, small industries, and small business only leaves them to suffer the dictates of large and well-organized groups.

The National Industrial Recovery Act, as passed by the Congress in line with the President's policy for national recovery and a square deal, presented a beautiful picture as explained by those in charge of the bill and General Johnson. However, you must agree with me that many of the codes written under this legislation were written by the representatives of large industries, large business organizations, and administered by the representatives of these groups. You must also agree with me that under many of these codes and under the administration of same the representatives of these groups and of selfish interests which, for 60 years, have had complete control of the administration of the government, have created monopolies and price-fixing, which have piled up millions for these large groups and for selfish interests at the expense of labor, farmers, small unorganized industries, and the small business concerns of this country. When I, many other Congressmen, and the representatives of agriculture, and small business concerns complained, we were told by various heads of departments and those in charge of administering various bills passed by the Congress that, "We have charge of the administration of these bills." In a great many instances those in charge, not having any practical experience, short of common sense, unaware of the problems of these small industries and labor problems, especially the South, and apparently unconcerned, have so administered these pieces of legislation that they have caused many of these small concerns to go out of business and without regard to the consuming public.

Within the next few days I propose to give you some concrete cases under the administration of the N. I. R. A., especially as applied to the small sawmill operators of the Southeast. I expect to call names and expose the operations of a sawmill-lumber price-fixing monopoly which will make monopolies of the old days look like a joke.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is most artfully drawn. Boiled down to blunt facts, the first three sections provide for the appropriation of $4,880,000,000 for "relieving economic maladjustments" and "to be used in the discretion and under the direction of the President in such manner, and for such purposes and/or such projects" as he might think advisable.

Sections 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 have to do with administration and attempt to amplify and make clear certain powers granted in the first three sections of the bill and, as provided in section 1 of the bill—

> The specific powers hereinafter vested in the President shall not be construed as limiting the general powers and discretion vested in him by this section.

This is the most important and far-reaching piece of legislation that will come before this Congress—yet it comes in under a gag rule preventing any amendments from the floor to the first three substantive sections. All that the Membership of the House can do, so far as these sections are concerned, is to debate, and that debate is limited by this rule to 3 hours. The last four sections are subject to amendment, but because of the domination of the administration over the majority Membership, it will be impossible to enact a single amendment not approved by the administration.

This is a deplorable condition in what our country has been pleased to consider as the greatest legislative body on earth—a forum where each constituency is supposed to have its voice recorded through the agency of its Representative in Congress. In this bill Congress deliberately and unequivocably delegates to the President not only the right to spend $4,880,000,000 but also lets him spend it without any restrictions and without any limitations, just so long as, in his judgment, it is aimed at "relieving economic maladjustments", which, of course, covers relief, development, and, last but not least, any reforms or changes in the present system of government which might, in the opinion of the President, tend toward the objective.

This bill gives to the President as great power over the subject matter as is possessed today by Mussolini, Hitler, or Stalin. The American people have always taken pride in the fact that the pursestrings of the Nation were in the hands of the direct Representatives of the people, who must answer to their constituents every 2 years.

The only defense offered by the advocates of this bill is that President Roosevelt is a good man and that he will not betray the trust placed in him. We all have the greatest respect for the sincerity of our President, but be it remembered that he is not infallible. Be it further remembered that no human being can spend this $4,880,000,000 and personally direct its expenditure, to say nothing about figuring out the projects and how it is to be spent. As a practical matter, the money will be spent by bureaus, commissions, Federal corporations, and agencies set up by the President, and I for one am not ready to turn over to the Tugwells and this group the task of reforming and changing our Government.

I am opposed to lump-sum appropriations made blindly. I believe that the President, with his agencies for investigation is best prepared to submit recommendations as to where this money is to be spent, and the kind of projects to be developed, but surely the Congress should have some knowledge about what is contemplated to be done to our Government before it is too late.

I think we all agree that it is jobs people want and not the dole; that proper public works may be necessary at this time—but I am not ready to turn over $4,880,000,000 to any agency of the Government for the purpose of reforestation in the building of impracticable shelter belts in the Middle West or the reclaiming of submarginal and arid lands while the taxpayers are at the same time paying the farmers in my community to cultivate less land. I think we all favor the further development of public roads and construction of national highways, and especially grade-crossing elimination. These are useful and necessary projects, will furnish the most labor generally distributed, and be of value to all our people. On the other hand, my constituents object seriously to spending the taxpayers' money in putting the Government in business in competition with industry. We want no more Reedsville furniture factories operated by the Government to put out of business our Michigan furniture factories. We do not want the Federal Government to compete with private business, and we can guarantee this protection in this measure by failing to make this appropriation without limitations.

The debate on this bill has made clear several things: First, that this House stands ready by unanimous vote to appropriate every dollar necessary for relief, regardless of the amount. Second, that if this body were permitted to vote its free will without outside domination, it would never delegate its legislative functions to the Executive. Third, that the Members of this body still believe in the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of our Government.

Fourth, that the only excuse for this legislation is the emergency of the hour.

I do not believe, in the light of expenditures of the last Congress along the same line, that this is the route to recovery. The amount of money here appropriated will not put 3,500,000 men to work and keep them at work until they are absorbed in industry. Experience has shown this and the statistics of the Labor Department bear me out in this statement. It is not the claim of the advocates of this bill that it will put men to work immediately, but it is hoped to be operating in 1936. Therefore, there is no hurry. Let the President submit a general idea of what projects he is going to develop and I for one will go along for anything that is reasonable. I was not sent here to vote blindly. I shall not return home and say that I voted for something about which I knew nothing.

To grant to the Executive the right to "delegate the powers conferred on him under this joint resolution to any governmental agency—including a corporation"—is inconceivable. It is more astonishing, however, to think that we should even contemplate authorizing the President "to prescribe such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out this joint resolution and any willful violation of such rule or regulation shall be punished by a fine of not to exceed $5,000." In other words, the Congress permits the President to write criminal law with a penalty attached. Indeed, it goes further, and the President may delegate this power to any one of the alphabetical agencies or corporations, and that bureau or corporation may write criminal law, and subject to a $5,000 fine for violation, without the legislative body, which the people elected, having anything to say about it. To me this is unthinkable.

Our people accepted much of the arbitrary legislation of the last Congress as emergency legislation. Those who supported that legislation thought, of course, that it would get results. Experience has shown otherwise. It is conceded here on the floor that there are more men out of work than there were a year ago; that there are more people on relief. I for one am absolutely opposed to the continued expenditure of billions of the taxpayers' money until I at least have some knowledge as to where, how, and when it is to be spent. The administration can get all the money it wants for relief by simply asking for it. I know that this bill is going to pass, that anything I may say will be but a protest, but I am hopeful that when this bill gets to the Senate, where no gag rules will be possible, proper amendments will be made and that a bill will be speedily returned to the House. Then the two bodies can agree on a real relief measure.

Possibly the most popular political vote would be to vote for this bill, because we are told we will have no other opportunity to vote for relief, and that if we do not vote for this bill as it is handed to us we will be accused of voting against relief. I think such argument is a reflection on the intelligence of the people back home who still believe in representative government. There is a difference between emergency relief and permanently changing our system of government.

A motion to recommit this bill, providing the same amount of money, but safeguarding its expenditure and the future of our country, will be submitted, and I shall be pleased to vote for that motion, but am constrained to vote against this unconscionable measure.

Government ownership of public utilities, development of our national resources, regulation of industry, and kindred subjects involve vital issues of policy and should be passed upon deliberately after full discussion and with full knowledge of the masses of our people. Economic planning may be advisable, but the country should at least have some information about these matters before the Government commits itself. This bill would permit boards, commissions, and bureaus, with the approval of the President, to go so far as to make it very difficult to change our course, even though the majority of the people in the end were much opposed. Let us differentiate between relief and reform.

Mr. REED. Mr. Speaker, as a Member of the House of Representatives of the United States, I feel that I have a threefold duty: First, to the Nation as a whole; second, to the State of Illinois; and third, to the Eleventh Congressional District of that State, which has bestowed upon me the honor of making me their Representative. The people of my State and district, I believe, had confidence that if elected as their Congressman, I would, to the utmost of my ability, preserve their rights under the Constitution of the United States.

That historic document provides that "all legislative powers * * * shall be vested in a Congress of the United States." Section 6 of the bill under consideration gives to the Chief Executive of this Nation the power to prescribe "rules and regulations", the violation of which will subject the offender to the penalties of a criminal prosecution. One of the bulwarks of our civil freedom is the realization that criminal laws prescribing fines or imprisonment are definitely defined in the statutes of the United States or of the several States and that they were enacted by and upon the deliberate action of the chosen representatives of the people. The passage of this bill will give to one man the power, that belongs only to Congress, to enact criminal laws at any time, without any notice thereof, as in his judgment may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this joint resolution. What protection has a citizen of this great Nation, who may have diligently searched the printed statute law of the United States, who may have sought, obtained, and acted upon the best legal advice obtainable and who after exhausting all efforts within his power to satisfy himself of his course, acts and learns to his chagrin that he has violated a "rule" or a "regulation" issued by the Chief Executive, the existence of which he had no opportunity of ascertaining and concerning which he had no knowledge, which violation subjects him to indictment and punishment as a criminal.

Our Democratic friends tell us that Franklin D. Roosevelt would never abuse the authority granted him by this resolution. Possibly not. Then why give it to him? The authority may remain long after Mr. Roosevelt relinquishes the Presidency and the ideas and temperament of his successor might be far different than those of the present Executive. I cannot subscribe to those provisions contained in section 6 of this resolution, and their existence is repugnant to all of my ideas of fairness and equality under the law.

This bill is called an "emergency relief appropriation." I believe every Member on both sides of this House is sincere in his or her desire to relieve the distressed and to eliminate unemployment. We of Illinois are especially interested. During the month of September of 1934 a total of 284,600 families received unemployment relief from public funds of our State, which was an increase of 35 percent over the figure for September of 1933. The total number of persons receiving relief in Illinois during August 1934 was 1,075,977, while the total population of our State is 7,630,654.

As a relief measure I voice no objection to the amount of $4,880,000,000 named in the bill. I do object to the unrestrained and unlimited authority granted in the resolution whereby the entire stupendous sum of money is turned over to the Executive to spend as he sees fit, without regard to the unemployment conditions in one State over that of another, without the assurance that a fair and adequate wage scale will be insisted upon, and without the understanding that, so far as practicable, the Government will not enter into competition with private business.

Previous Congresses have passed legislation to alleviate the conditions of agriculture. They have attempted to better the conditions of labor. They have tried to remedy the defects in our banking system. They have endeavored to aid citizens to secure loans on their homes. In short, it seems to me they have in recent years considered all classes of people except the small business men—the grocer, the butcher, the tailor, the barber, the baker, the druggist, the haberdasher, the furniture dealer, and other kindred enterprises. These have been the "forgotten men." They do not ask for help, but they sorely need it. They can obtain it if industry, and I mean small industry, is put on its feet and given a fresh start. This resolution could, in my opinion, be made immensely effective if a substantial sum of not less than $2,000,000,000 were to be used for the establishment of a revolving fund to make loans to industry. It would start humming the wheels of our small factories. It would reduce the relief rolls. It would increase the purchasing power of each and every community and reduce the public expenditures. It would provide employment and give to the small business man the benefit of that increased purchasing power that the regular weekly pay rolls gave to him in the days of our former prosperity. With this in mind, I present for consideration a plan submitted by Mr. Lester J. Norris, of St. Charles, Ill., and a portion of a survey of that plan by the Ira J. Owen Organization, Inc., industrial engineers, which discloses a concrete example of the operation of this idea and the effect it will have upon communities where put in operation.

The real productive work of America is in our factories. Today there are hundreds of factories in this country which have been forced to close because they could not get the needed funds for working capital. The result has been to throw men and women out of employment. These factory people, many of whom are skilled artisans, have been compelled through no fault of their own to apply to relief agencies for support. This situation no doubt has satisfied the worker for a while, but the continued unemployment and the acceptance of a dole from the State is beginning to create a serious situation.

Dissatisfaction, destruction of spirit, loss of skill, unfair practices, disregard for law, loss of respect, loss of ambition, loss of confidence in the administration—finally an unwillingness to work.

Now, if these people could be put back into productive work, there would be created—a new spirit, a better living standard, an increased purchasing power, the reestablishment of homes, the reestablishment of morale, work for others than the one directly benefited.

At the present time there is a demand for goods of all kinds over the entire country, but in order to create markets for these goods the purchasing power of the people must be increased. The outstanding factor in getting out of this depression is to put men and women back to work where the results of their labor will create wealth, which means prosperity.

Idle factories cannot start up without the necessary capital, nor can many of the going factories continue without financial help.

A plan to provide this capital, so that the factories can again turn their wheels and put men and women back to work, will go a long way in solving our present serious relief situation. Nonproductive relief will get us nowhere, but to give our idle factories relief so that they may be able to start to work on a productive basis will again start us on our way to creating the wealth necessary to provide decent living conditions and a few of the luxuries in life to which every American worker is entitled.

In order to provide funds for this purpose and a means for the return of this money over a short period of time, the following plan is suggested, the details of which will, of course, have to be worked out.

The Federal Government to set aside, from funds provided for relief purposes, a revolving fund of $2,000,000,000, to be allocated according to requirements to the various States for the purpose of financing idle factories, also going factories, to put men and women now on relief rolls in gainful occupations.

The working of this plan is presented herewith.

A known idle factory has been taken as an example in a small town in Illinois. In this town there are at present 240 factory workers on the relief roll. The following indicates that by placing this particular factory into operation and taking these factory workers off the relief roll, the county's relief burden will be decreased by $5,150 per month and the purchasing of the community will be increased $14,040 per month.

The figures, insofar as relief burden is concerned, are taken from an official Illinois Emergency Relief Commission bulletin of statistics, and the figures relative to wage payments in the factory are conservative and used to show what can be accomplished on a very minimum wage scale.

|---|---|
| Present county relief burden per month, 337 families, at $21.50 per month | $7,265.50 |
| Idle factory reestablished employ, 240 men and women of all trades and kind, at 50 cents per hour, 40 hours per week | 19,200.00 |
| Less relief burden previously carried by State | 5,160.00 |
| Increased monthly purchasing power | 14,040.00 |
| Total families on county relief roll before factory opened | 337 |
| Less men and women reemployed at factory | 240 |
| Families remaining on relief roll | 97 |
| Relief burden of county before opening of factory | $7,265.50 |
| Reduction in relief burden to county after opening of factory | 5,160.00 |
| Relief burden after factory operates | 2,105.50 |

To support the above example, we give you the following data based on estimated sales, decided upon after a careful survey was made of the potential market for each article to be manufactured. The first column represents the sales and the accumulated totals by months, second column is the receipts based on 75 percent of the sales each month and also the remaining uncollected balance of the previous month, third column is the funds supplied by the State from the revolving funds, and indicates that after the sixth month of operation the factory is self-supporting. The factory during the last 6 months of the year will accumulate enough funds from collections to reimburse the State revolving fund, allow 1 percent of total sales as a reserve for bad accounts, and have a substantial balance at the end of the year.

| | Sales | | Cash receipts | | Cash advance by State | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Monthly | Accumulated | Monthly | Accumulated | Monthly | Accumulated |
| First month | | | | | $60,375 | |
| Second month | $10,000 | | | | 60,375 | $120,750 |
| Third month | 30,000 | $40,000 | $7,500 | | 52,875 | 173,625 |
| Fourth month | 50,000 | 90,000 | 25,000 | $32,500 | 35,375 | 209,000 |
| Fifth month | 60,000 | 150,000 | 45,000 | 77,500 | 15,375 | 224,375 |

| Eleventh month | 120,750 | 740,750 | 95,000 | 595,000 | (1) | (1) |
| Twelfth month | 110,000 | 850,750 | 115,000 | 710,000 | (1) | (1) |
| Balance accounts receivable at end of year | | | | 140,750 | (1) | (1) |
| Total of cash receipts from July to December | | | | | | 575,000 |
| Less: Factor operating cost July to December | | | | | | 362,250 |
| Balance of accounts receivable ledger Dec. 31 | | | | | 140,750 | |
| Less: 1 percent of sales for bad accounts | | | | | 8,507 | 132,243 |
| | | | | | | 344,993 |
| Cash repaid to State for advances | | | | | | 227,250 |
| On hand to start operations first of year | | | | | | 117,743 |

[1] No further cash required from State for operations.

It is to be remembered that this plan relieves the State of a burden of $5,160 per month, and the wages paid to 240 men and women will increase the purchasing power of the community $14,040 per month. Aside from the benefit of the foregoing enumerated results, the State would gain profit through the medium of sales tax on increased purchasing power.

Up to the present time private capital has not shown a willingness to put their funds into industrial enterprises, and the banks have not shown any disposition to lend money to worthy manufacturing business.

With the State taking the lead, a competitive situation will soon develop where private capital will look more favorably on worthy manufacturing projects, all of which will help in putting men back to work.

INCENTIVES

In order to get manufacturers interested in the employment of those now on our relief rolls, some sort of incentive should be given aside from impressing them of their patriotic duty. The following are two suggestions which, if properly set up, would go a long way in interesting the manufacturer and getting him to put on additional help to be taken from the relief roll employment record:

STATE TAX CREDIT

For every person taken off the registered relief roll and given employment for a period of 1 year a tax-credit check for $100 will be given the company employing such person. This check will be accepted by the State in lieu of cash for payment of the company's State tax bills of whatever kind or nature.

RELIEF SERVICE STARS

A relief service certificate will be given companies employing persons from the registered relief roll, and for each person given employment a star will be given the company to be placed on the relief service certificate. Companies can print the number of stars in their ads showing the number of people taken off relief and employed by them and to show the public that they are doing their part in putting America back to work.

Mr. Speaker, I recall the eagerness with which patriotic Americans in 1918 placed in the windows of their homes and stores placards reading, "We have bought Liberty bonds." I still can see, even today, signs in the homes of numerous citizens, placed there shortly after the passage of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which read, "We do our part." The American public will always do its part. This resolution could be an instrument of great good to the Nation. In its present form I regret the fact that to support it I must vote to surrender the law making power of Congress to the Executive branch of the Government and approve the expenditure of four thousand eight hundred and eighty millions of dollars without any assurance of how, where, or in what manner it will be spent—whether it will be used to throttle or compete with industry or to crush labor. This I refuse to do.

Mr. GRAY of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in 1930 the Republican majority in Congress, now the minority in the House and Senate, spoke for, urged, and voted for, with the one exception of James M. Beck, the delegation of legislative powers to be exercised by a Republican President, and known as the "reciprocal tariff agreement." The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD further shows that the Democratic Membership in Congress, including the present Democratic leadership, spoke against, condemned, and voted against the measure as a violation of the Constitution, and as fraught with great and menacing dangers to our system of free self-government.

In 1934 substantially the same measure and involving the same identical principle, the surrender of legislative power to be exercised by the executive department, in violation of the Constitution, was sponsored by the Democratic majority, and the same Democratic leadership, which had condemned the principle in 1930, and the same Republican leadership, which had led the full party Membership to vote for and support the act of 1930, now reversed themselves and faced about to oppose, condemn, and vote against the measure which they had approved, voted for, and enacted into law.

Now, here again before Congress in 1935 we are brought face to face with the same identical principle, the delegation of legislative powers to be exercised by the Executive, which has been condemned by both parties, condemned by the Democratic Party Membership in 1930 and by the Republican Membership in 1934. With the Democratic leadership of the House sponsoring the bill as a party measure and the Republican leadership opposing, we are to witness an exhibition of a complete change and reversal of the positions taken in 1930. The Democratic Membership will speak and vote for what they condemned as a dangerous precedent in 1930, and the Republican Membership will oppose and vote against what they approved and voted for at that time. And the moral courage of the individual Member will yield and give way to fear, and principle will be sacrificed for party regularity.

I condemned the surrender of legislative power in 1930 to be exercised by a Republican President as a violation of the vital provisions of the Federal Constitution. This was before I returned to Congress in 1932, and maintaining a consistent record on principle, I voted against the reciprocal tariff provisions of 1934 surrendering the same power to a Democratic President. And now further pursuing a consistent course and to maintain and uphold the Constitution, I will be constrained to record my vote here against the pending resolution today surrendering the same and more legislative power to be exercised by a Democratic President in gross violation of the basic principles of the provisions of the Constitution.

The Republican Party leadership, long observing a loose or liberal construction of the provisions of the Federal Constitution, and always reposing greater confidence in the wisdom and judgment of the special few to legislate for and govern over the many, was more consistent and regular in their delegation of legislative power to be exercised by the Executive. And the support of this bill today would come with more consistent and better grace from the Republican Members and leadership than from the Democratic Members and leadership.

If there is any one principle of government upon which the Democratic Party stands more unequivocally committed than another, it is the principle of the separation of powers safeguarding against abuse and usurpation by the executive department of government. The exercise of the legislative and judicial powers with the power of the Executive to enforce the laws by one official or body of the Government is abhorrent to every principle of democracy declared for by its founder, Thomas Jefferson, and by the Democratic Party tradition reaffirmed over again for time immemorial.

This surrender and delegation of powers by Congress, conferring upon the President both legislative and judicial functions to be exercised with the Executive, violates every fundamental principle of democracy, rebukes the sacred tenets of Thomas Jefferson, compromises all that Andrew Jackson stood for, and makes free representative government a mockery, a delusion, and an empty claim. Threatening not only our own form of government but the institutions of other people who have followed in our footsteps and example in governments like our own.

If this bill is enacted as provided without change, elimination, or amendment, we are by this legislation saying to the world—our long-boasted rule of the people and free institutions and self-government is a farce and a mockery which we will not ourselves observe and which we cast off with indifference whenever a test or trial comes of a crisis in our public affairs.

Courage is not a positive or absolute term but a term varying in nature and degree from physical courage prompted in men by a realization of superior animal force to moral courage or courage of the conscience, inspired in men from a deep conception of right and duty toward their fellowmen. Then there is single or individual courage manifested in the course or conduct of men, the courage of man standing out alone prompting men to look beyond and forget self, to cope and battle single-handed always to win or achieve a victory above personal selfish profit or gain, a victory for the common cause of men.

And in contrast with this last form of courage we find still another form of the impulse which for want of a better name or expression we call collective or pack courage, one individual taking courage behind another, courage from the howling bedlam chorus, which, when scattered and dispersed, the individual is left fleeing to conceal his identity, crouching under the shadows of fear or moral and mental cowardice.

It is this form of collective courage which is often observed in partisan politics in the course of political proceedings, where men are prompted with courage to condemn the wrongs and evils in their opposing parties but fail of the courage, the moral impulse, to oppose the same evils in their own party. I regret that this collective form of courage is not confined to party ward conventions or to petty ward political henchmen and that it is sometimes manifested in high party councils of State and sometimes in the Halls of Congress.

The one great distinctive feature standing out in the American Constitution, towering high above all others like a mountain peak piercing the sky and around and about which all other provisions and injunctions cluster like the foothills at the base, was and is the separation of powers for exercise, separate, independent, and apart, by different officials and bodies of men restrained from interference or encroachment one body from exercising the functions of another. And by solemn and imperative mandate clearly and unequivocally enjoined, the powers of the different departments created were to be exercised separate and independent, one free from restriction or influence from the other under a prohibition positive and imperative in terms and from which there was no exception reserved.

The framers of the Constitution were not acting for their own time and generation alone. They were building a fort, a defense, a bulwark, to safeguard the future and the generations to come. While reposing all and absolute confidence in Washington, Jefferson, and Madison, in Adams, Monroe, and other patriots of their time, they realized, in their wisdom and forethought, that to except these true and tried pioneers of liberty would be to compromise the safeguards and leave the way open for designing men. And in such realization and wisdom, looking always to the security of the future, the framers of the Constitution wisely imposed the same restraint and prohibition upon all men in the exercise of power, alike without reservation or exception, to the end that bad men could not make claim under the exceptions and reservations for good men.

In the exercise of such wisdom and forethought, the framers of the Constitution realized and understood that the virtues of rules, laws, and constitutions, and their force to compel respect and obedience, are dependent upon their universal application and their general enforcement upon all, without deviation, exception, or reservation as to any man, official, or body of men who might be intrusted with the exercise of power. They realized that such exception or reservation would leave the bars down, would leave the way open for some designing ambitious man who might gain place, power, or governmental position by strategy, intrigue, or pretense or be swept into office under force of some crisis of the people. They realized that great calamities, wide-spread misfortunes, and disasters, which divert the attention of the people and throw them off their guard, would be seized upon as an opportunity to take advantage and claim powers which at other times would not be attempted.

And the calamities and disasters of this great depression, as affording such opportunity for advantage, and the claim and the demand for the exercise of special and extraordinary powers, claimed necessary and imperative and required to meet and cope with the conditions of the times, is realized in the crisis of this panic. And the creation of separate and independent departments, and the restriction and limitation of powers enjoining their separate and independent exercise and the prohibition of one department of the Government from encroachment upon or exercising the powers of another, is prophetic of the wisdom and forethought of the framers of the Federal Constitution and the safeguards by them created and the dangers provided against in the separation and the division of powers.

It is in fulfillment of the fears and apprehensions in the minds of the framers of the Constitution that this evil hour in our history and the history of civilization, this great industrial panic, has come upon the people to burden and distress them. With the people writhing and suffering in the throes of economic depression and crying out in their anguish for relief at any cost or sacrifice; with the people ready and willing to surrender their inheritance and birthright of free institutions and self-government for the proverbial mess of pottage of temporary economic relief, designing autocratic rulers, ambitious premiers of the Old World, looking always for opportunity to take advantage of some crisis or condition of the people, are making claim and taking over great special and extraordinary powers, assuming such powers as necessary and required to meet the conditions of the times brought on by the panic or depression.

Under the separation of powers provided, Congress, the National Legislature, the body of men making the laws, were prohibited from applying or enforcing the laws; the courts, the supreme judiciary, the body of men construing and applying the laws, were prohibited from making or enforcing the laws; and the President or Chief Executive, the official charged with the enforcement of the laws, was prohibited from making or construing the laws. The separation or division of powers enjoined was intended to serve as a check or restraint, one division or part upon another, each part to be exercised or administered separately or independently, one from the other, in jealous observance of limited jurisdiction, and thereby to safeguard against abuse or usurpation under which other like governments had failed and fallen.

We are dealing with the Constitution, the fundamental law of the land, upon which the foundation of the Government rests, and under which we claim and enjoy our rights, liberties, and freedom and security for our institutions of peace and civil life. We are dealing here with a hidden force, the power of precedent and example, which, in the course of time, ripens into positive and absolute law equally an obligation as binding as a solemn statutory enactment. Many of the laws in force today fixing property and civil rights have been put in force and made effective and remain in effect and continue in force by reason of the rulings of courts establishing the law by precedent and becoming by lapse or expiration of time an absolute law of property and civil rights.

Statutory laws end and terminate with the expiration of the time limit fixed. But laws by precedent and example continue beyond the time for which made and assert their force and effect with every reoccurring occasion and become the continuing law of the land. The force of laws to restrain evil and the power of constitutional safeguards, the rights, liberties, and welfare of the people are like character and reputation in men which require a lifetime to build up, but which can be compromised and surrendered by one false and unguarded step, sacrificing honor and integrity and which once impaired or surrendered can never be restored or regained.

This bill, if made a law, assumes only to make a delegation of the prohibited powers of the Constitution to a President now in office and for a specified time certain. Yet by the force of precedent and example, it will delegate these prohibited powers to other and future Presidents, and will operate as a surrender of legislative power by Congress for time continuing and indeterminate. The surrender or delegation of legislative powers by Congress to be exercised by a President under the hidden, covered, and concealed form of precedent and example before Congress, is a greater force, a more continuing power, than open enactment of statutory law, because continuing on to operate after a statute shall have ceased to exist by reason of the time limit fixed.

Under the precedent and example of granting legislative powers to be exercised by the Executive, first made to the Executive in 1930 and followed by the same grant of power in 1934, and, if followed again in this resolution, any future President, with a party majority in Congress, could make and enforce the same demand upon his majority party Membership. And with the same overshadowing power of the President no majority Membership in Congress in the face of these precedents and examples could resist or refuse the demand. The power of precedent and example will have ripened into the form of a positive rule of construction compromising constitutional safeguards. And the War of the Revolution and all the battles waged for liberty and all the sacrifice of bloodshed and treasure will have been fought and suffered in vain.

Under this precedent and example any man ambitious and thirsting for power who might be swept into the Presidency following some crisis or trying condition, would cite these precedents and examples and claim the same and greater power, and Congress, quailing before the demand, would be paralyzed and helpless to resist. Congress will be robbed of its defense, will be deprived of its refuge and a showing of an unbroken line of precedents and examples upholding and refusing to surrender its powers, and without and for the want of which the bars will be down and the way left open for the powers of Congress to be usurped and exercised by the executive branch of the Government.

This generation is not called upon or required to prepare or work out a Constitution providing safeguards for our form of institutions. The battles have all been fought. The sacrifices have all been made. The work has all been completed. The Constitution with all its provisions safeguarding our rights and liberties and guaranteeing our form of government has been committed into our hands for preservation and perpetuation. And this is the duty of Congress. This is our responsibility. This is the oath and affirmation which we take and subscribe before the altar of free institutions to uphold, defend, and perpetuate the integrity of the Constitution.

But this delegation of legislative power is not in fact a surrender of power to this President exclusively and personally, and which could not be exercised by any other man in the office of Chief Executive during and within the time for which granted. It is a delegation of legislative power, expressly prohibited by the Constitution, to the office of the Chief Executive, to be exercised by whoever may be President during the period, term, and time for which the delegation was made. Under the uncertainties of life, on the death or disability of the President, this power would go to be exercised by some one of the men in the line of succession provided for on the death or disability of the President, and who would be clothed with the extraordinary powers of lawmaker, judge, and executioner.

And on its face it is not a power to be exercised personally by this President. It is a mental and a physical impossibility for any one man to hold and apportion this vast sum of money for expenditure out among the many different projects to which the same may be allocated and to be charged with the responsibility which it is impossible for him to assume. It is the province of Congress to make these appropriations of money. It is the duty of Members of Congress to consider where the money is to go and for what purpose it is to be expended and by whom it is to be administered and for which they must assume the responsibility.

The delegation of legislative and judicial powers to be exercised by the executive branch of the Government is not only fundamentally wrong and in gross violation and in disregard of every principle of free self-government, disorganizing the balance of governmental powers and the restraint or check against usurpation, but it is a policy casting unwarranted burdens and staggering obligations of office upon the executive branch of the Government, commingling and confusing governmental functions and disorganizing the even balance of powers. It is tearing down the framework of free institutions to eradicate the evils and abuses and which can be otherwise more effectively remedied, and leaves Congress and the legislative branch without functions and obligations to assume, without responsibility for the course of legislation and no longer answerable to a constituency and their pledge made to the electorate.

If clause 1, section 1, of article I of the Federal Constitution, providing that all legislative powers therein conferred shall be vested in the Congress, consisting of a Senate and a House of Representatives, affirmatively excluding the executive and the judiciary, enjoins no restrictions of power; if these unequivocal provisions made a part of the Federal Constitution, conceived in self-denial, fasting, and prayer, adopted upon serious and deliberate consideration, proclaimed as the supreme law of the land, to be obeyed and observed inviolate, under solemn oath and affirmation of all the officials of the Federal Government; if all these provisions of the Constitution are held merely passive and permissive and discretionary and directory only, enjoin nothing and mean nothing, then the flag, with its contrast of colors—then the waving Stars and Stripes, unfurled to the freedom of the breeze as the emblem of exact and equal justice, the symbol of liberty and equal rights—is a flaunting rag without meaning, is a mockery, a delusion, misleading men.

OUR BANKING SYSTEM

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered over the radio by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] over the radio on November 2, 1934:

Ladies and gentlemen of the radio audience: The depression through which the Nation is passing has been properly called a bankers' panic. During the years 1921 to 1932 we had over 10,000 bank failures involving deposits of three and one-half billion dollars. There was, of course, corresponding curtailment of the circulation of bank-check currency amounting to many billions of dollars. In 1931 there were over 2,000 failures and in 1932 there were over 1,000. Many of these were traceable to the decline in values following the orgy of speculation in 1929. Worst of all hundreds of solvent institutions were destroyed by withdrawals of deposits and runs due to loss of confidence. The demoralization and suffering attending these failures affected every community in the Nation. In such a situation it was only natural that bankers should cease to lend and proceed to enforce collection with enormous sacrifice of collateral pledged in order to meet their responsibility to their depositors.

All appeals by the President and Secretary of the Treasury during the years 1931 and 1932 to restore confidence were unavailing. Of the total supply of currency amounting to five and one-half billion dollars it is estimated that more than one-half was withdrawn—some hoarded, some in postal savings, and large amounts deposited in foreign lands.

When we remember that more than nine-tenths of the Nation's business is conducted by the use of bank credit it is easy to understand that the withdrawal of such stupendous sums of currency from normal uses must inevitably result in the enormous reduction of bank-check circulation shocking to trade and commerce.

Loss of confidence continued; values sank lower and lower; trade and commerce, foreign and domestic, were suffering from creeping paralysis; the rolls of the unemployed swelled to alarming proportions. Then came the complete collapse of the Nation's banking structure in March 1933. We faced a crisis presenting a challenge to Amercan leadership unprecedented in time of peace.

The record of achievements since that eventful hour must be a source of pride to every patriotic citizen in the land. Leadership in the world of finance only brought us colossal failure. The people turned to their chosen leadership at Washington for guidance. With consummate courage and superb ability and tact the President took up the stupendous tasks awaiting him. Congress was summoned in extraordinary session. The Emergency Banking Act of 1933 was formulated and passed. The banks were reopened with assurances from the President that we were to have a banking system that would command public confidence. To enable the banks to meet the demands of their depositors a provision was incorporated in the act permitting the exchange of bank assets for Federal Reserve bank notes.

Some of us had recognized the weaknesses of our banking system and had struggled for years to secure the enactment of legislation for the protection of depositors. I had the honor of introducing numerous bills designed to accomplish this purpose. The last was on April 14, 1932. The bill was considered by the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, hearings were held, and the measure reported to the House. After prolonged consideration and debate it was passed by the House on May 27, 1932, the opposition not having votes enough to force a roll call.

During the next session of Congress the struggle was renewed. Final passage of the bill was secured during the closing hours of the Congress of the session.

The act provides for the establishment of a corporation known as the "Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation." The measure sets up a plan for the insurance of all deposits up to $10,000; 75 percent of all deposits between $10,000 and $50,000, and 50 percent of deposits in excess of $50,000. In order to permit proper examination and certification of banks for participation in the benefits of the insurance fund the effective date of the provision was set as of July 1, 1934.

The Federal Reserve banks are required to subscribe $147,000,000 to the capital of the Corporation and the Treasury $150,000,000 and all member banks of the Federal Reserve System are required to subscribe an amount equal to one-fourth of 1 percent of their total deposits with provision requiring each bank to pay in an additional one-fourth of 1 percent of all deposits upon call of the board of directors of the corporation at any time it is found that the funds of the corporation are reduced to an amount less than one-fourth of 1 percent of the deposits of all participating banks. A provision of the bill allows all State banks and trust companies not members of the Federal Reserve System to subscribe to the capital of the Corporation and to participate in its benefits upon terms of equality with member banks.

The corporation is authorized to expand its capital three times and may require advancements by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation when needed to the amount of $250,000,000. The resources of the Corporation are amply sufficient to command the full confidence of the public.

The act provides for the temporary insurance of all deposits up to the amount of $2,500, effective January 1, 1934. In June 1934, the act was amended postponing the effective date of the permanent plan to July 1, 1935, continuing the temporary plan and raising the maximum amount to $5,000.

Under the plan now in force more than 14,000 banks are members of the insurance fund. It embraces more than 90 percent of all the licensed banking institutions in the country. The total deposits of insured institutions aggregate $35,000,000,000 covering 50,000,000 accounts.

The American Bankers Association at their annual meeting in Chicago in 1933 passed the following resolutions: "The American Bankers Association hereby records its deliberate judgment that the dangers involved in attempting to initiate at the beginning of 1934 the provisions for deposit insurance contained in the Banking Act of 1933 are genuine and serious. It holds that the whole project for deposit insurance embodied in that law should be reconsidered, and it reiterates its conviction that the postponement of the first phase of the project is of the first importance."

To say the least it would be scarcely expected that the American Bankers Association would call upon the President to set aside a solemn enactment of the Congress of the United States. But let us trace events that have taken place since the passage of this resolution. Definite figures are not available but it is certain there has been an enormous increase in deposits amounting to something like eight to ten billion dollars. There was not a single bank failure among insured banks during the first 6 months of 1934. During the first 10 months there have been only 6 bank failures and 3 of them were due to defalcations of officials and employees. Insured deposits in these failed banks amounted to less than $700,000. Two-thirds of this amount will be realized out of the assets from the banks, leaving the final cost to the Deposit Insurance Corporation not exceeding $250,000. This amounts to less than one-hundredth of 1 percent of the total deposits of insured banks. How trivial the burden compared to the benefits received.

In the case of each of these failed banks the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation was on hand in less than 10 days to take care of all deposits insured. There were no mobs and no distress such as has attended bank failures in the past. In fact, there was no bank failure in the ordinary sense of the word, because the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation stepped in promptly for the protection of depositors, and under the provision of the Glass-Steagall Act the Corporation continues the operation of the bank or sets up a new institution without disturbance to the normal business activities of the community.

Confidence in banks has been restored, the fear of depositors has been banished, and bankers no longer live in constant dread of withdrawals and runs. Solvent banks are free to employ their resources in support of business, and at least the first great obstacle to recovery has been removed. No more shall we witness the wreck and ruin of solvent institutions resulting from lack of confidence due to faulty and inadequate banking machinery.

The officials of the American Bankers' Association assure us that the banks of the country were never in so sound a condition as that which they enjoy at this hour. What of the dire predictions made at the Chicago convention as embodied in the resolution which I have just read? The plain fact is that the experience of these recent years has demonstrated quite clearly that our leaders of the banking world do not possess the infallible wisdom which we have been accustomed to ascribe to them. It is manifest that they are the victims of the same limitations and weaknesses under which the rest of mankind suffers. In any event, whatever else may be said, the resolutions adopted by the Chicago convention last year lend poor support to any contention that our bankers possess the gift of prophecy.

The public will not fail to note that at the first annual meeting of the American Bankers Association, 1 year from the passage of the resolution adopted at Chicago and following the first year of the operation of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, during which period the Nation for the first time experienced relief from the distress and suffering incident to bank failures, there is to be found no official recognition of these happy developments by the Washington convention. It is a source of gratification to all of us that conditions have so improved that our friends, the bankers, seem to have forgotten the resolution adopted in Chicago in 1933. It is even more gratifying to know that a vast majority of the bankers of the Nation appreciate and approve what has been done for the elevation of banking.

In the light of what has transpired it would be folly to expect any system in the future to command public confidence, or to operate successfully without a guaranty upon which citizens may rely for the return of their deposits. The time has come when depositors, who appear at the window of a bank will demand to know if the institution has its deposits protected by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The Nation will never cease to remember the constructive service of Hon. J. F. T. O'Connor, both during the struggle for the enactment of the legislation and as Comptroller of the Currency and member of the Board, who bore the chief responsibility in laying the foundation for the remarkable success with which the act has been administered. Mr. Cummings, the first chairman of the Board, and Mr. Crowley, who now serves so efficiently in that capacity, have placed the Nation under an immense debt of gratitude to them.

Bankers should be the last to complain at what has been accomplished. The Government has done more for them than any other class of citizens. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made advances to banks of the country for the replenishment of capital amounting to more than $1,000,000,000. These loans have not been made upon collateral security, as is required of other institutions obtaining loans, but they are made to banks without security. Provision has been made for the advancement by the Treasury of $147,000,000 to Federal Reserve banks to aid and assist in loans to industry and advances are to be made practically without any requirement for reimbursement to the Treasury. If bankers are displeased that the Government is extending its activities unduly into the field of business, the remedy is to remove the necessity. Future policy does not rest alone with the Government. Men of the business world must share the responsibility. As much as all deplore the necessity for steps taken to meet existing emergencies Government officials cannot ignore the constitutional mandate to "promote the general welfare." If any banker longs for restoration of conditions that existed on the 4th of March 1933, he is at liberty to return to the Government moneys supplied him out of the Federal Treasury and close his bank, as it was in March 1933, and face his depositors, if he has the courage.

Every great reform in banking legislation has been accomplished not only without the support of banking leaders but in the face of their opposition. This was noticeably true in the passage of the Federal Reserve Act. The public had to make its appeal to statesmanship for the solution of the problems of that hour. That great enactment came from the brain of statesmen—men in political life, who constitute a part of that class known as "politicians." That splendid enactment, with all that it means to the Nation and to the world, was denounced and dire predictions indulged as to its operation, even as was done in the case of the act establishing a system for the insurance of bank deposits.

The people approve what has been done for the reestablishment of sound banking, for the restoration of agriculture, to save citizens from foreclosures of homes and farms and turning their families into the highways without shelter, for the relief of hunger and distress, and for the promotion of reemployment. The people of the Nation will not be satisfied with, nor accept as permanent, wide-spread hunger and nakedness in the midst of bountiful production from our farms and factories. Such a condition constitutes a stigma upon our economic system. It will not be tolerated as the lasting lot of the people of the United States.

Our forefathers crossed an ocean and encountered the dangers and hardships of an unbroken wilderness to establish the greatest civilization mankind has known. They set up the most ideal Republic of the ages. They have led the world in science and invention, in the struggle to overcome disease, and to conquer the hidden forces that have taken an enormous toll of human life. They extended our commerce on every sea and into every land. They lifted our flag to triumph and victory over every foe who challenged its supremacy. I do not believe that their sons are bankrupt in the courage and qualities that characterized these men of other days. Our people have always shown a capacity for choosing a leadership equal to every problem that has arisen. They called to the Presidency the Father of his Country, who charted the course that has guided us so happily for more than 150 years. At another critical juncture in our history they chose the immortal Lincoln as Chief Executive. Again in 1912 when unusual problems crowded upon us they selected Woodrow Wilson, the greatest leader of his time, who led the Nation into war in defense of the right of small governments to maintain their sovereignty and live their own lives. In 1932 in the midst of a crisis unprecedented in time of peace the people of the Nation, forgetting political alinement and party affiliation with a patriotism unexcelled in any period of the Republic, summoned to their service a student of government, rich in knowledge and ripe in experience, a great humanitarian whose heart is attuned to the pulse beat of humanity, the greatest leader of men that has blessed the earth in half a century, the premier statesman of the civilized world. He holds aloft the light that will lead us into the enjoyment of the full measure of prosperity and happiness that a bountiful Providence has so richly provided for the people of the United States—Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

EMERGENCY RELIEF WORKS APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a brief telegram from the Governor of Nebraska and my answer thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, all through the consideration of this gigantic appropriation I have felt that it is a mistake to appropriate so large a lump sum without at least definitely setting aside specific amounts for particular purposes. Supporting my position in this regard, I desire, under the leave granted me, to insert here as an extension of my remarks copy of telegram that I received this afternoon from the Governor of Nebraska, and copy of my telegraphic reply to him.

The telegrams are as follows:

LINCOLN, NEBR., January 24, 1935.

Hon. KARL STEFAN,
Member of Congress:

Because State highway departments know definitely what projects can be accomplished in the immediate future and have the organizations necessary to facilitate their construction, I urge that a definite amount of money be set aside for highway projects as a part of the proposed 4 billion dollar public-works program.

R. L. COCHRAN,
Governor of the State of Nebraska.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 24, 1935.

Hon. R. L. COCHRAN,
Governor, Lincoln, Nebr.:

Your telegram just received urges definite amount of money be set aside for highway projects in emergency relief-works appropriation. Bill as reported to House specifies improvement of existing road systems as one objective of appropriation, but sets aside no definite amount for that purpose. Bill now before House simply provides lump-sum appropriation and itemized program is totally absent. Parliamentary rule under which bill is being considered in House, coupled with attitude of majority toward any amendments which may be proposed within restricted latitude for amendments, precludes any practical prospect that House will amend bill to set aside any definite amount for any purpose.

KARL STEFAN, M. C.

PROGRESSIVE PLANNING IN PIEDMONT CAROLINA

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter written by me today to the Secretary of the Interior concerning the planning of the Upper Carolina Development Association and a resolution passed yesterday in Columbia by that association.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to report to the Congress that a most promising and forward-looking meeting was held in the hall of the house of representatives in Columbia, S. C., by the Upper Carolina Development Association. There were about 150 representatives present, among them some of the most wide-awake farmers and business men of upper Carolina.

I was also very happy to note the presence of many Members of the House of Representatives and of the Senate. We were fortunate to have with us as representatives of various Federal activities the following persons, who spoke to us most happily and instructively: Mr. R. A. Winston, of the Federal Soil Erosion Service; Mr. H. A. Kircher, regional manager of the Federal Forest Service; Mr. H. M. Sears, State manager of the Federal Forest Service; Dr. T. S. Buie, in charge of the Soil Erosion projects in Spartanburg County along the Tyger River; Mr. L. P. Slattery, State representative of the Public Works Administration; Mr. J. C. Capt, executive officer of the rural rehabilitation division of the F. E. R. A. Inspiring and instructive remarks were made by many members of the association.

At the conclusion of the meeting resolutions were adopted, a copy of which is printed herewith for the information of the Congress and the country. Also a committee was specially charged with the duty of keeping in contact with the United States Senators and Representatives in Congress from South Carolina, and with the President and his various agencies engaged in employing the $4,000,000,000 fund to revive business and to assist in worthwhile and beneficial work in order to give employment to the unemployed. That committee consists of the Honorable D. A. G. Ouzts, of Greenwood, S. C.; the Honorable W. D. Douglas, of Winnsboro, S. C.; Hon. Lewis H. Gault, of Union, S. C.; Mr. I. E. Davis, of Greenwood, S. C.; and Mr. J. B. Douthit, of Pendleton, S. C.

Doubtless this committee will soon be in Washington and will keep in constant touch with the Members of Congress from the State of South Carolina, and especially those from the Piedmont section, in the hope of convincing the Federal administrations that upper Carolina is "ready to go" with its plans for development and improvement. It is most singular that the Upper Carolina Development Association was organized at Spartanburg, S. C., on November 10, 1934, and that the report of the National Resources Board was made public on December 17, 1934, and that there is a remarkable similarity and identity between the plans outlined by these two bodies. Of course, the Carolina plans are regional and local, but they harmonize happily with the suggestions of the National Resources Board. Naturally we are very proud of this coincidence, and we believe that it demonstrates that we are forward-looking in our vision and our ability to make practical application of generalized views.

Recently the House of Representatives of the State of South Carolina Legislature passed resolutions calling upon the Congress to enact legislation providing unemployment insurance, but the very best preliminary step to that result is to give actual employment in constructing useful and socially valuable projects, such as we propose in soil-erosion control, water-power development, rural electrification, farm diversification, farm-marketing centers, and practical and common-sense instruction for all the people of all ages, described by our association as "applied education." All of these are appended as part of these remarks.

Upon my arrival in Washington this morning I wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Interior, the Honorable Harold L. Ickes, reporting upon our splendid meeting and upon our progressive plans and am printing that letter as a part of my remarks.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., January 24, 1935.

Hon. HAROLD L. ICKES,
Secretary of the Interior,
